

Über dieses Buch

Dies ist ein digitales Exemplar eines Buches, das seit Generationen in den Regalen der Bibliotheken aufbewahrt wurde, bevor es von Google im Rahmen eines Projekts, mit dem die Bücher dieser Welt online verfügbar gemacht werden sollen, sorgfältig gescannt wurde.

Das Buch hat das Urheberrecht überdauert und kann nun öffentlich zugänglich gemacht werden. Ein öffentlich zugängliches Buch ist ein Buch, das niemals Urheberrechten unterlag oder bei dem die Schutzfrist des Urheberrechts abgelaufen ist. Ob ein Buch öffentlich zugänglich ist, kann von Land zu Land unterschiedlich sein. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher sind unser Tor zur Vergangenheit und stellen ein geschichtliches, kulturelles und wissenschaftliches Vermögen dar, das häufig nur schwierig zu entdecken ist.

Gebrauchsspuren, Anmerkungen und andere Randbemerkungen, die im Originalband enthalten sind, finden sich auch in dieser Datei – eine Erinnerung an die lange Reise, die das Buch vom Verleger zu einer Bibliothek und weiter zu Ihnen hinter sich gebracht hat.

Nutzungsrichtlinien

Google ist stolz, mit Bibliotheken in partnerschaftlicher Zusammenarbeit öffentlich zugängliches Material zu digitalisieren und einer breiten Masse zugänglich zu machen. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher gehören der Öffentlichkeit, und wir sind nur ihre Hüter. Nichtsdestotrotz ist diese Arbeit kostspielig. Um diese Ressource weiterhin zur Verfügung stellen zu können, haben wir Schritte unternommen, um den Missbrauch durch kommerzielle Parteien zu verhindern. Dazu gehören technische Einschränkungen für automatisierte Abfragen.

Wir bitten Sie um Einhaltung folgender Richtlinien:

- + Nutzung der Dateien zu nichtkommerziellen Zwecken Wir haben Google Buchsuche für Endanwender konzipiert und möchten, dass Sie diese Dateien nur für persönliche, nichtkommerzielle Zwecke verwenden.
- + Keine automatisierten Abfragen Senden Sie keine automatisierten Abfragen irgendwelcher Art an das Google-System. Wenn Sie Recherchen über maschinelle Übersetzung, optische Zeichenerkennung oder andere Bereiche durchführen, in denen der Zugang zu Text in großen Mengen nützlich ist, wenden Sie sich bitte an uns. Wir fördern die Nutzung des öffentlich zugänglichen Materials für diese Zwecke und können Ihnen unter Umständen helfen.
- + Beibehaltung von Google-Markenelementen Das "Wasserzeichen" von Google, das Sie in jeder Datei finden, ist wichtig zur Information über dieses Projekt und hilft den Anwendern weiteres Material über Google Buchsuche zu finden. Bitte entfernen Sie das Wasserzeichen nicht.
- + Bewegen Sie sich innerhalb der Legalität Unabhängig von Ihrem Verwendungszweck müssen Sie sich Ihrer Verantwortung bewusst sein, sicherzustellen, dass Ihre Nutzung legal ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass ein Buch, das nach unserem Dafürhalten für Nutzer in den USA öffentlich zugänglich ist, auch für Nutzer in anderen Ländern öffentlich zugänglich ist. Ob ein Buch noch dem Urheberrecht unterliegt, ist von Land zu Land verschieden. Wir können keine Beratung leisten, ob eine bestimmte Nutzung eines bestimmten Buches gesetzlich zulässig ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass das Erscheinen eines Buchs in Google Buchsuche bedeutet, dass es in jeder Form und überall auf der Welt verwendet werden kann. Eine Urheberrechtsverletzung kann schwerwiegende Folgen haben.

Über Google Buchsuche

Das Ziel von Google besteht darin, die weltweiten Informationen zu organisieren und allgemein nutzbar und zugänglich zu machen. Google Buchsuche hilft Lesern dabei, die Bücher dieser Welt zu entdecken, und unterstützt Autoren und Verleger dabei, neue Zielgruppen zu erreichen. Den gesamten Buchtext können Sie im Internet unter <http://books.google.com> durchsuchen.

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

TO THE BINDER.

The Extra Supplements in this Volume are to be placed as insets in their respective Numbers, with the exception of that for December 13 ("Little Goody Two Shoes," Coloured Engraving), which is to be the Frontispiece.

The Two-page Engravings should be folded in the ordinary manner and mounted on guards or pasted in at a little distance from the fold of the middle, so that they may be neither stitched through nor gathered in at the back when the volume is bound.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1873.

A change of regime for Ireland is a proposal which the British public is not quite prepared to entertain. It savours somewhat of impatience. It may come to be needed, but this is not the most fitting time for it. The wisest suggestions must be set aside as unwise when they are inopportune. It chances sometimes that, after a constitutional disease has been arrested by the vigorous treatment of one medical man, the sequelæ of that disease, usually extremely troublesome, attract the notice and elicit the recommendations of another medical man not, perhaps, professionally called in, but on terms of considerable intimacy with the patient's family. There may be sound sense in these recommendations, but they may, nevertheless, be premature. Earl Russell, at an advanced age, of a very active and useful public life, has laid himself open, in our judgment, to the charge of having somewhat hastily interposed for the purpose of securing for Ireland the kind of government which he believes her present condition demands. Of course, he is courageous and self-confident, and we may say also, of course there is much in his diagnosis and his prescription which claims for them serious consideration. The main objections to what he has volunteered to suggest lies in its untimeliness. Though an old man, he is, in some respects, apt to be a little in advance of the necessities of the occasion. On Monday night, in the House of Lords, he moved the second reading of a bill of his own for the better government of Ireland. Having previously described, on the first reading, the principal scope and features of his measure, he not unnaturally abstained from saying a single word in support of it, reserving for himself the right of answering objections at the close of the debate. The question, however, was put by the Lord Chancellor, and no Peer rose to speak. He declared the "not contents" to have it, and the bill was rejected. The noble Earl, owing probably to the infirmity of deafness, was thus taken by surprise, and, in indulgence to so venerable and venerated a statesman of the Empire, he was permitted to make that statement which, under ordinary circumstances, he would have made in support of the second reading. There was a slight debate, and the question was put a second time from the Woolsack; but, as may be supposed, it was negatived without a division.

Whatever may be said of the provisions of Earl Russell's measure, it can hardly be contended that the state of Ireland at the present time precluded him from calling attention to the subject. When in one part of that country riotous disturbance has taken place, of such extent and severity as to endanger hundreds of lives and to entail actual injury upon large numbers of people; when in other parts of the same country agrarian outrages, though fewer than they were, cannot be punished because juries, owing to intimidation, refuse to convict culprits upon overwhelming evidence; and when a large portion of the population testify by the mode in which they exercise the electoral franchise that they view with general distrust all Imperial legislation on their behalf, no one can reasonably deny that there is something unsatisfactory in the existing state of things. It does not follow, however, that, much as this condition of facts and of feeling in Ireland is to be deplored, immediate and specific legislation is the true remedy for it. Possibly, not too little, but too much, attention has been given by the present Parliament to the variable phases of popular feeling in the sister isle. There is a possibility of developing a morbid consciousness by too great and prolonged a treatment of unpleasant symptoms. Earl Russell's proposals erred chiefly in this respect. Ireland does not really need further legislative treatment, but a strict regimen and rest. We do not mean, of course, that she should be dealt with in severity. We mean only that what has been done for her—and great things have been done for her—should now, and for some time, be allowed to operate, and should not be subjected to changes of treatment supposed to be adapted to the passing moods and temper of her people.

It is quite clear that the material condition of Ireland is rapidly improving. She is deriving unquestionable benefit from those heroic remedies which Parliament has applied to her case. The means of regular subsistence for her population are more widely diffused than formerly, and are more easily available. Tenants are tolerably secure in their holdings, and, relying upon the protection of law, are more enterprising in their industry. The comforts realised by a large portion of the working population are on a higher scale than they have ever been before. It may be that there still remain anomalies to be rectified, and injustices to be redressed. But, on the whole, law has placed Ireland in a position fully as advantageous as that which is enjoyed by the people of England. Under these circumstances, the true policy is obviously to let things take their course, always premising that the administration of the law, as it stands, shall be firm and impartial. We do not think much of the cry for Home Rule. It will, perhaps, be found inconvenient at the next general election. But it is essentially hollow. It is grounded upon no want which the people of Ireland thoroughly feel. At any rate, the Imperial Parliament has fairly attempted to remove everything in the shape of real grievance. There may be some details of reform yet wanting, and these may be brought forward and considered as opportunity may serve. But if Government does its duty with ordinary moderation, tact, and wisdom, we see no reason for despairing of the ultimate condition of Ireland; and we confidently hope that, not many years hence, her people may appreciate the position in which she has been placed, and may, in temper and feeling, as well as in law, become an undivided part of the United Kingdom.

The half-yearly meeting of the British Orphan Asylum, at Slough, which is under the patronage of her Majesty the Queen, was held, on Thursday week, at the institution, under the presidency of the Marquis of Hertford. There was a large gathering of the friends of the institution. The Rev. James Hill, D.D., late Head Master of the Royal Naval School, Greenwich, honorary examiner to the asylum, announced the result of the examination, which was highly satisfactory. The chairman then distributed the prizes and certificates.

The vestry of Hackney has passed the following resolution:—"That, in order to commemorate the recent visit of her most gracious Majesty the Queen to the East-End, it is desirable that the houses now called 'Agnes-terrace' should be called Victoria-gate; and at the entrance to Victoria Park, where her Majesty graciously received an address, there should be fixed a handsome gate, with tablet recording the Royal visit; that the resolution be forwarded to the Metropolitan Board of Works, with the request that the suggested alteration in the name of the street may be ordered; also that the Chief Commissioner of Woods be respectfully requested to consider the suggestion as to the erection of a gate and memorial."

THE COURT.

The Queen gave audience on Thursday week at Windsor Castle to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Earl Granville, the Marquis of Ripon, and Viscount Sydney. Comte d'Harcourt, French Ambassador, was introduced to her Majesty and presented new credentials. Count Munster also presented his credentials as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary for the German empire. The Brazilian Minister and the Minister for Costa Rica afterwards presented their credentials; and the Greek Minister and Spanish Minister presented their letters of recall. They were severally introduced by Earl Granville. The Queen conferred the honour of knighthood upon Dr. Alexander Nisbet, R.N., hon. physician to her Majesty; and Captain George Biddlecombe, R.N. Subsequently the Queen held a Council, at which were present the Marquis of Ripon, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Earl Granville, the Earl of Kimberley, and Viscount Sydney. Sir Arthur Helps was Clerk of the Council. Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, drove to the Ham, Old Windsor, to see the drainage works of the castle and water supply to Windsor Great Park. Mr. Easton, the engineer, and Mr. W. Menzies met the Queen and explained the mechanical arrangements. The Hon. Emily Hardinge, Lady in Waiting to Princess Louis of Hesse, arrived at the castle from Darmstadt. The Marquis and Marchioness of Hertford and the Hon. Emily Hardinge dined with her Majesty. The Marquis and Marchioness of Hertford left the castle on the following day. The Hon. Lady Biddulph and the Hon. Emily Hardinge dined with the Queen.

Saturday last was the thirty-sixth anniversary of the coronation of the Queen. The day was observed with the customary honours. Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, went to Chiswick House, and was present at the garden party given by the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Queen travelled by a special train on the South-Western Railway to and from Chiswick, being escorted from and to the railway station by a detachment of the 1st Life Guards. The Duchess of Sutherland and Viscount Sydney met the Queen at Chiswick, and were, with the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, in attendance upon her Majesty. The Queen returned to the castle at half-past seven o'clock. The Hon. Emily Hardinge left and the Bishop of Peterborough arrived at the castle.

On Sunday the Queen, Princess Beatrice, Prince Arthur, Prince Leopold, and Prince Christian attended Divine service in the private chapel of the castle. The Bishop of Peterborough officiated. Prince Arthur left the castle. The Bishop of Peterborough, the Dean of Windsor, and the Hon. Mrs. Wellesley dined with her Majesty.

On Monday the Earl of Zetland arrived at the castle, and delivered up the insignia of the Order of the Garter worn by the late Earl. The Queen conferred the dignity of Knight of the Garter upon the Earl of Leicester, and invested him with the ribbon and badge of the order. Her Majesty afterwards knighted Dr. Joseph Ritchie Lyon Dickson, physician to her Majesty's Legation at the Court of Persia (where he has lived twenty-five years), who is now in attendance upon the Shah. The Judge-Advocate-General had an audience of the Queen. The Bishop of Peterborough left the castle.

On Tuesday the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Grand Duke Cesarevitch and Grand Duchess Cesarevna arrived at the castle; also his Excellency the Russian Ambassador and Countess de Brunnow and Earl Granville. The Queen, accompanied by the Princess of Wales, the Cesarevna, and Princess Beatrice, drove out. The Prince of Wales and the Cesarevitch rode to Cumberland Lodge and visited Viscount and Viscountess Bridport. Her Majesty's stag-hounds were brought from the kennels by the Queen's huntsman, and the hunters belonging to the Prince of Wales and to the establishment of the Royal Hunt were also brought out for the inspection of their Imperial and Royal Highnesses. The Earl of Cork was present. The Queen's dinner party included the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Grand Duke Cesarevitch and Grand Duchess Cesarevna, Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Prince Leopold, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, the Russian Ambassador and Countess de Brunnow; the Duchess Dowager of Athole, Lady in Waiting; the Countess of Macclesfield, Lady in Waiting to the Princess of Wales; Princess Kourakine, Lady in Waiting to the Grand Duchess Cesarevna; Earl Granville; General Zinovieff, General Stürler, in attendance on the Cesarevitch; and Viscount Torrington, Lord in Waiting. The band of the Grenadier Guards played in the quadrangle of the castle during her Majesty's dinner. A numerous party were assembled after dinner. Her Majesty's private band played in the Drawing-room before the Royal family, the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, and the visitors.

On Wednesday the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Cesarevitch and Cesarevna partook of breakfast with Prince and Princess Christian at Frogmore, and afterwards visited the Wolsey and St. George's Chapels. The Prince and Princess of Wales and the Cesarevitch and Cesarevna left at one o'clock for London. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, the Russian Ambassador and Countess de Brunnow, and Earl Granville also left the castle. Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne arrived at the castle to luncheon. The Shah, accompanied by the Persian Princes and the Sadr Azim, arrived at Windsor to take farewell of the Queen. His Majesty was received at the railway station by Prince Leopold, who accompanied the Shah to the castle, escorted by a detachment of the 2nd Life Guards. A guard of honour of the Grenadier Guards was mounted at the railway station, and also in the quadrangle of the castle. The route from the station was lined by the household troops. A battery of the Royal Horse Artillery was stationed in the Long Walk, and fired a Royal salute. The Yeomen of the Guard were on duty in the castle. Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and Princess Beatrice, received the Shah at the Queen's entrance. The Duchess of Sutherland, the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, and the great officers of state were in attendance. The Queen conducted the Shah along the corridor, through the Drawing-room, the North Gallery, and the Tapestry-room to the Waterloo Gallery and Library, returning by St. George's Hall and the corridor to the White Drawing-room, where refreshments were served. Refreshments were also served in the Green Drawing-Room for the suite in attendance; after which her Majesty conducted the Shah to the Queen's entrance, and there took leave of his Majesty. After leaving the castle the Shah, accompanied by Prince Leopold, drove to Frogmore, and visited Prince and Princess Christian, and, after taking leave of the Princess, walked to the mausoleum, where his Majesty took leave of Prince Christian, and proceeded to the gardens and planted a tree, near the aviary, in commemoration of his visit. Prince Leopold afterwards accompanied the Shah to the railway station, upon his return to London.

The Queen has walked and driven out daily.

A state concert will be given at Buckingham Palace on Thursday, the 10th inst.

The Hon. Emily Cathcart and the Hon. Harriett Phipps have succeeded the Hon. Flora Macdonald and the Hon. Mary Pitt as Maids of Honour in Waiting to her Majesty.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales continue at Marlborough House. The Prince and the Grand Duke Cesarevitch went to the Stockbridge Races on Thursday week. In the evening the Prince and Princess and the Cesarevitch and the Cesarevna were present at a dance given by the Marquis and Marchioness of Westminster at Grosvenor House. On the following day their Royal and Imperial Highnesses were present at a match at polo between the household cavalry and light cavalry at Lilliebridge Grounds, Brompton. In the evening the Royal and Imperial party, with Prince Arthur, went to the Strand Theatre. On Saturday last Prince Waldemar, third son of the King of Denmark, arrived at Marlborough House on a visit. The Prince and Princess gave a garden-party at Chiswick in honour of the Shah of Persia. There were present the Shah, with the Persian Princes and a numerous suite. The Queen, Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, the Duke of Edinburgh, Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, Princess Beatrice, Prince Arthur, Prince Leopold, the Grand Duke Cesarevitch and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna, Prince Waldemar, the Duchess of Cambridge, the Duke of Cambridge, the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck, with their respective suites. Invitations were issued to nearly two thousand personages. The bands of the Grenadier Guards and the Rifle Brigade and the Hungarian band were in attendance. The Baroness and Miss de Reuter were presented by the Grand Vizier to the Shah at the garden party. On Sunday the Prince and Princess attended Divine service in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The Bishop of London, the Rev. Albert H. Sitwell, and the Rev. J. Troutbeck officiated. On Monday the Prince and Princess, accompanied by the Cesarevitch and the Cesarevna and Prince Waldemar, were present at the fête given to the Shah at the Crystal Palace. On Tuesday the Prince and Princess, accompanied by the Cesarevitch and the Cesarevna, left Marlborough House on a visit to the Queen at Windsor Castle. On Wednesday the Prince, accompanied by the Cesarevitch, dined with his Royal Highness the Master and the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House. In the evening the Prince and Princess, with the Cesarevitch and the Cesarevna, were present at a ball given by the Duke and Duchess of Wellington at Apsley House. On Thursday their Royal and Imperial Highnesses were entertained at a dinner and an evening party by the Duke of Edinburgh at Clarence House. The Prince and Princess, with their Royal and Imperial visitors, have taken daily rides and drives. Lieutenant-Colonel Ellis has succeeded Major-General Probyn as Equerry in Waiting to the Prince.

The Duke of Edinburgh, with Prince Arthur, went to the Strand Theatre on Tuesday evening. His Royal Highness, as Master of the Trinity House, presided, on Wednesday, at a banquet given by the Master and Elder Brethren at their corporate hall on Tower-hill. On Thursday the Duke gave a dinner and an evening party at Clarence House, St. James's, to meet the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Cesarevitch and the Cesarevna.

Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein distributed the prizes at the Orphan Asylum, Wanstead, on Thursday week; and was afterwards present at a dejeuner given by the committee, at which Prince Christian presided.

Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne), yesterday week, visited the Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, City-road.

Prince Arthur's admission as an honorary member of the Haberdashers' Company was celebrated, on Tuesday, by a banquet in the company's hall. His Royal Highness cordially responded to the toast of his health.

Princess Eugénie of Oldenburg, niece of the Emperor of Russia, with her husband, Prince Alexander, has arrived at Steephill Castle, Ventnor.

Entertainments have been given during the week by the Austrian Ambassador, the French Ambassador, the American Minister, the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, the Duke and Duchess of Wellington, the Duchess of Buccleuch, the Duchess of Northumberland, the Marquis and Marchioness of Hertford, the Marquis and Marchioness of Bristol, the Marquis and Marchioness of Clanricarde, the Earl and Countess of Wilton, the Earl and Countess of Carnarvon, the Earl and Countess of Harewood, Earl and Countess Amherst, the Earl and Countess of Airlie, the Earl and Countess of Crawford and Balcarres, the Earl and Countess of Carysfort, Earl and Countess Cowper, the Earl and Countess of Eldon, Countess Julia of Jersey, Earl Fortescue, Countess Dowager Cowper, the Countess of Lovelace, the Countess Dowager of Newburgh, Countess Metaxa, Countess Frances Waldegrave and the Right Hon. Chichester Fortescue, Countess Manvers, Lord and Lady Hylton, Lady Dashwood, Dowager Lady Henniker, Lord and Lady Wenlock, Sir Robert and Lady Emily Peel, the Premier and Mrs. Gladstone.

THE CHURCH.

Dr. Garnier, who resigned the deanery of Winchester about a year ago, died on Sunday morning, in his ninety-eighth year.

Deputations from various religious bodies waited, on Monday, upon the Shah, and presented addresses to him.

Both Houses of Convocation reassembled at Westminster on Tuesday.

A new organ for the parish church of Honiton was opened on Wednesday week. The service was choral, processional hymns were used, and the Bishop of Oxford was the preacher. The organ, which cost £1000, was played by Dr. Wesley.

South Elkington church, Lincolnshire, was reopened on the 24th ult., after restoration, the cost of which had been chiefly borne by the late Rev. W. Smyth, patron, and the Rev. J. G. Smyth, Rector of the parish.

On Wednesday the Marquis of Westminster laid the foundation-stone of a church which is intended to be an adjunct to St. Paul's, Knightsbridge. The site (given by the Marquis) is in Graham-street, Belgrave-square.

Last Saturday the foundation-stone of St. James's Church, Pleckgate, Blackburn, was laid, with Masonic honours, by Brother Le Gendre Nicholas Starkie, the R.W.P.G.M. of East Lancashire, assisted by the grand officers of the province, in the presence of the local members of the order of Freemasons in full costume, the Orange Lodges of the district, numbering 800 persons, &c. The edifice will cost £3500, and will accommodate 644 persons, one half of the sittings being free and unappropriated. Mr. W. T. Carr, barrister, gave the site, in addition to a subscription of £100. A number of working men have subscribed their names for £5 each, to be paid at 2s. 6d. a week.

The parish church of Eastwick was reopened on the 10th ult., after having been closed for more than a year. The old church, consisting of transepts, nave, and chancel, had long been in a decaying and unsafe condition. Now, thanks to the generosity of the patron, Mr. Hodgson, of Gilston Park, the church has been rebuilt, with the exception of the tower. Mr. A. Blomfield, of London, was the architect employed.

A conference of persons interested in the Bishop of London's Fund has been held in Willis's Rooms. The Bishop of London, who presided, congratulated the friends of the movement on their comparative success—half a million sterling being no small sum to raise. He recounted what had been already done, and indicated the new organisation it was intended to frame. The Primate and Lord Hatherley afterwards spoke in sanguine terms about the success of the fund.

Lord Shaftesbury presided, on Monday evening, at Exeter Hall, over a meeting called to consider the petition recently presented to Convocation in favour of confession in the Church of England. His Lordship, in a very vigorous speech, denounced this proposal as an attack upon the fundamental principles of the national Church, and invited the laity to take up the subject. The meeting passed enthusiastically motions repudiating Romish practices and calling upon the hierarchy of the Church to repress them.

There was a special celebration of the holy communion at St. Paul's, on Wednesday, in connection with the anniversary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts—the Archbishop of Canterbury being the celebrant. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Derry. In the evening the Lord Mayor entertained the Archbishops and Bishops at a banquet at the Mansion House. The Archbishops of Canterbury, York, Armagh, Dublin, and a number of other dignitaries of the Episcopal Bench were present. The health of the Primate and the members of the Episcopate was drunk with great cordiality, and the toasts included the ministers of other denominations, for whom the Rev. N. Hall returned thanks.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The Examiners in the Moderation Mathematical School, Oxford, have issued the following class list:—Class I. T. Bowman, scholar, Wadham; C. H. Hinton, Balliol; F. H. Stevens, scholar, Queen's. Class II. J. W. Baines, scholar, Wadham; A. Cartwright, scholar, Queen's; F. H. Dalby, exhibitioner, Christ Church; A. E. Drinkwater, postmaster, Merton; G. W. Duncan, junior student, Christ Church; J. M. Dyer, exhibitioner, Worcester; W. F. Fagan, scholar, Corpus; W. W. M. Hunt, exhibitioner, Merton; W. P. Johnson, exhibitioner, University; J. S. Lane, Jackson Scholar, Merton; A. J. Miller, scholar, Exeter; E. H. Moscardi, scholar, Worcester; E. Strode, exhibitioner, Queen's; W. D. Tarbet, junior student, Christ Church; C. O. Trew, Bible clerk, All Souls; F. W. Weaver, demy, Magdalen; P. Williams, exhibitioner, Corpus. Class III. T. B. Jones, scholar, Jesus; R. W. S. Pinhey, University; A. R. H. Saunders, University. Mr. James Eastwick, scholar of University, has been elected to a vacant fellowship at Trinity. There were fourteen candidates.

The June examinations for matriculation in the University of London commenced on Tuesday. The total number of candidates this year is about 395.

Lord Arthur Russell, M.P., presided, yesterday week, at the distribution of prizes and certificates to the successful students at University College. Professor Sanderson, the Dean of the Science Faculty, read the report for the session 1872-3, which recorded a gratifying increase in the number of students, more especially in connection with the fine-arts school. As the recipients of prizes came to the table they were loudly cheered, warm plaudits being reserved especially for the successful lady students, and for those who, as natives of foreign countries, must have had peculiar difficulties to contend with. One young gentleman from Japan was very warmly received, and similar honours were accorded to students from Calcutta, Bengal, and other places. The Jews' commemoration scholar was Mr. Henry Forster Morley, of London. The Andrews prizemen (students of two years' standing) were Mr. C. A. Russell, of London, £50; and Mr. F. Stock, of Devonport, £40. The Andrews prizemen of one year's standing were Mr. Henry Forster Morley, £30; Mr. Martin Lewis, of Chester, £25; and Mr. J. V. Jones, of Swansea, £25—the two last mentioned having been equal.

The new statutes issued by the governing body of Rugby School, appointed under the Public Schools Act, 1863, ordain that the Head Master shall in future be "a Protestant of the Church of England," and an M.A. or something higher. The Head Master is to have the appointment of all the assistant masters, but their number and emoluments are to be settled by the governing body.—The list of honours read out on speech day (last week) as gained by Rugbeians in the various branches open to competition, whether academic, civil, or military, during the year ending midsummer, 1873, included one prize essay, two first classes in final classics, one ditto final mathematics, two ditto law, &c., five ditto natural science, and two open fellowships at Oxford; also two first classes in class I. Tripos and one wrangler at Cambridge; twelve open scholarships or exhibitions (one musical); four commissions in the Royal Engineers, the first, twelfth, thirteenth, and sixteenth places; two ditto in the Royal Artillery, ninth place both times; seven passed into the Military Academy, Woolwich; two ditto Indian Engineers; three Indian Civil, the fifth, seventh, and twenty-seventh places; Chinese Civil, third place; together with a large number of second-class and minor distinctions. Another open fellowship, together with a first class, was reported just too late to be included in the list.

Last Saturday Lord Vernon laid the foundation-stone of a chapel for Trent College, which is being erected in memory of the late Mr. Francis Wright, of Osmaston Manor, who was a very large contributor to the college and the first chairman of its board. Lord Vernon afterwards distributed the prizes, among which were a gold medal given by the Duke of Devonshire, and the prizes and certificates gained at the Cambridge local examination, for which Trent is a centre.

The annual meeting of gentlemen educated at Winchester was held at Willis's last week—the Lord Chancellor in the chair.

The annual commemoration at Radley College took place on Monday last. In the unavoidable absence of Sir Robert Phillimore, the school prizes were given away by Mr. J. G. Hubbard, who congratulated the warden and school upon the flourishing state of the college, and upon the honours recently gained at Oxford and Cambridge by former pupils.

Mr. Forster, as the senior member for Bradford, on Wednesday opened the new buildings of the grammar school in that town. The right hon. gentleman, in speaking of the work of the Endowed Schools Commission, expressed his conviction that it had been far more successful than had been generally anticipated.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, July 3.

Paris is at present entirely occupied with the coming Shah, to the exclusion of far graver and more serious subjects. The preparations for his reception are being actively pushed forward, and there is no doubt that they will be carried out with the taste and completeness which distinguish such things in France. The Duc de Broglie has asked for 350,000*fr.* to defray the cost of the reception; and the Municipality of Paris, without voting any fixed sum for the same purpose, have decided to do all they can in the way of display. They have, therefore, appointed a committee, with unlimited powers, and have issued a full and striking programme, amongst the details of which figures the somewhat curious one of the illumination of the ruins of the Tuileries. The Shah will enter Paris by the Arc de Triomphe, and an army of workmen is engaged upon the decorations in this quarter. Masts for the display of flags are rising out of the ground in the Champs Elysees and the Place de la Concorde in all directions, and one is forcibly reminded of the week which preceded the Emperor's fête in days gone by.

M. Ranc is, next to the Shah, the person occupying most of the public attention at the present moment. Where he is no one seems to know, but from his retreat he has sent forth a long and able letter of defence. In this he describes how he acted during the Commune. After trying to accommodate matters at the outset, he submitted to be elected a member for the ninth arrondissement, in the hope of being able to effect more good in that position. He admits having in that capacity signed two decrees, but gives very good reasons for this. As soon as blood was shed, however, by the Communists, in the first sortie, he resigned, and after that took no part in public affairs. The absurd canard of his possessing papers which incriminate M. Thiers he denies in toto. As to his hiding on the entry of the Versailles troops, he did so because friends of his, who had done no more than himself, were arrested; and he did not care about sharing their fate. He cannot, however, wind up without a hit at M. de Cassagnac, whom he declares to be afraid of him. This, of course, the latter has denied, and has issued a challenge in reply. In the meanwhile, despite M. Ranc's protest that to try him would be to attack the principle of universal suffrage, the preliminary preparations for his trial are being actively pushed on. Of course, in the event of his not appearing, he will be proceeded against en contumace.

After the stormy scene in the Assembly on the subject of the civil burials we have been favoured with an interval of comparative quiet. The different committees have been working steadily, and the committee appointed to examine into the circumstances attending the election of M. Thurguy for the Nièvre having presented an unfavourable report, that gentleman's seat has been declared vacant. As usual, however, a week could not elapse without a tempest of some kind; and one took place yesterday, on the occasion of M. Dufaure bringing forward his long-threatened motion for the immediate discussion of the constitutional bills. The prospect of this question being brought before the Assembly has been exciting much interest, and it is reported that great diversity of opinion existed amongst the various groups of deputies as to the course to be pursued. On Tuesday M. Dufaure gave formal notice of his intention to bring the affair before the House in a somewhat modified manner, and merely to urge the appointment of a committee to examine and report upon the bills before the recess. Yesterday the matter came on for discussion, and after a smart debate—in which M. Dufaure, M. Gambetta, and M. Léon Say took part—the motion of M. Laurent, to the effect that the bills should not be referred to a committee till the members had had time to consult their constituents during the recess, was carried by a fair majority.

Pilgrimages to the shrine of the Sacred Heart at Paray-le-Monial, a little town in the south-west, are the order of the day amongst the Legitimists. A large number of the deputies of that party proceeded thither on Sunday, and formally placed themselves under the protection of the Sacred Heart. Those familiar with the history of religious manias may remember that this was the place where Marie Alacoque saw those visions which created such intense excitement during the latter part of the seventeenth century. On the other hand, the people of Lyons seem determined to show how they feel in the matter of the civil burials, immense crowds congregating at every funeral. On Saturday several thousand people, it is said, had assembled to follow the coffin of a child, but were dispersed by the police. Victor Hugo's "Le Roi s'amuse," on which the opera of "Rigoletto" is founded, has been prohibited at the Porte Saint Martin by General L'Amiral, and the Dir. Neveu's Siecle has been temporarily suspended.

Summer has fairly arrived, and the weather is not only fine, but intensely hot.

SPAIN.

Senor Pi y Margall has completed the list of his new Ministry. In announcing the accomplishment of the task to the Cortes he said that the programme of the new Cabinet would be the same as that of its predecessor—viz., the maintenance of order, progress, and the adoption of all necessary political reforms; and he called on all the fractions of the Cortes to assist him to save the Republic and protect it against the artifices with which it was beset. The new Cabinet has laid several Constitutional and financial proposals before the Cortes, and that body has received very favourably a bill for suspending the Constitutional guarantees in the insurrectionary provinces. Resolute measures have been taken for the preservation of public order, and there is now little apprehension of any immediate action on the part of the Irreconcilables of the capital. Tranquillity has also been re-established at Seville.

The draught of the new Constitution provides that the President of the Republic shall be elected for four years, and shall not be eligible for a second term of office. Deputies of the Cortes are not eligible for office as Ministers. Public power is to be divided into judiciary, legislative, and executive. The bill further establishes municipal self-government, and grants to the Federal States legislative, administrative, and mercantile autonomy.

The Carlists have gained a victory over the Government troops under Colonel Castanon, who fell into an ambush, and were routed, and fled in disorder. The loss on both sides appears to have been rather serious. To compensate for this, the Government troops under General Cabrinety have defeated the Carlists, 1500 strong, led by Don Alphonso and Miret. The threatened rising of Carlists in Biscay seems to have actually taken place, 4000 of them having, it is reported, nominated a Government of Carlist notabilities.

ITALY.

All the Ministers resigned last week in consequence of the adverse vote of the House on the subject of the financial measures of the Government. Signor Minghetti has been intrusted with the formation of a new Cabinet.

Queen Isabella of Spain, before leaving Rome last week, presented the Pope with a cross set in diamonds, and subscribed £800 to the Peter's Pence Fund. Her daughter gave £100.

Venetia was visited by an earthquake on Sunday morning. The shock was severely felt at Venice and Verona. At Feletto, near Conegliano, the church fell in, and several persons were killed; and in four villages near Vittoria some persons were killed and many injured. Similar, but less serious, shocks were experienced in various parts of Austria. There were other shocks in Italy on Thursday, and the waters of Santa Croce, a few miles south-east of Belluno, were boiling.

GERMANY.

In Monday's sitting of the Federal Council the Coinage Bill was adopted as amended by the German Parliament. The Federal Council also decided upon the establishment of a central board of health having a consultative character.

The Berlin correspondent of the Times states that the new Court for the enforcement of the ecclesiastical laws has been formed by Royal decree. Of the eleven judges appointed members of the Court, five are Catholics. One of these Catholic judges is Herr von Forckenbach, the Speaker of the Prussian Lower House. The Archbishop of Cologne and his suffragan have been officially called upon to declare why they have deliberately set aside the law by publicly excommunicating two priests for joining the Old Catholics.

In connection with the Central African exploration, it is telegraphed from Berlin that Prince Bismarck will make a grant of £3750 from the Imperial funds to the German Geographical Society.

Another strike has occurred at Berlin, the weavers, to the number of 8000, having desisted from work, with the object of compelling the manufacturers to give them an advance of one third on the wages they are now receiving.

HOLLAND.

It is telegraphed from Calcutta, under Saturday's date, that the Dutch, in return for certain privileges, have offered to the Acheenese, as conditions of peace, to rebuild their mosque and pay the expenses of the war, at the same time undertaking not to interfere with the independence or religion of Acheen. But in the Chamber of Deputies the Colonial Minister has denied all knowledge of such terms of peace. They were, however, ready to accept an honourable peace, but would not discontinue the preparations for war.

In consequence of an adverse vote of the Second Chamber, the Government has withdrawn the bill for the abolition of military substitutes, and the War Minister has resigned.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

The health of the Emperor of Germany being still so unsatisfactory, his visit to Vienna has been indefinitely postponed. In the meanwhile, however, his wife, the Empress Augusta, has arrived in the Austrian capital, and there has been another series of festivities similar to those given during the sojourn of the Prince of Wales and the Emperor of Russia. The Empress, who arrived here on Thursday week, when she was received by the Emperor and the Archdukes attired in Prussian uniforms, has been residing at the palace of Schönbrunn. On Friday she visited the Exhibition for the first time, minutely inspecting the Rotunda and the Austrian and German galleries. On Monday she examined the British exhibits, being escorted through our section of the palace by Mr. Owen, the secretary of the Royal Commission. Several grand state dinners have been given since her Majesty's arrival at the Burg and at Schönbrunn, together with a gala performance of "Mignon" at the Opera. Prince Charles of Roumania arrived at Vienna a few days ago, and has been taking part in the different fêtes which have been given.

It is rumoured that the Emperor Francis Joseph will proceed to St. Petersburg, in December, on a visit to the Czar.

The Times's correspondent reports the death of two English ladies at Vienna from cholera.

Vienna was visited last Sunday with a thunderstorm, accompanied by a deluge of hail and rain, by which great damage was done to property.

M. Deak has made a speech in the Hungarian Diet in favour of the settlement of the relations between Church and State, which has given great satisfaction and rallied his party—that of the Moderate Liberals—who have recently been directly opposed to the Extreme Left on ecclesiastical questions, as well as on the existing constitutional arrangement with Austria.

The agreement between Hungary and Croatia is said to be now complete.

RUSSIA.

A telegram from St. Petersburg announces that Khiva fell into the hands of the Russians on the 10th ult. The day before the capture of the capital the Khan announced to General Kaufmann his intention to surrender the capital and entire khanate to the Emperor of Russia. Immediately after this, and before receiving a reply, the Khan fled, with a party of Yomut Turcomans who had formed the principal garrison of the capital. The gates were then thrown open and the Russians entered. The next day being the anniversary of the birthday of Peter I., the Russians performed Divine service in a public square in memory of the great Czar who had first attempted to conquer Khiva, and also in memory of all Russian soldiers killed in the former and present Khivese campaigns. General Kaufmann, on June 11, the day after the capture, dispatched couriers to Tchemkent, in Russian Turkistan, with orders to telegraph the news to the Emperor Alexander, who is sojourning at Ems, in Prussia.

The Brest-Kiev railway line has been opened for traffic. It completes the network of the West Russia trunk lines, and adds immediately (says the Berlin correspondent of the Times) to the military strength of the empire.

TURKEY.

In honour of the Sultan's accession to the throne, the Khedive, who is on a visit to Constantinople, has given a fête, which is said to have surpassed any that has hitherto taken place on the banks of the Bosphorus.

The Lerant Herald of Monday says that, at an audience given to the Khedive on Saturday, the Sultan, in order to give his Highness a fresh proof of his esteem, requested him in future, in visiting the palace, to enter by the gate reserved for foreign Sovereigns and their representatives, instead of by that used by Ottoman Ministers.

AMERICA.

Mr. Richardson, the Secretary of the Treasury, has ordered the sale of 5,500,000 dols. in gold, and the purchase of bonds to the amount of 500,000 dols. during the month of July.

President Grant has issued a proclamation announcing that articles 18 to 25 of the Treaty of Washington would take effect on July 1.

The Rio Grande Commission estimates at 7,000,000 dols. the total depredations committed by the Indians in their incursions from Mexican territory. The report recommends increased military protection.

The cholera returns show a slight increase of the epidemic in Nashville and Cincinnati. It has appeared also at St. Louis.

The total immigration into New York from Jan. 1 to June 14 was 141,856 persons.

Another great fire is reported from the Far West by which the town of Hamilton, in Nevada, has been destroyed. The damages are estimated at £100,000.

CANADA.

It is telegraphed from Ottawa that the following Cabinet arrangements have been made:—Mr. Alexander Campbell, Minister of the Interior; Mr. O'Connor, Postmaster-General; Mr. Gibbs, Minister of Inland Revenue; and Mr. Hugh McDonald, Minister of Militia.

INDIA.

The envoy from Cabul had an interview with the Viceroy at Simla on Friday, June 27.

A telegram from Calcutta states that the Chinese General at Momein has reported to the King of Burmah that Momein, the capital of the Panthay country, was captured, on May 31, with great slaughter, and the Governor taken prisoner.

AUSTRALIA.

The Victoria Legislative Assembly has ratified the contract with the Peninsular and Oriental Company for carrying the mails via Galle. The Government of New Zealand has joined in the service.

The new electoral bill, establishing single electorates and increasing the number of members in the Legislature, has passed the second reading.

The French Academy has appointed the Duc d'Aumale director and M. Littré chancellor for the present quarter.

A notice in the Gazette states that after the 7th inst. the Extradition of Criminals Act will apply to Denmark.

The Queen has approved the appointment of Mr. William C. F. Robinson, Lieutenant-Governor of Prince Edward Island, to be a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

The Amico del Popolo announces that the Prince of Lampedusa has, from his observatory Dei Colli, rediscovered a comet first seen in 1675, at Greenwich.

The Bordeaux synagogue, one of the finest temples belonging to the Jewish persuasion in France, was destroyed by fire on Friday week. The cause was said to be an explosion of gas.

The death is announced of the Marquis de St. Simon, at Paris, aged seventy-five. He was a descendant of the author of the celebrated "Mémoires," and had inherited all his title.

Her Majesty's Consul-General in Egypt telegraphs that quarantine will probably be established at Alexandria on arrivals from Venice on account of cholera at the latter place, and that passengers for India or Egypt should avoid that route.

A postal convention has recently been concluded between the German Government and the Governor of Heligoland, Colonel Maxse, for the exchange of mails between Hamburg and the small British dependency. The contract is in operation.

In Brazil the Council of State has decided that Papal bulls cannot take effect in that country until they have received the sanction of the Government, and that excommunication carries with it no disqualification in civil matters.

According to a report of the Swiss Federal Statistical Bureau 3852 Swiss citizens emigrated from eighteen cantons during the past year, chiefly to America. The cantons of Saleurs, Vaud, Geneva, and Uri have not sent in any returns.

Prince Charles of Roumania has received a deputation from the Israelite Alliance respecting the treatment of the Jews in the Principality. The Prince, who appears to have manifested great interest in the subject, promised to meet the deputation again on his return journey through Vienna.

It is stated that Prince Adalbert of Prussia bequeathed the whole of his private fortune, including a handsome palace, situated at the Potsdam Gate, in Berlin, to his morganatic wife, Baroness von Barmim, née Ellsler, who has offered to sell the same to Government, as her intention is to reside in Austria.

From Peru we learn that a new Archbishop of Lima has been consecrated, and that, on taking the oath of office, he swore to hold the laws of the country superior to any orders proceeding from Rome. It is stated that this is the first time that a Peruvian prelate has disowned the right of the Pope to interfere in the internal affairs of the Republic.

The Nile has arrived with mails from the West Indies and South America. In the islands the weather was fine and the crops promising. There have been several shocks of earthquake in Valparaiso and other parts of Chili, involving much loss of life and destruction of property. The earthquakes at Salvador have ceased, and the inhabitants have recommenced building the city on its old site.

A very satisfactory despatch has been received respecting Sir Samuel Baker, reporting not only the health of himself and his party, but also the complete success of the mission. The Egyptian territory has been extended southwards "as far as the Equator," an orderly government established, and the slave commerce suppressed. Sir Samuel reports that communication is open as far as Zanzibar.

Among the news by the Cape mail, which arrived on Tuesday, is the statement that the House of Assembly, only two members dissenting, has agreed to discontinue the payment of £400 a year to the Bishop of Cape Town as travelling expenses. A bill to establish a University at the Cape has been read the second time without opposition. A report is brought that a nugget of gold weighing 5 lb. has been found at Leydenberg; but later advices state that the prospects at the new gold-fields are not brilliant.

The Pall Mall Gazette publishes an abstract of the new treaty with the Sultan of Zanzibar, which was signed on June 5. The treaty puts an end at once to the transport of slaves throughout the Sultan's dominions, it abolishes the slave markets, and provides for the protection of all liberated slaves. The British cruisers will have full power to seize any vessels belonging to subjects of the Sultan which may be engaged in the slave trade. It is stated that the German and American Consuls aided Dr. Kirk with all their influence, and that the British Consul was congratulated by many of the principal Arabs on the occasion.

The unusual event of a marriage between an Englishwoman and an Armenian took place at daybreak this morning (says the Lerant Times of May 23) at Bebek. The young lady was Miss Robinson, and the happy bridegroom was Mr. Garabet Agopian, formerly librarian of the British Literary Institute—a post which he held until the breaking up of that establishment. The eminent Armenian Bishop Khoran Nar Bey officiated; and after the marriage ceremony delivered an eloquent address in French, welcoming the bride into the bosom of the Orthodox Armenian Church and expressing his aspirations for closer communion between the Anglican and Eastern Churches.

Mr. Pennett, the Prime Minister of Newfoundland, has arrived in England, where he purposes to stay a few weeks.

JULY 5, 1873

THE VIENNA EXHIBITION.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

VIENNA, Monday, June 30.

It is a busy and exciting time just now at the Vienna Industrial Palace and in the surrounding park. From an early hour in the morning jurors are going their rounds instituting comparisons between different art-manufactures; estimating the merit of one industrial fabric after another; tasting wines and preserved provisions; testing machinery in all its branches; examining ores, grains, and chemical products; classing musical and scientific instruments; ranking all that relates to the arts of peace while arbitrating upon the instruction and equipment of troops, military engineering, and implements of war.

In continuance of one's route through the British section—the description of which was commenced last week—we have first to refer to Messrs. Minton's display, which, as on all similar occasions, forms an exhibition of itself. Here almost every variety of porcelain manufacture is to be met with, from a pair of splendid Paisley vases in bleu de roi, decorated with miniature paintings which have Venus for heroine, to those quieter reproductions of Henri Deux ware, with regard to which the heads of collectors appear to be completely turned. Here are vases, plates, and dishes, of apparently Indian inspiration, on which Eastern serpent-charmers are depicted exercising their craft, and Eastern beauties stand out from subdued backgrounds of tropical foliage. Of plates and vases, with cameo-looking subjects in pâte-sur-pâte, the famed Staffordshire firm makes a most interesting show. The designs are alike delicately modelled and gracefully composed, and ideal nymphs and cupids are grouped together with an endless variety of fancy—invariably on some sombre-toned background.

Among other subjects are nymphs with lyres, engaged in painting, entangled among bulrushes, and being unsuspectingly tripped up by mischievous cupids, who, in their turn, are caged and chained, and smothered beneath bouquets of flowers. One remarkable dish, of a rich-tinted brown hue, has in its centre a nude female figure, of deep ivory tone, standing in the midst of tall aquatic plants, cleverly relieved by a deeply-incised background. Other dishes of the same rich coffee-coloured tint are painted over with tropical birds and flowers in a most masterly manner. Combined with remarkable freedom and breadth, there is a delicacy both of handling and colour; which latter, while sufficiently brilliant, is invariably tenderly harmonious. Among the vases are a pair in rich turquoise blue, ornamented with birds of gorgeous plumage and delicate pink fruit-blossoms springing from graceful stems; and smaller vases in rose du Barry, spread over with tenderly-tinted leaves and pearly-white transparent flowers; while one charming pair of a delicate pale blue is ornamented with flowers of various hues, and purplish green foliage in strong relief. Other vases are decorated with miniature paintings, suggested by the works of Watteau; and one especial pair, with black and gold mouldings, is remarkable for its exquisite composition of birds and flowers in tender yet brilliant colours, slightly raised from the rich brown ground.

Messrs. Minton exhibit several framed plaques, forming a portion of the series of the Seven Ages of Shakespeare, designed by H.S. Marks, in his accustomed quaint and picturesque fashion, and the decided colours of which harmonise admirably with their gilded backgrounds. Among imitative specimens of Henri Deux ware they exhibit an oval shaped timepiece thermometer and barometer, which has found a purchaser in Sir Richard Wallace. Cupids guiding dolphins are grouped at the base, while above are arabesques composed of cupids' heads and cornucopias, a strutting chanticleer being posed at the summit. In this example no attempt has been made to introduce the blue tint which is to be found in, and add so much to the effect of, the pair of candlesticks reproduced after the originals in the South Kensington Museum—yellow, chocolate, and black being the only tints had recourse to.

Great Britain is represented in glass by Green, Pellatt and Wood, and other firms of minor note. The stall of the first named is one of the most conspicuous of the whole British section. From its centre hangs a superb chandelier, most splendidly cut, resplendent with all the prismatic tints, the weight of which is 10 cwt., and the price close upon £1000; while around hang others of somewhat smaller size but of equally fine workmanship. Among these there is one with ruby centres, which is a perfect chef-d'œuvre. Their cut and engraved table glass is also very fine, and I particularly noticed among it some beautiful gold-plated dessert dishes, formerly supplied to the Emperor Napoleon III. Among the curiosities is a tazza for use at the administration of the Holy Eucharist, which is mounted in richly-chased gold, the engraving in relief on the glass being especially beautiful. Messrs. Green also display a very elegant decanter, one of a service of glass manufactured by their predecessors, Messrs. Bacchus and Green, and first used on the occasion of the allied Sovereigns dining at the Guildhall in 1814, after the exile of Napoleon I. to Elba. Messrs. Pellatt and Woods do not make so pretentious a display, but what they show is really very good. The engraving upon their glass, designed, I am told, by the heads of the firm themselves, is remarkably light and airy, and beautifully executed. A word of commendation is due also to Messrs. Daniell, who, by means of engraving, have adapted Japanese patterns to glass ware, and whose general show of household and ornamental glass and china is of fair average merit.

The English exhibitors of cutlery have their places in the nave, while those of edge tools—with the exception of Messrs. Spear and Jackson, who occupy a place of honour in the Rotunda, where they make a very fine display, are consigned to the right-hand transversal gallery. Of the former Messrs. Brookes and Crookes have by far the most important show, and the splendid specimens of cutlery with which their handsome hexagonal case is filled have been much admired. Messrs. Pigall and M'Daniell, of London, the remaining English exhibitors of cutlery, have also creditable displays. Turning into the right-hand transversal gallery, at the entry of which Messrs. Winfield, of Birmingham, have erected an ugly trophy of brass and copper tubes, and bedsteads and metallic furniture, which considerably damages the effect of Minton's splendid majolica, in front of which it stands, one reaches the section of edge tools and steel manufactures. Sheffield is effectively represented here, and the saws, hammers, files, chisels, &c., which will be found in this gallery are unsurpassed in the whole exhibition. Foreign manufacturers come round and gaze, utterly astounded at what our great Yorkshire firms can produce. Among the exhibits of this class that of Taylor Brothers, comprising a large perforated circular saw, 7 ft. 3 in. in diameter; that of Kenyon and Co., who display some admirable edge tools; and that of Robert Smith and Co., whose crucible-cast steel files are exceptionally fine. The pen and needle trade, another of our great staple industries, is also remarkably well represented. Lower down the gallery one finds Perkins and Son's elegant baths and toilet furniture; close upon which follows the section of chemical industry, where inks, plate-powder, dyes, and varnishes are mingled with soap, oils, and candles. The most noteworthy exhibits here are those of Johnson, Matthey, and Co., who display some highly-curious platinum refining-boilers, assay apparatus, syphons, and condensing coils.

Exhibits in connection with the navy and the art of war are dispersed through the rest of the gallery. "Hennys," and "Sniders," and "Chassepots," and specimens of almost every rifle, musket, pistol, or revolver in existence, fill some half a dozen cases, grouped, so to say, round a couple of gigantic anchors and a splendid muzzle-loading cannon. The largest of the former is a Martin's patent self-canting anchor, with a zigzag link-chain cable, made expressly for the Devastation, and the other, somewhat smaller, a patent Stockless anchor, both of them very fine, and the objects of much curiosity on the part of the uninitiated. By their side stands the handsome muzzle-loading steel gun exhibited by Vavasseur. This powerful engine of war weighs over five tons, and the carriage and slide upon which it is mounted more than 50 cwt. It was successfully experimented with by the English Government at Portsmouth in May, 1869, and by the French at Toulon last year, when it was fired over 250 times, principally with battering charges. Messrs. Vavasseur and Co. exhibit also numerous specimens of floating and drifting torpedoes for harbour defence, on the Singer and M'Evoy principles. Facing their large gun is the important display of Thomas Firth and Sons, Sheffield, exhibitors of homogeneous steel forgings and tubes for 6-inch field and siege guns, and patterns of steel rifle barrels as supplied to the British and foreign Governments. This completes our survey of the right-hand transversal gallery.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

A grand reception and ball are to be given at the Mansion House on the evening of Friday next.

Handsome silver tea and coffee services and a magnificent salver have this week been presented to Mr. Thoms, on his retirement from the editorship of Notes and Queries.

The death is announced, at the age of eighty-three, of Mr. Matthew Marshall, well known for nearly thirty years as chief cashier at the Bank of England, from which post he retired on a full pension about nine years back.

Dr. Frankland's monthly report on the water supplied by the companies indicates that the increased storage provided by some of the companies has greatly reduced the amount of sewage and animal contamination.

Dr. Burrows, the president, and the Fellows of the Royal College of Physicians gave a conversazione on Wednesday, at the college in Pall-mall East, which was attended by a numerous and distinguished company.

The Royal Horticultural Society's rose show took place on Wednesday. It was a very fine display, and was attended by a brilliant company. The principal prize was awarded to Messrs. Paul, of Cheshunt.

Yesterday week the Sheriffs, Mr. Alderman White and Mr. Perkins, entertained her Majesty's Judges and a distinguished legal and civic party of nearly 300 guests at a banquet given at the Freemasons' Tavern.

The Metropolitan Board of Works has agreed to grant the School Board another loan of £50,000 for its building fund, raising the amount borrowed from this source and from the Loan Commissioners to £340,000.

A heavy storm of rain broke over London on Sunday afternoon, after a morning of great heat. The storm was unaccompanied by thunder or lightning; but from the midland counties a severe thunderstorm is reported.

The foundation-stone of Christ Church, in perpetuation of Surrey Chapel, was laid on Thursday week by Mr. Morley, M.P. The new building will occupy a commanding position at the junction of Kennington and Westminster roads.

The annual soirée of the Royal Academy was held on Wednesday evening, when a large and brilliant company assembled. The visitors were received by Sir Francis Grant, the president. At eleven o'clock the principal members of the Shah's suite arrived, and remained half an hour.

The annual parish flower show and industrial exhibition of St. Philip's, Clerkenwell, was held at the school-rooms, Amwell-street, Pentonville, on Wednesday and Thursday. The prizes, consisting of numerous useful domestic articles, were distributed by the Duchess of Sutherland.

Last week the total number of paupers in the metropolis was 100,875, of whom 33,420 were in workhouses and 67,455 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the years 1872, 1871, and 1870, these numbers show a decrease of 4124, 23,023, and 28,508 respectively.

A largely-attended meeting of persons employed in the General Post Office was held last Saturday evening, at which it was resolved to petition Parliament for an increase of remuneration, and for the establishment of a clearly-defined system of promotion by seniority.

Nearly 4000 visitors attended the conversazione of the Society of Arts, yesterday week, at the South Kensington Museum. The scene in the North Court was decidedly a brilliant one, many Oriental dresses and ribbons and stars of different orders adding colour and helping the ladies' toilets.

The annual distribution of prizes at the Royal Asylum of St. Anne's Society, at Streatham Hill, was made on Thursday week by the Bishop of Winchester, who took occasion to pay a warm tribute to the value of that and kindred institutions in preparing the young for the parts which they had severally to play upon the great stage of human life.

Mr. W. E. Forster has replied to some of his constituents, who have sent him petitions against the Elementary Education Act Amendment Bill, expressing his regret that they are disappointed with the measure, but asking them to suspend judgment until they have considered the arguments in support of the bill which he will bring forward on the second reading.

The annual meeting of the Working Men's Club and Institute Union will be held on Friday next, at the rooms of the Society of Arts, at four o'clock, when the Marquis of Lorne will preside. On the following day (Saturday), at three o'clock, the annual conference of delegates from the metropolis and the provinces will be held at the rooms of the Society of Arts.

A meeting in aid of the Royal Normal College for the Blind was held, on Monday, at the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. The Marquis of Westminster explained the objects of the institution, and it was resolved to open a subscription.—A very interesting musical entertainment has been given by the pupils of the London Society for Teaching the Blind, Upper Avenue-road, Regent's Park. The society is doing excellent work in every department of its labours, but most of all, perhaps, in that of music, thanks to the aptitude of the poor students and the ability of their instructor, Mr. Edwin Barnes, who for sixteen years has discharged his duties with conspicuous success.

The annual Royal Caledonian fancy-dress ball, under immediate patronage of her Majesty, for the benefit of the Royal Caledonian Asylum and the Royal Scottish Hospital, took place, yesterday week, at Willis's Rooms. The lady patroness comprised a long list of influential names connected with the best families in Scotland.

The anniversary festival of the Licensed Victuallers' Society was held, on Wednesday, at the Crystal Palace, the occasion being taken by Mr. Joseph Carter Wood. There was a large attendance. It was announced that the chairman had given 300 guineas to the funds of the charity, and that the amount of subscriptions during the year amounted to £400, which £1850 came from the family of the chairman.

At a conference of Liberal members and delegates from Nonconformist associations which has been held at the Westminster Palace Hotel resolutions have been adopted concerning the Elementary Education Act Amendment Bill, and calling on Liberals in the House to offer it the most strenuous opposition. The Nonconformists' committee at Sheffield has passed a series of resolutions condemning the amendment.

The City Press states that an excellent plan has been adopted by the Lord Mayor in the establishment of an office in the Mansion House for the conduct of such charitable functions as his Lordship may be from time to time concerned with. By arrangement the work of receiving donations will be greatly simplified, and may be carried on without interference with ordinary matters of business.

On Monday some official particulars were issued respecting the schools in the metropolis. In the division of the city London the number of children requiring elementary schools was 11,529; in Chelsea, 38,802; in Finsbury, 73,373; Greenwich, 40,358; in Hackney, 73,014; in Lambeth, 100,900; in Marylebone, 72,620; in Southwark, 43,539; in the Tower Hamlets, 87,714; and in the division of Westminster, 32,740.

Sir Antonio Brady presided, on Wednesday night, at a meeting, in the Cannon-street Hotel, in support of the movement for distributing cheap and nutritious meals to the working classes. In the early part of the day a practical experiment had been made. The meals comprised 16 oz. of solid food made up of Australian meat, farinaceous substances, and vegetables, and the cost wholesale was 2d., or 2d. and a fraction a meal.

A Scottish fête was held at the Alexandra Park last Saturday. It is described as one of the largest gatherings of persons claiming a birthright north of the Tweed that ever assembled on any single public occasion in or near London. Prizes were awarded to the best-dressed Highlanders, the best pibroch player, the best dancer of "Ghillie Callum," and the best man at the stone and the caber, who, as usual, proved to be Donnie. There was a long list of less exciting competitions.

The City Press states that the parish of St. Edmund the King has given from its charitable funds, with the approval of the Charity Commissioners, £1000 to the London Hospital and £500 to King's College. The Company of Mercers has voted 200 gs. to the funds of St. George's Hospital. Barone Burdett-Countess has given £100 to the Hospital for Women, Soho-square, and has offered to double it if others will make the sum up to £1000. The Duke of Bedford has given £100 to the Working Men's Club and Institute Union, 150, Strand.

The annual distribution of prizes to the students of St. Mary's Hospital Medical Schools took place on Wednesday, at one of the lecture-halls, in presence of a considerable number of ladies and gentlemen. Sir Dominic Corrigan, Bart., M.D. M.P., presided. Dr. Cheadle, Dean of the school, read the annual report, which mentioned that the large increase of twenty-three during the previous year in the number of general students had been maintained during the year now ending, and that the condition of the school, tested by the result of the examinations by the various great examining bodies, was in the highest degree satisfactory.

There were 2105 births and 1129 deaths registered in London last week. The former were 174 and the latter 237 below the average. The fatal cases of diarrhoea, which usually show a rapid increase at this season of the year, have slowly but steadily increased during the past six weeks from 12 to 22; the latter number, however, returned last week was 73 below the average, and 19 of the deaths were those of children under five years of age. There was 1 death from smallpox, 23 from measles, 10 from scarlet fever, 8 from diphtheria, 57 from whooping-cough, and 20 from different forms of fever. Several deaths were caused by street accidents. The mean temperature was 62 deg. and 8 min. above the average.

Mr. Milner Gibson presided over the annual dinner of the Cobden Club, which took place at Greenwich last Saturday evening. The chairman, in proposing the toast of the evening, read a letter which he had received from M. Michel Chevalier in which, alluding to the recovery of free-trade principles in France, he said:—"It is a convincing proof that civilisation like an immense stream, carrying in its current science, power and wealth, must advance more and more in that direction and that any effort to oppose it must be defeated. In the future, if not in the present, free trade will be the password of nations." The health of the strangers was proposed by the First Lord of the Admiralty, and was responded to by Mr. David Wells for the United States, by M. de Laveleye for Belgium, and by Senor Morel for Spain.

The Marquis of Lorne was in the chair, yesterday week, at a meeting of the National Union for Promoting the Education of Women of all Classes, held at Willis's Rooms. The reports noted the presence of a richly-dressed Brahmin lady, who unveiled, and appeared to take great interest in the proceedings. She was accompanied by a Brahmin gentleman in European costume. The first resolution, moved by Sir Stafford Northcote, M.P., recognised the great deficiency which exists in good schools for girls at a moderate cost, and expressed approval of the scheme of the Girls' Public Day School Company. Other speakers were Mr. J. G. Talbot, M.P., Sir J. P. Knollys, Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., the Hon. Lyul Stanley, Mr. G. W. Hastings, Dr. Lyon Playfair, Lord Elmsley, Fitzmaurice, Sir John Pakington, Mr. Llewelyn Davies, Dr. Rigg, and Mr. C. S. Roundell.

The Royal Colonial Institute held its fifth annual meeting at its rooms, 15, Strand, last Saturday afternoon. The Duke of Manchester, as president of the institute, was in the chair. It was announced that 101 new Fellows had joined the institute in the course of the year, comprising six members of the Imperial Parliament and many members of colonial legislatures; that Mr. Alfred Tennyson and Mr. J. A. Froude had been elected hon. Fellows, and that Viscount Monck, Lord Lisgar, Sir Richard Macdonnell, and others had consented to join the council; also that the library was receiving costly accessions of colonial bluebooks and Parliamentary papers, and works of reference on colonial subjects through the liberality of the Governments of the various colonies and of private individuals, and that the institute had now £900 invested in colonial securities, besides other property.

THE QUEEN AND THE SHAH OF PERSIA

AT THE REVIEW IN WINDSOR GREAT PARK.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

The Shah of Persia, having exercised on the House of Commons an emptying influence for many days, brought about an opposite state of things by paying that Assembly a visit in person. On the day when the King of Kings was to come to witness the process of English law-making there was a morning sitting in the Lower House, the subject-matter being the Judicature Bill. Those who entered the Chamber at two o'clock could observe that the benches in the "gallery of honour"—that is, the place reserved for peers, diplomats, and distinguished personages, including Monarchs and Princes on occasions—were covered with crimson cloth, with a satin border of the same hue. The reason for this was special, for the Shah, having heard that the furniture of the House of Commons was green, intimated that he could not go there if he was to stand or sit on anything of that colour, which is sacred to a good Moslem. Accordingly red coverings were placed over the green Morocco, and taken off the moment after the great personage departed, so that after all he did sit on something green, though it was not visible to the eye, and, by consequence, not to his inner consciousness. Towards five o'clock the assemblage in the House, which had been mediocre, began to thicken slightly, and many gentlemen got into the side galleries, which afforded "coigns of vantage" for looking at anyone sitting in the centre of the Peers' Gallery. But the largest gathering of legislators was in the lobby, where, in triple and quadruple line, they awaited the advent of the Shah from the House of Lords. In that chamber things went very quietly; the characteristic gravity, decorum, dulness, and unexcitability of that assembly were kept up, and so its characteristics were duly exhibited to the illustrious stranger, who, by-the-way, as he sat on a gilded chair by the side of the throne of the Queen of England, seemed to examine that and the canopy above it, and to come to the conclusion that it was nothing particular, its pinchbeck material having doubtless been detected by him. As the Shah entered the Commons lobby members rushed in hundreds into the House, and a space was left where the Speaker could stand, attended by the Sergeant-at-Arms, to receive his Majesty. As the House was in Committee, and the Speaker out of the chair, this little ceremonial was enabled to be performed. Having ascended the rather narrow and winding staircase which leads to the Peers' Gallery (they say that he detests going up stairs), the Shah took his seat by the clock on the left side of the gallery, and his suite arranged themselves entirely on that side. No one else was allowed in that place that day.

It happened that the subject matter in hand was whether Committee on the Judicature Bill should be brought to a close for the time; and so there was opportunity for several short speeches. Of course everything went on just as if no distinguished person was present, and, whether by accident or design, members contrived to give the Shah tastes of all their qualities and all their peculiarities as a body. The Prime Minister was able to speak shortly twice; and there were lusty cries of "Divide!" and all that shouting which is inevitable when some want to go on and others want to close the business in hand. Something of the general feeling towards individuals was exhibited, as it were, by impulse. Thus, when Mr. Staveley Hill, who is nearly a bore, and nearly ludicrous in his manner and mode of speech, rose, there burst out sounds which can only be called yells, and the whole assembly moved and quivered as if under the influence of a sudden shock of earthquake. Then, when Mr. R. N. Fowler—who in his movements is outré and grotesque, and in his voice and mode of speaking unconsciously droll—sprang up in that jack-in-a-box manner which is peculiar to him, renewed roars broke out, this time being more than half composed of laughter. All this time the Shah seemed to have been shaken from that equanimity and imperturbability which he generally tries to observe. He looked surprised, turned constantly to Sir Henry Rawlinson, and seemed to demand explanations of what was going on, probably asking whether, by some mistake, he had not been brought to look on a gathering of raving lunatics. Evidently with intention, a division was taken on the question of reporting progress; and the Shah appeared still more puzzled when he saw one set of members going out at one door and coming in at another, and vice versa; while the ceremony of "telling" and giving in the numbers was palpably more distracting still; nor did he seem to comprehend the explanation, doubtless given him by Sir Henry Rawlinson, that that singular, boisterous, physical proceeding was the culminating process of English lawmaking. As to the Grand Vizier—who unconsciously committed a breach of House-of-Commons order (which is that no one shall be in an erect position except a person who is speaking), by standing in a respectful attitude before the Shah—he seemed to be wrapped in amazement, and seemed to be addressing silent prayers to Allah to deliver him from the place of peril amongst demented infidels into which he had been got. The House having gone out of Committee, the Speaker took the chair, and the Shah had the opportunity of seeing the assembly in both these phases; but, as very few people understand what is the distinction between House and Committee, it is not unlikely that his Majesty was in as hopeless a state of noncomprehension of the peculiarity as of anything else that he witnessed. Nevertheless he was evidently amused. He even smiled; and he lingered until the morning sitting was suspended, and the Speaker having left the chair for a while, members rapidly dispersed.

On Wednesday there was a very unusual occurrence, which, it is believed, has had no parallel but once since morning sittings were invented. It happened that the two bills which stood first for hearing went off unexpectedly, and way was made for Mr. Newdegate's Monastic and Conventual Institutions Bill. He started off with his speech, intended to be as long and as portentous as possible; but the Irish Roman Catholic members, who had not expected the measure to come on that day, were desirous of stopping its progress. Accordingly, soon after one o'clock, the House being very thin, a notice was taken that forty members were not present. The Speaker, having "counted," found only thirty-seven legislators in their places. In ordinary circumstances he would at once have adjourned the House; but this was a morning sitting, and the rule is that no adjournment by counting can take place until four o'clock; consequently the Speaker had to resume his seat, where he would have continued to be imprisoned, like the Lady in "Comus," in her enchanted chair, until four o'clock chimed. The right hon. gentleman did not like the prospect before him, and it is understood that he communicated with the "whips" on each side, and asked them to bring in sufficient members to form a quorum, so that business might be resumed. Great difficulty was found in inducing the Irish members to return to the House, but in about twenty minutes the requisite forty were driven in, the spell was dissolved, and Mr. Newdegate resumed his speech. Some people say that, if they had been in the Speaker's situation, they would have preferred an hour and a half of silent contemplation in his chair to listening, or seeming to listen, to Mr. Newdegate's speech. An evident intention to "talk out" the bill failed.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Stanhope did not succeed, yesterday week, in inducing the House to vote for the establishment of an order of merit, to be conferred on men distinguished in science, literature, or art. The Duke of Argyll promised that something should be done towards the prevention of loss of life caused by wild beasts in India. A motion brought forward by the Marquis of Salisbury for copies of the correspondence between the War Office and the Corporation of Oxford relative to the purchase of a site for a military depot, though opposed by the Marquis of Lansdowne, was agreed to.

On Monday the Duke of Cambridge entered into an explanation with the view of exonerating the Horse Guards from all blame for the irregularity contained in the Parliamentary return relating to chest measurements of recruits. He said the blame lay with some commanding officers who had not properly adhered to the regulations. Earl Russell, in moving the second reading of his bill for the better government of Ireland, endeavoured to justify its introduction, and repeated and supplemented his former reasons therefor. He declared that Ireland was at present governed by the Pope and Cardinal Cullen. He also compared the state of Ireland with that of Scotland, and asserted that England had lavished money on Scotland and had done nothing for Ireland. After Lord Kimberley had argued against the bill and several other noble Lords had spoken, the motion was negatived without a division.

It having become known that the Shah had determined on visiting the Houses of Parliament on Tuesday, there was an unusually large attendance of members in the House of Lords. A lively conversation took place on the existing system of recruiting for the Army, but no result was arrived at. The Tithe Commutation Acts Amendment Bill was read the second time, it being understood that the further stages would be postponed until the report of the Committee of the House of Commons on this subject has been presented. The Shrewsbury and Harrow Schools Property Bill was also read the second time. The Royal Bank of Scotland Bill, the Crown Private Estates Bill, and the Thames Embankment (Land) Bill were passed through Committee. The Admission to Benefices and Churchwardenships, &c., Bill and the Local Government Board (Ireland) Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 2) Bill were read the third time and passed.

On Thursday there was very little business of general importance transacted, although their Lordships sat to nearly eight o'clock. The Scotch Conveyancing Bill was read the second time. The Canonries Bill and the Crown Private Estates Bill were each read the third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

On Friday, June 27, the Home Secretary informed Mr. Plimsoll that the returns of the men imprisoned for refusing to go to sea would be issued in a few days; and that the solicitor to the Treasury would prosecute the owners of the Druid for sending that vessel to sea in an unseaworthy state. The House then went into Committee of Supply, and agreed to a vote of £1,105,348 for Post-Office packet service, and £542,220 for Irish education. The former vote did not include the sum payable under the contracts for the conveyance of the mails between the Cape and Zanzibar and Aden. In Committee on the Juries Bill, the Attorney-General, referring to an amendment discussed at the last sitting of the Committee, undertook to bring up a new clause providing that the expense of carrying out the Act should be defrayed by the Treasury out of moneys to be voted by Parliament—an intimation with which Mr. Lopes expressed satisfaction. On clause 52, relating to the number of the jury, the Attorney-General stated that he was still of opinion that the number should be seven; but, finding that the Judges and leading men at the Bar were in favour of twelve, and as the point was not a vital one, he would not press the proposal. With regard to verdicts, he thought the time had gone by for requiring absolute unanimity, and that the decision of a majority was sufficient; but he was ready to abide in that respect also by the wish of the Committee. He contended, however, that all juries ought to be of a composite character, and contain a definite proportion of special and common jurors. He moved, therefore, to amend the clause by providing that every jury should consist of twelve persons, four being special and eight common jurors. After some discussion, the Attorney-General gave way, the amendment was withdrawn, and the clause itself struck out of the bill. On reaching the sixty-fifth clause the Chairman reported progress. The Canada Loan Guarantee Bill and the Court of Queen's Bench (Ireland) Grand Juries Bill were read the third time and passed; and, a resolution providing for the expenses under the Supreme Judicature Bill having been agreed to, the sitting was suspended. On resuming, at nine o'clock, Mr. McEwen proceeded to move a resolution on Church rates in Scotland, when the House was counted out.

Mr. Gladstone explained to Mr. McClure, on Monday, the terms on which the Government would advance money to the Irish railway companies. On the motion for going into Committee on the Supreme Court of Judicature Bill, Mr. Gladstone, forestalling an amendment which stood upon the paper in the name of Mr. Bouverie, announced that the Government were prepared to introduce in the bill clauses providing that the final Court of Appeal to be constituted for England should also be the final Court of Appeal for Scotland and Ireland. The right hon. gentleman was not prepared forthwith to state in detail by what means this result was to be obtained; but he urged the House at once to proceed with the bill in Committee, upon the understanding that the new clauses indicated should be introduced without loss of time. Mr. Bouverie expressed his satisfaction with this proposal; but Mr. Disraeli suggested that the debate should be adjourned until the whole scheme and "the matured opinions of the Government" were before the House. After some further discussion, Mr. Ward Hunt embodied it in a formal amendment, upon which the House divided, and the amendment was rejected by 192 votes against 170. The House then went into Committee, and made some progress. The National Debt Commissioners (Annuities) Bill, the Public Works Loan Commissioners (School and Sanitary Loans) Bill, and the Consolidated Fund, &c. (Permanent Charges Redemption), Bill were read the second time.

There was a morning sitting on Tuesday, at which the Committee on the Supreme Court of Judicature Bill was taken. The consideration of clause 5 was resumed, and the Attorney-General's amendment, striking out the additional Vice-Chancellor, which was discussed by anticipation on the previous evening, was proposed and carried by 141 to 73. A subsequent amendment, moved by the Attorney-General, giving power to the Government to appoint three new Judges in the Equity division, in place of Judges to be appointed to the High Court of Appeal, gave rise to much controversy; but ultimately it was agreed to. On clause 6, the constitution of the Court of Appeal, Mr. Walpole appealed to Government to postpone it until the changes necessary for the extension of the bill to Scotland and Ireland were forthcoming; and Mr. Gladstone, in answer, stated the substance of the proposal to appoint to the Court of Appeal one member of the legal profession, and one ex-officio member, from each country. At this stage the Shah and a numerous suite arrived, and remained in the gallery over the clock during the rest of the sitting, watching the proceedings with much attention and apparent interest. Progress was ordered to be reported before any progress was made with clause 6. The Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c., Bill was read the second time. At the evening sitting the House was "counted out" at twenty minutes past nine o'clock, as Sir H. Selwin Ibbetson was calling attention to the drainage and water supply of Epping.

The Real Estates Settlement Bill and the Landlord and Tenant Bill were withdrawn on Wednesday, and Mr. Newdegate's Monastic and Conventual Institutions Bill was taken on the second reading. Its discussion occupied the greater part of the sitting, and, on a division, it was rejected by 131 to 95.

On Thursday, when the House went into Committee upon the Supreme Court of Judicature Bill, Mr. Disraeli opened the proceedings by a speech of considerable length, in which he criticised unfavourably many of the provisions of this bill, and concluded by saying that the Government had dealt with a subject of great difficulty, but the details were carried out in an imperfect manner, and the Government would do well if they took more time to consider them, especially after the enormous concessions which had been made. Mr. Gladstone replied at equal length in defence of the bill, and in expressing the determination of the Government to persevere with it. The remaining clauses then occupied the attention of the Committee for the rest of the sitting.

The £50 prize at the Glasgow bowling tournament was won by Mr. Wilson, Paisley.

The foundation-stone of a new Wesleyan chapel, in course of erection at Montrose, was laid on Wednesday, by the Earl of Dalhousie, with full Masonic honours.

The next examination of candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, will begin at the London University, on Tuesday, Sept. 16, the medical inspection taking place on the previous day at the Royal Military Academy.

The troops at Aldershot were, on Tuesday, engaged in a sham fight. The defenders, under Major-General Parke, took up a position near Caesar's camp, and the troops under Sir Hope Grant attacked from the lower side of the Long Valley.

At a meeting of the Manchester City Council, on Wednesday, the Mayor stated that Mr. Job Hindley had placed in his hands £480 for the purchase of a life-boat, to be stationed on some part of the Lancashire coast.

The Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the circumstances under which the Zanzibar mail contract was entered into met for the first time on Tuesday, when Mr. Dodson was elected chairman.

New public baths, the gift of Mr. Bass, at a cost of £5000, were formally presented by him, last Saturday, to the Mayor and Corporation of Derby. The baths are situated in the recreation-ground, which was also the gift of Mr. Bass. Mr. Bass also offered to give £5000 towards building a free library, if the town will provide a site.

The site of the statue to be erected to the memory of Dr. Chadwick, of Southport, in commemoration of that gentleman's gift of £22,000 to Bolton for the erection of model dwellings and an orphanage, was decided on Wednesday. The statue is to be placed at the south-east corner of the Bolton Townhall, and the unveiling is to take place on Friday, Aug. 1.

Lord Grey de Wilton, the Conservative candidate, was elected at Bath yesterday week by a majority of 51 votes, the polling being—Lord Grey de Wilton, 2194; Captain Hayter, 2143. Mr. Cox withdrew from the contest on the nomination day.—The contest for Berwickshire, on the same day, resulted in a Liberal victory. At the close of the poll the figures were—Mr. Miller, 623; Lord Dunglass, 609.

A general meeting of the members of the Aeronautical Society of Great Britain was held, on Monday evening, under the presidency of Mr. Glaisher. The society had expended a sum of £1200 in the construction of a balloon the motive power of which was to be brought about by a small steam-engine, now in preparation, of a merely nominal weight, and giving, for its size, an exceedingly high pressure of steam. A model of this was exhibited in operation.

A circular with reference to the autumn manœuvres of this year has been issued from the War Office to the commanding officers of metropolitan corps, in which it is stated that the period in camp will be for eight or fifteen days. The two camps will be formed on or about July 16 and Aug. 16 respectively, and the volunteer contingent of the army to be assembled will consist of three battalions at a time. No corps will be allowed to send more than fifty rank and file.

Lord Londesborough, having disposed of his Yorkshire seat at Grimston Park, near York, the residue of the estate was brought to the hammer last week at York. The sale, which included ninety-five lots, realised over £150,000.—The Daylesford freehold estate, situate about four miles from Chipping Norton, Oxon, has been purchased by Mr. Byass, of the firm of Messrs. Gonzales and Co., for £135,000. The estate was once the property and residence of Warren Hastings.

A large number of ladies and gentlemen assembled in the great hall of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, on Thursday week, to witness the presentation to Sir James and Lady Paget of two testimonial portraits of the hon. Baronet. The presentation was made by Professor Humphreys, of Cambridge. Sir James, in acknowledging the compliment, requested the governors, on the part of Lady Paget, to accept one of the portraits for the hospital, and this was heartily acceded to.

A year ago it was announced that Mr. Thomas Holloway had decided to erect at his own cost, at an outlay of nearly £100,000, a building at Virginia Water for the reception of middle-class lunatics, where, at a moderate cost, the relatives of poor middle-class people could be received and cared for. The building, of great architectural beauty, is in course of erection. It has now transpired that Mr. Holloway has decided to erect two or more hospitals in the vicinity of London—one for the reception of incurables, a class in our midst peculiarly claiming the attention of the philanthropist; another for the reception of convalescents, who want bracing after long suffering before renewing their struggles in the world. The estimated cost of sites and buildings is put at £250,000. Mr. Holloway does not propose to endow the hospitals. He will erect and present the hospitals, but will leave to the philanthropic of this and future ages the duty of maintaining them. Mr. Holloway has recently had an interview with Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone, at which he explained his intentions. Mr. Holloway desires to secure the best advice as to locality, the number of possible recipients, the best form of building, and requisites towards making them at once, architecturally, the most ornamental, and internally the most perfect in the kingdom. With this view letters have been addressed to medical and other authorities inviting an expression of opinion.—Times.

LAW AND POLICE.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

Among the witnesses examined on Friday week were officials who produced the records bearing on the now famous card case at Brighton, which the defendant made such a prominent feature in his evidence on a previous trial. It was stated that in the prosecution of the Broome the name of Tichborne was never mentioned. Mr. Weatherby proved from the Racing Calendar the dates of the Brighton Races from 1849 to 1852, while the Deputy-Clerk of Assize for the Home Circuit and the chief superintendent of police at Brighton deposed as to the trial. Miss Weld came up from the Convent of the Good Shepherd at Bristol to tell what she had observed of Roger Tichborne, which was comparatively little. During two visits to Tichborne, in 1851 and 1852, she had conversed with him occasionally. Her recollection was quite clear against the defendant being at all like him. Captain Nangle, who as a boy had been a playmate of Roger, and had last seen him in 1849, gave a racy description of his personal appearance. "His shoulders," said the Captain, "were like a champagne-bottle." Defendant did not in the least degree resemble him. An Irish witness with a rich brogue—Jeremiah Healey, of Clonmel—had, while billiard-marker at the Tipperary County Club, often seen Roger change his clothes. He swore to having seen a bluish mark on one of his arms. Mr. Scott, who had been infirmarian at Stonyhurst from 1841 to 1858, deposed that he was shown a tattoo mark on Roger's arm, and, as far as he could remember, it consisted of a cross, an anchor, and a heart. Mr. Alfred Burrows and Mr. Whitaker Bush detailed the circumstances under which Roger's will had been drawn. Roger himself had given long written instructions to, and been on one occasion more than two hours in consultation with, Mr. Burrows. It was stated that for a layman he showed more than usual knowledge of the details of the settlement. During the day Dr. Kenealy renewed his application to the Court to recall Mr. Gibbs, the Australian witness, who, he said, was about to leave the country. The Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Mellor agreed that there was no ground for the application.

On Monday Mrs. Whitgrave, a school companion of Lady Radcliffe and a visitor at Upton, deposed to having seen the tattoo mark on Roger. She remembered that it was in the drawing-room, and that three young ladies were present—to the best of her belief, Miss Doughty was one of them. Several officers from Lloyd's testified to the Claimant's having called there with two friends, who searched the records for entries of the Bella. Mr. Stephenson, the superintendent at Lloyd's, produced the entry respecting the loss of the Bella, and showed on the map where the long-boat was picked up. He deposed of the theory that the Osprey, of Glasgow, had picked up the Claimant by stating that it arrived in Table Bay—twenty days' sail further south—on the very day that the wreckage of the Bella was discovered. Witness also produced all other entries as to vessels of the name of Osprey, showing that none of them would tally with the Claimant's account of his rescue. Mr. Vining, of Liverpool, one of the managing owners of the Bella, and Mr. Kiley, a part owner, who had also superintended the building of the vessel, supplied all the information that had reached them respecting her loss. They scouted the idea of her having 12 ft. of water in her hold before it was discovered. Against the Claimant's assertion that he and the survivors cruised about for several days before being picked up, they set their own opinion that no boat had ever been launched at all. Mr. Vining stated that from the time the ship went down, in April, 1854, the proprietors had received no tidings of the vessel, captain, or crew. The insurance had been paid as upon a total loss, and no claim had been made by anyone professing to have been on board. Mr. Cooper, who had been shipping reporter to the Melbourne Argus when the Claimant alleges that he landed in Australia, stated that the Osprey arrived at Geelong, and not at Hobson's Bay, the two places being eighty miles apart.

Tuesday's proceedings began with the evidence of Mr. Cooper, who had been, in 1853 and 1854, reporter to the Melbourne Argus, and whose duty it was to board all vessels upon their arrival in quest of news. He was of opinion that if a vessel such as the Osprey had arrived with a shipwrecked crew on board her he should most certainly have heard of the fact, and he was quite clear that he had heard nothing of the sort. Mr. Gibbs, of Wagga-Wagga, was recalled, and was questioned at some length by both Bench and counsel. Lady Radcliffe was also recalled to speak to the hopeless state of Lady Doughty's health when she made her deposition expressing her belief that the defendant was not Roger Tichborne. During the examination of Alfred Brand, who had been a game-keeper at Tichborne, and who deposed to having seen the tattoo marks on Roger's arm, words of a very warm character passed between the defendant's counsel and the Lord Chief Justice. Much of the day's evidence was merely formal, and related to Roger Tichborne's accounts with his bankers and Army agents. A copy of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, dated March 12, 1853, was then put in, containing a paragraph announcing the death of Sir Edward Doughty and an account of the family. Dr. Kenealy objected that this could not affect the defendant, as it was not proved that he saw it; but the jury observed that it had been proved that the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS was taken at the reading-room at Wagga-Wagga; and the Lord Chief Justice observed that it was admissible, as showing the source whence the defendant may have derived such particulars as he may have stated respecting the family, and a paper like the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, with its interesting illustrations, was peculiarly likely to be read. It was pointed out that the paragraph, as is usual in the obituaries of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, was headed with a woodcut containing the arms of the family. The copy of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of June, 1862, containing the obituary of Sir James Tichborne, was then put in, which, in like manner, was headed by the arms of Tichborne. This was put in and read to show the source from which it was suggested the defendant might have derived the knowledge that his mother was the daughter of Mr. Seymour, and also the fact of the births and deaths of the two daughters, and other particulars he had mentioned. Then the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of March 3, 1866, containing the obituary of Sir Alfred Tichborne, was put in. The defendant did not leave Australia until September, 1866.

Mr. James Bowler, of London, solicitor to the late Lady Tichborne, was the first witness called on Wednesday. He described at length her Ladyship's communications to him respecting her supposed son, and the action he had taken on her behalf. With regard to the first letter from the Claimant, inclosed in one of Gibbs's, he had written to her that "he was afraid the whole business was an impudent attempt at extortion." The end of his inquiries and attempts to dissuade her from committing herself was that her door was closed against him. Miss Hales, the lady whom defendant professed to have paid his addresses to at Canterbury, appeared in the witness-box to deny all knowledge both of him and of Roger Tichborne. Lady Doughty, a cousin of Roger, who had been in frequent communication with him at Upton, London, and elsewhere, affirmed that she had seen the tattoo marks frequently, and had always spoken about them as a matter of notoriety in the family. According to her account, Roger used to be fond of showing them to his relatives. At the close a number of witnesses were examined respecting the Themis, the vessel which defendant at first said had saved him. The Liverpool broker and the Melbourne agent of that vessel deposed to the inquiries the defendant had made about her, and to the description he had given of her, as well as of her arrival at Melbourne. In many points his account tallied accurately with the facts in question; but eventually the Lord Chief Justice discounted this part of the evidence by pointing out that in the original trial the Themis seemed to have been entirely abandoned. The register and the ship's articles were, however, put in. Evidence was given to show that the Themis had no entry in her log of having picked up a shipwrecked crew of nine persons, and that if she had done so information of the fact would certainly have been given to the firm, and none had been given.

Mr. Henry Francis Purcell, a member of the Bar of the Norfolk Circuit, gave evidence of his going to Chili in 1868 for the purpose of examining witnesses before the Commission; and of his going, after the adjournment of the last trial, in 1871, to Australia. He landed at Melbourne, and visited several places in the colony, but could find no trace of any such person as Arthur Orton or Alfred Smith. Robert Jury, a lighterman, who formerly resided at Wapping, and knew the Orton family well, believed that the defendant was Arthur Orton. Dr. Brown attended Arthur Orton, when a boy, for St. Vitus's dance. He was "a large, awkward, unwieldy, coarse, fat boy, and tall for his age. His hair was light, and he was weak in the knees—in-kneed." He at once recognised the defendant as an exaggerated likeness of Arthur Orton. Arthur Peter Shotler, son of the landlord of the Ship and Punchbowl, Wapping, knew Arthur Orton well, and the defendant and he were the same man. He was like his sister, Mrs. Tredgett. He was a chip of the old block; he was every inch an Orton. The Rev. Robert Mount, Catholic priest at Southampton, saw Roger Tichborne in 1853, when he was leaving for South America, and had, he believed, a perfect recollection of him. He would never take the defendant for him. In answer to the Lord Chief Justice, he said that no true Catholic would be married by a Wesleyan minister.

In consequence of the prolongation of the Tichborne trial, Justice Keating will take the North Wales Circuit, Baron Cleasby the Norfolk, and Mr. Fitzjames Stephens the Western.

Mr. Hawkins has been spending one of his off days in the Court of Common Pleas defending the Tyne Shipping Company against a curious claim for goods alleged to have been lost in transit. The prosecutor, Mr. Harnett, formerly a dentist in Pantons-square, and owning, he said, a stock of 350,000 teeth, had, while out of business, stored part of them in Newcastle. Purposing to commence business in Paris, he employed the defendants to convey his effects to London. Two cases were lost on the voyage, and the defendants were now sued for the value of their contents, assessed by the plaintiff at £6303 11s. 6d. The jury declined to take plaintiff's own evidence as to the contents of the missing cases, and a stet processus was entered.

Yesterday week Captain Hunt, ex-honorary secretary of the Tichborne Defence Fund, brought an action in the Court of Common Pleas for libel against the Times newspaper. The action was based on an assertion in that journal that he was not and had never been a Captain in the Royal Artillery, as had been erroneously described. Evidence showed that Captain Hunt had been appointed a Paymaster in the Royal Artillery, with the honorary rank of Captain; but Lord Chief Justice Bovill held that this entitled him to be described in strictness only as a Captain in the Army, and not in the particular branch of the service to which he happened to be attached. Plaintiff was accordingly nonsuited, with leave to move the full Court.

An action was brought in the Queen's Bench yesterday week against Diprose, one of the money-lenders in reference to whom a criminal information is pending at the Old Bailey. Plaintiff had obtained an advance of £10 and given the defendant as security a bill of sale for £57. Then, when no money was due to him, defendant, on some pretext, seized goods worth £200, and had them sold for £50 odd. The jury found for the plaintiff, execution being ordered in four days.

During the sittings at Guildhall, last Saturday, Mr. Justice Quain complained strongly of the ill-ventilated state of the court. His Lordship declared that he could not sit there, with the burning sun pouring down upon his head, and that unless something was done to mitigate the heat he would adjourn the Court. "This is the way," continued the learned Judge, "we are always treated in this court and in the City. We complain from time to time, and we get no redress from the Corporation of the city of London. It is the most abominable hole a Judge and jury were ever put into."

A verdict for £150 was given, in the Court of Exchequer, on Saturday last, against the Metropolitan District Railway Company, as compensation for injuries sustained by Mrs. Bradford. In the course of the hearing of the action it was stated that the time originally allowed for the stoppage of the trains at each station was one minute, and for the performance of the whole journey (including twenty-one stations), sixty-two minutes. It had, however, been lately thought that a minute at each station was too long, and the time was reduced by some seconds, so as to accomplish the distance from terminus to terminus in fifty-five minutes. The number of passengers was 1,000,000 a month.

The London Tramways Company has been condemned to pay £75 damages to one of its passengers, Mr. Plunkett, actor and dramatic author, for causing him to fall upon two bottles of claret which he was carrying home with him. The accident resulted from the car moving forward while he was alighting, and the broken glass did serious damage to his hands.

An action to recover compensation for false imprisonment was tried in the Court of Exchequer on Wednesday, in which the plaintiff was a tradesman carrying on business at Greenwich, and the defendant was a broker of the city of London. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff—damages, £350.

A widow sued, in the Court of Common Pleas on Wednesday, under Lord Campbell's Act, on behalf of herself and her two children, to recover compensation for the loss of her husband, who met his death whilst he was working for a firm of naphtha and creosote manufacturers on Bow-common. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and awarded £200 to the widow and £100 to each child.

The Byrne will case at Dublin has terminated without any decisive result, the jury having been unable to agree. The children, for whose custody a writ of habeas corpus was sought, remain in the charge of their mother, who is a Protestant.

A majority of the Judges of the Court of Session at Edinburgh has decided against the lady medical students, being of opinion that the Statute of the University had exceeded its powers in admitting the ladies to the University medical course. Lord Justice Moncrieff alone favoured the appeal of Miss Jex-Blake and her friends.

Mr. Harkin, the school inspector, who sued the Rev. Mr. O'Keeffe for having ejected him from one of the Callan schools, has been condemned in sixpence costs, but with leave to apply to the full Court to have a verdict entered for himself.

The trustee of Lizardi's estate has applied to the Court of Bankruptcy for directions as to claims which are being made upon him for balances of consignment accounts due by the bankrupt at his stoppage. In the case brought before the Court the proceeds of an extra cargo of coffee consigned from Rio Janeiro had been misappropriated by the bankrupt. An order was made to pay over a balance of £763 3s. 4d. which had been subsequently received.

Dr. Leslie, of Westminster, has made a stand in the Court of Queen's Bench for the right of medical witnesses to their professional fee. Mr. Justice Quain informed him that, having accepted the shilling with his subpoena and come into court, he was bound to give evidence. He was accordingly sworn.

Several convictions have been obtained in the Lambeth Police Court against dealers for selling coffee adulterated with chicory, the vestry clerk prosecuting under the new Adulteration Act. In one case, where the defendant had bought the article mixed, and in ignorance of the law, a fine of 1d. and costs was imposed. In three other cases the penalties ranged from 10s. to £1.

The Oxfordshire magistrates have received a report from the visiting justices on certain complaints made as to the treatment of the prisoners in the Chipping Norton case. It was stated that the whole charges were unfounded.

Noyes, Macdonnell, and the two Bidwells, charged with the Bank of England forgeries, were on Wednesday committed for trial at the Central Criminal Court.

Elizabeth Greenwood, a respectable-looking young woman, has been charged at Guildhall with complicity in the cheque swindle. There were three cases against her of having obtained cheques for £8 and altered them to £80. She was remanded, for the completion of the evidence.

At the Marylebone Police Court Mr. D'Eyncourt has expressed an opinion that the St. Pancras Vestry might find more useful employment than prosecuting Sunday traders. After this protest the usual fines were inflicted.

A medical man, with a professional weakness for inhaling chloroform, has been charged at Marylebone with obtaining his favourite indulgence by false pretences. His practice was to give a fictitious name and address, and to omit paying for the chloroform before he used it.

The police magistrate at Southwark has decided a question which is often at issue between dust contractors and manufacturers—namely, what is "trade refuse"? Mr. Reed, the contractor for Southwark, had declined to remove the ashes from the furnaces at the Atlas Printing Works. He was summoned, and the magistrate imposed a nominal fine of 2s. 6d.

A gang of garotters in Lambeth, led by a youth known as "The Black Prince," has devised a new method of relieving victims of diamond rings. One of them seized the jewelled finger and hammered it with a heavy instrument, which broke the bone; the finger was then twisted round till it came out of the socket. Here the operation was interrupted, and the garotters had to decamp with only a gold watch and chain. Three of them have been remanded at the Lambeth Police Court, where they appear to be no strangers.

One Bingham, who gave himself up some time ago as the murderer of Jane Maria Clousen, at Eltham, was on Tuesday convicted at Exeter of stealing a cashbox and securities, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

An extraordinary circumstance occurred at the Herefordshire Quarter Sessions on Monday. Mary Ann Duggan was tried for stealing, found guilty, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment. It was then discovered that the grand jury had not returned a true bill; and so, though convicted after trial, the accused has, upon this legal technicality, to be discharged.

On May 23 the Cheshire police interrupted a cock-fight at Weaverham, in which a number of Irish were pitted against many English birds. On Monday Mr. Marshall, on whose premises the fight took place, was fined £10 and costs for his share in this transaction; and summonses have been issued against a number of gentlemen of good position who are known to have been present at the fight.

At the annual dinner of the South Midland Institute, which took place at Wolverhampton on Monday night, it was stated that coal in large quantities had been discovered in Central India, at a point about 300 miles east of Bombay and 200 miles south of Nerbudda, which is henceforth to be known as the Wurdah Valley Coal-field. The Indian Government have appointed Mr. Walter Ness as their mining engineer in that district, and he leaves shortly for India to superintend the working of the newly-discovered mines. Specimens of the coal and shale found on the Duke of Sutherland's estates in Sutherlandshire were exhibited at the meeting of the institute, and pronounced to be valuable, and it was announced that the Duke had resolved upon developing the mines on his property.

In consequence of the frequent movements of ships of war on foreign stations, the private letters of the officers and crews have hitherto been forwarded by the Post Office to the particular place on the station at which, according to information furnished by the Admiralty, the ships were most likely to be found—the directions placed upon them by the writers being disregarded. This course, which was adopted with a view of preventing delay, appears not to have given general satisfaction, numerous complaints having been made of letters being subjected to additional postage in consequence of being sent to a place for which the amount prepaid was insufficient, although sufficient for the transmission of the letters according to the written address. It has been determined, therefore, that in future all private letters addressed to ship of war on foreign stations shall be forwarded strictly as addressed.

Sir Joseph Ritchie Lyon Dickson, M.D., who received the honour of knighthood at the hands of her Majesty, at Windsor, on the 30th ult., is the second son of the late Mr. John Dickson, R.N., surgeon to Lord Nelson at the siege of Copenhagen, afterwards appointed by the British Government Surgeon-Major and Chief of the Medical Staff of his Highness the Hereditary Pasha of the Regency of Tripoli at the request of his Highness and the recommendation of Lord Nelson. In 1847 Sir Joseph was appointed Physician to her Majesty's Legation in Persia. During the famine he was called on to attend his Majesty for typhus fever, in the absence of the King's body physician, and was so fortunate as to preserve his Majesty's life, who requested her Majesty's Government to attach Sir Joseph to his staff on the occasion of his visit to Europe. Sir Joseph is a Commander of the Persian Order of the Lion and the Sun, and his elder brother is Physician to her Majesty's Embassy in Constantinople.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

Last Saturday the annual fête of the 2nd Tower Hamlets Engineers was held in the grounds of Granard Lodge, Roehampton, the seat of the honorary Colonel, Mr. A. Angus Croll. General Ricciotti Garibaldi was present, and made a short speech, expressing his admiration of the manly bearing, excellent discipline, and promptly-executed manoeuvres.

On the same evening the annual official inspection of the St. George's, commanded by the Hon. C. H. Lindsay, M.P., was held in the grounds adjoining Lambeth Palace, by Colonel Fremantle. After various movements had been performed, Captains Hummel and Sercombe were called out to drill the regiment; and at the close Colonel Fremantle congratulated Colonel Lindsay on being in command of so fine a regiment, and said he should be able to make a favourable report.

The Marquis of Westminster entertained his regiment, the Queen's (Westminster), last Saturday, at his residence, Cliveden, near Maidenhead. At six p.m. they were assembled in a spacious tent erected under the trees, and sat down, to the number of 500, to an excellent cold dinner. Shortly afterwards the Marchioness of Westminster, the Ladies Elizabeth and Beatrice Grosvenor, and other ladies staying at Cliveden arrived, and were greeted with rounds of applause.

On the same day the 37th Middlesex (Bloomsbury) also underwent an inspection, and the London Scottish Rifles proceeded to Wimbledon for a week's military instruction in camp.

A county rifle-match between twenty picked shots of Dorset and Wilts took place yesterday week. The victory was achieved by the Dorset team, which had a majority of 31.

The annual inspection of the 1st Manchester took place, last Saturday, at the Salford Racecourse. Colonel Lacy, of the 16th brigade depot, Ashton, was the inspecting officer; and the field officers present were Colonel Bridgeford, Lieutenant-Colonel Clapham, Major Higgins, and Captain and Adjutant Hartshorn. After the march past the men were put through the manual and firing exercise by Lieutenant-Colonel Clapham. During the day Captains Pilcher and Pooley and Lieutenants Patteson and Simpson put their companies through the company drill; and, under the command of Major Higgins, the battalion performed the bayonet exercise. Colonel Bridgeford, addressing the men, said Colonel Lacy had expressed his entire satisfaction with the manner in which the battalion had gone through the various movements, particularly the volley-firing.

The Aberdeen Wappinshaw began, on Monday, with the small-bore competitions. The shooting was excellent, and the principal prizes were won by Sergeant Fergusson, Inverness, who this year heads the Scottish eight.

At a meeting of metropolitan volunteer commanding officers—Colonel the Hon. Charles Lindsay, M.P., in the chair—it has been resolved that, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State for War, a review of volunteers should be held, as usual, at Wimbledon on Saturday, July 19.

The following volunteers have been selected to represent Scotland in the coming contest for the International Challenge Trophy. The list includes, as will be seen, the names of a few Queen's prize winners:—Corporal Boyd, 2nd Ayr; Buchanan, 3rd Lanark; Sergeant Cameron, 6th Inverness; Corporal Caldwell, 1st Renfrew; Clark, Queen's (Edinburgh) Rifle Brigade; Clews, 3rd Renfrew; Sergeant Fergusson, 1st Inverness; Colour-Sergeant Gow, Queen's (Edinburgh) Rifle Brigade; Colour-Sergeant Grier, 3rd Renfrew; Lieutenant Low, 1st Forfar; Captain Menzies, Queen's (Edinburgh) Rifle Brigade; Sergeant Michie, London Scottish; Sergeant M'Isaac, Bute; Sergeant M'Kinnon, Queen's (Edinburgh) Rifle Brigade; M'Vittie, 7th Dumfries; Paterson, 1st Midlothian; Sergeant Plenderleith, 1st Peebles; Sergeant Ray, 1st Renfrew; Sergeant Stewart, Queen's (Edinburgh) Rifle Brigade; and Corporal Wallace, of the same brigade. The reserve consists of Blair, 3rd Lanark; Sergeant Caldwell, Renfrew; Hay, 5th Somerset; M'Kerrel, London Scottish; More, 1st Midlothian; Lieutenant Niven, Stirling; Pearson, 1st Inverness; and Colonel A. Wilson, 1st Stirling Administrative Battalion.

The following are the names of the eight gentlemen who will shoot for Scotland in the international match for the Elcho Challenge Shield at the ensuing Wimbledon meeting:—Mr. Fergusson, Mr. M'Vittie, Mr. M'Intyre, Captain Kinnear, Captain Duncan, Lieutenant Ross, who gained their places by competition, and Mr. Edward Ross and Mr. Dunlop, C.B., who were unable to attend the competition, but were selected.

The meeting of the Irish Rifle Association ended last Saturday, at the North Bull ranges, Dollymount, having occupied three days. The first of the all-comers' prizes, at 800 yards, was won by Captain Tufnell; Mr. John M'Kenna, jun., of the Ulster Rifle Association, took second prize; Mr. S. S. Young was third. At 900 yards Mr. J. Rigby took first prize, Mr. J. A. Doyle being second. The shooting for the extra prizes, at 1000 yards, was much interfered with by wind, and Mr. W. Rigby came in first, Mr. Walkington being second. The Lord Lieutenant's cup, with the silver medal of the English National Rifle Association, was won by Captain Walker. The greatest interest naturally attached to the competition for the Duke of Abercorn's cup. Several smaller prizes are given, and the competitors who make the eight highest scores are to form the team to contend at Wimbledon for the Elcho shield. The total number of shots is ninety, and the highest possible score therefore is 360. Out of this Mr. J. Rigby made 339; but, as he has already won the cup, he was disqualified from taking it, and it goes to Mr. R. S. Joyce, who scored 336. Mr. J. K. Milner made 332, Mr. E. Johnson 330, Mr. H. Fulton 327, Mr. J. S. Young 325, Mr. James Wilson 321, and Mr. W. Rigby, 318. These eight will be the champions of Ireland in the contest for the shield at Wimbledon, Captain Walker, who has scored 316, being next on the list to be held in reserve.

The following are the names (in order of merit) of the gentlemen selected in 1871, who, after two years' training in this country, have passed the "Final Examination":—W. R. Barry, North-West Provinces, 2784 marks; K. G. Gupta, Bengal, 2656; H. M. Kisch, Bengal, 2591; A. R. Birks, North-West Provinces, 2257; H. C. Fanshawe, North-West Provinces, 2230; A. Shewan, Bombay, 2072; H. M. Tobin, Bengal, 2041; H. H. Risley, Bengal, 2030; L. K. Laurie, North-West Provinces, 2012; R. S. Benson, Madras, 1992; H. C. A. Conybeare, North-West Provinces, 1985; G. A. Grierson, Bengal, 1982; F. C. Berry, North-West Provinces, 1915; H. B. Bradbury, North-West Provinces, 1862; G. Godfrey, Bengal, 1838; A. W. Mackie, Bengal, 1821; T. R. Wyer, North-West Provinces, 1810; H. T. Ross, Madras, 1789; F. S. Copleston, North-West Provinces, 1762; H. A. Anderson, North-West Provinces, 1761; C. B. Winchester, Bombay, 1760; E. E. Spenser, Madras, 1750; R. Obbard, North-West Provinces, 1731; J. C. Cochrane, North-West Provinces, 1727; E. R. Henry, North-West Provinces, 1709; R. Scott, North-West Provinces, 1694; S. H. Wynne, Madras, 1687; F. Giles, North-West Provinces, 1656; A. C. Bainbridge, North-West Provinces, 1605; S. S. Jones, Bengal, 1601; L. Hare, Bengal, 1551; G. E. Manisty, Bengal, 1535; F. W. Fox, North-West Provinces, 1529; D. B. Allen, Bengal, 1468. Messrs. C. H. Jopp and A. L. P. Larken, selected in 1870, have also passed their final examination. They were prevented by illness from passing last year.

CHAPMAN'S IMPERIAL BLACK SILKS.
The prices vary from 4s. 11d. to 12s. 6d. per yard, the worst guaranteed and a warranty given. Bonnet's Black Silks, lowest prices ever known, 4s. 11d. per yard. Patterns free.

RICH SATIN STRIPE JAPANESE
SILKS.—These goods have been purchased from an American firm who, through pressure, have been compelled to sell below value.
They are in a large variety of colourings, the stripe being a quarter of an inch wide. These goods are a bargain, and, as I anticipate a quick sale, ladies desiring patterns should write immediately. 22 inches wide, 2s. 11d. per yard.—CHAPMAN'S, Notting-hill, W.

IMITATION JAPANESE SILKS, 6s. 9d.
for twelve yards, or 6d. per yard, 18 in. wide. These extraordinary goods have the appearance of Real Japanese Silks and are warranted to wash well.—CHAPMAN'S, Notting-hill, W.

DANISH SILK-FINISH TINTED
ALPACAS, as worn by H.R.H. the Princess of Wales. The sale of this charming material increases every season. The perfection to which the manufacture has been brought renders it a dress unvalued of its kind. No lady who has had one would ever be without it.
To be obtained only of one hundred colourings. 15s. 6d.
10 yards, 28 in. wide. Any length cut at 1s. 11d. per yard.
CHAPMAN'S, Notting-hill, W.—Patterns free.

GRENADINES, ALGERIENNES,
for WEDDINGS, BALLS, DINNERS, and EVENING WEAR.
The Algerienne Grenadine is adapted for either of the above purposes, or for summer dresses. It is composed of Rich Satin Stripes, of various widths, alternated with lace-like open-work lines, and forms the most beautiful texture ever produced for occasions where lightness and elegance are the desiderata. Any length cut, from 1s. to 2s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free.—CHAPMAN'S, Notting-hill, W.

MUSLINS.—REDUCED PRICES.
Frères Koechlin's beautiful Muslins in every new style and colour, also Jaconet Stripes and Checks. Prices 8d. and 11d. per yard. Patterns free.—CHAPMAN'S, Notting-hill, W.

SEDAN CORDS.—Since Black Dresses have become so popular among French ladies that they are considered a necessary article in every wardrobe, many materials have been introduced which, though black, have not the heavy mourning appearance which characterises the majority of black goods; of these Sedan Cord has become the favourite par excellence, it being beautifully light and fine in quality, and, in fact, excelled by no other texture of its class. 28 inches wide, 1s. 6d. and 1s. 11d.
per yard. Patterns free.—CHAPMAN'S, Notting-hill, W.

THE SHAH AT THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

BY THE WAY.

Had we been writing this paragraph in July, 1773, the events of the time being the same as those of the present week, we should probably have had to say something of this sort:—"An affair of honour came off yesterday. One of the parties was a well-known M.P. for a cathedral town in the east of England, the other was a gentleman of the Roman Catholic persuasion who was examined as a witness in the great trial now pending. Our contemporary the Times recently published an able summary of the evidence in that case, and showed that one hundred witnesses had declared the defendant not to be the person he has sworn that he is, while forty had asserted that he was the person he has sworn that he is not. In reference to this statement, the M.P., who for some reason was in the country, not at St. Stephen's, wrote a letter to the Times, in which he suggested that the whole of the testimony of the Catholic witnesses might be disposed of by imputing to them perjury, committed at the instance of the authorities of their Church, who desired to retain in Catholic hands the estates in question in the case. One of these witnesses immediately dispatched a military friend to the M.P., and a duel was at once arranged, the parties meeting half-way between his residence and London. We are glad to say that no unhappy results took place. The senator characteristically missed his aim, and received his adversary's ball on the head, which it happily failed to penetrate. All was settled in an amicable way, the M.P., in the handsomest manner, declaring (as, indeed, he had done in his letter) that there was no reflection upon witnesses who might merely have sworn untruly in compliance with the dictates of religion. The parties came to London in the same post-chaise." But this is 1873, and some persons, at least, are more rational than their ancestors. Whether the defendant's counsel read the letter with feelings of deep gratitude to the writer we shall probably hear one of these days.

His Majesty the Shah having now left us, and the "impression" which it was intended to produce upon him being, we trust, deeply engraven, and past obliteration, we have leisure to consider what has been said upon the subject of his visit by others than islanders. The Germans admit that we have done our work admirably, and believe that the Shah must be convinced that England is a great and terrible nation, whose friendship he should secure at any price. Russian ideas have been expounded, and they have, for obvious reasons, no value at all. The French allow that England has made a grand display of material prosperity and power; but, as they have nothing to gain by impressing the Shah, they will be content to show him something beautiful, which, of course, English taste and English climate forbid anyone to see in this country. But a curious message comes to us from afar, so far indeed as Rangoon. We have just received the Rangoon Gazette of May 23, and it contains a leading article in which the writer makes reference to the last dreadful famine in Persia. He alleges that the Monarch was entirely unmindful of the horrible sufferings of his subjects, but that "in certain towns the governors were ordered that starvation should cease, and accordingly every day men, women, and children who had the audacity to cry for bread were unceremoniously knocked on the head." This was while subscriptions from British subjects were pouring into Persia in aid of the famishing. Of course the inference is that England was about to lavish her hospitality on a potentate who is not deserving of it. We may observe that the statement above made is not supported by any evidence, and, though we have no doubt of the bona fides of the writer, the story does not seem probable. Has not some isolated act of brutality been magnified into extraordinary proportions? We incline to believe that, however powerful State reasons for all that has been done might seem, there would have been a very much more modified and official reception of the Shah had Government believed in such a statement as that from Rangoon; and our Ministers must be very ill-served by their subordinates if information on such a matter has been withheld.

British faith in the pluck and sense of Sir Samuel Baker has at last been thoroughly vindicated. On Monday night Lord Granville and Lord Enfield had the gratification of reading to the Lords and the Commons a telegram from Alexandria announcing that a despatch from Khartoum had been received at the former place on Saturday last. Sir Samuel was at Khartoum in good health, with all the other Europeans, and he had conquests to report. Down to the Equator the country in which he had been campaigning had been annexed to the dominions of the Khedive, the slave-traders' intrigues had been stamped out, the route was quite open to Zanzibar, and also on June 8 a victory had been won by only 105 men over the army of Orooso. If the arrangement of details reminds us a little of the famous anti-climax,

In both the tropics is our language spoke,
And part of Flanders hath received our yoke, no matter; the news is of general success, and when we get the despatches we shall, no doubt, be able to do more justice to the gallantry and discretion of our brave representative.

"They manage some things better in Ireland." If unfortunate authors, composers, and students, who cannot sit with windows closed when the glass is at 80 deg., and who cannot work with windows open when street organ after street organ pours in floods of "bad noise," had but a Mr. O'Donnell, of Belfast, to appeal to! He had a street musician brought before him the other day, a woman, and, though she declared that she sang songs for the support of herself and child, he sent her to gaol for a month. To be sure, her aria d'intrata was of a semi-political character, and was in glorification of "the noble Orangeman, Mr. Johnston," who, the poet asserted, "adores the Bible, Church, and Crown, and loves the Orange and Blue," but we cannot believe that the utter nonsense of the lyric had much to do with the sentence. We prefer to think that Mr. O'Donnell has a laudable hatred for vagabonds who force unsought music upon people, and from many a "quiet street" will be uttered the earnest wish that we had some "beak" who would deal in similar fashion with our London organ nuisances. If they hindered sacred and holy trade they would be stopped in a week; but, as they only hinder mere writers and artists, and torture mere invalids, they are left to work their will, encouraged by menials and mammas.

Readers may recollect that some time ago they had the pleasure of reading many advertisements by a gentleman named Dr. Vellere, who continuously asserted that he was a fine dramatist, but that managers would not give him the opportunity of displaying his genius. We were told this very often, and there was nothing improbable in the statement. There are, doubtless, many good dramatic writers who cannot get before the public. But Dr. Vellere has published one of his dramas; and, though we are not greatly concerned to find excuses for managers, many of whom have a cultivated talent for making mistakes, we think that we can see some extenuation of their conduct in regard to this gentleman. He proposes to set very hard tasks for the actors. Doubtless, they ought to be able to perform those tasks. But facts are facts, and we fear that a manager would have much difficulty in procuring artists who could carry out Dr. Vellere's stage directions. Of these we will give a slight sample. At the end of the third act a heroine, Kate, has a strong situation:—

Kate (raising herself to her full height). No; there are no children for such as I! (Laughs and turns suddenly serious—with awful pathos)

"The children to the Tiber!"

(She stops, and her vacant look is fully expressive of her terrible inability. At this moment the coffin becomes visible, and at its sight CONQUEST gives a terrible shriek, and falls to the ground.)

Jack (pointing to the coffin). "The mother to the tomb!"

Later, Conquest, having recovered himself, again encounters the tremendous Kate. He says, with much novelty, to a young couple, "Bless you, my children." Then—

(overpowered with feelings, he staggers; and, when his eyes meet with the calm posture of KATE, he looks at her terrified, whilst the by-play of his demeanour expresses forcibly how he shrinks from her with awe.)

Thirdly, and with this illustration we close, Conquest has another call on his facial and other powers:—

(The BRIDE, who has not left the side of KATE, embraces her tenderly. CONQUEST, whose by-play has vividly expressed the sentiments which these incidents could but call up in his breast, was at first thunderstruck; in recognising KATE, a beam of happiness of the past seems to illumine his face; but when he sees his daughter, side by side with his son and KATE, he realises at once the horror of his position, and snatches his daughter away.)

Conquest. Away, away from him, from them—and for ever!

(A terrible struggle commences within his breast.)

Now, we think that it will be admitted that Dr. Vellere has, to use a colloquialism, cut out a good deal of work for the actors, and managerial distrust of their abilities may have had something to do with the treatment of which he complained so long and so expensively.

THE SHAH OF PERSIA.

The series of Royal, metropolitan, and other national entertainments which have been given, during the past two or three weeks, in honour of his Majesty Nasr-Ood-Deen, Shah of Persia, while the guest of her Majesty Queen Victoria, fill in the present Number, as in our last publication, all the space devoted to Engravings that illustrate the passing events of the day. We have now to deal with the most elaborate acts and scenes in this grand pageant of British wealth and power, which is certainly more significant as an exhibition of what England herself is, what she possesses, and what she can do, than important as a mere complimentary demonstration to the Shah—no very great personage, after all, either in Europe or in Asia, compared with some other potentates we have seen coming and going in London.

The Naval Review at Spithead on Monday week—the Review of the Guards and other choice troops by the Queen next day in Windsor Park—the visits of the Shah to the Royal Italian Opera, and to the Royal Albert Hall, with the adjoining International Exhibition—his sight of the shipping in the Thames and the West India Docks, on the Wednesday, with the Admiralty luncheon for him at Greenwich Hospital—his journey to the North, where he saw the town and port of Liverpool on the Thursday, and the town and factories of Manchester on the Friday, being the guest of the Duke of Sutherland at Trentham—and his return to London on Saturday, after which he went to the garden party of the Prince and Princess of Wales at the Chiswick villa—these proceedings of last week afford such a variety of subjects for our illustrations that there is no fear of sameness in following the steps of the Shah on English ground.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

It was the first Saturday evening of his stay in London, as we stated last week, that the Shah went to a state performance, by order of the Lord Chamberlain, at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden. His Majesty, with a numerous suite, in ten of the Queen's carriages manned by servants in state liveries, drove from Buckingham Palace, by way of Trafalgar-square, St. Martin's-lane, and Garrick-street, escorted by a detachment of the Life Guards. On arriving at the Floral Hall, which forms the vestibule to the theatre, his Majesty was met by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and by their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Arthur, and the Duke of Cambridge. The following officers of the Royal household were in attendance on his Majesty:—The Lord Steward, the Lord Chamberlain, the Master of the Horse, the Treasurer of the Household, the Controller of the Household, the Vice-Chamberlain, the Clerk Marshal, the Gold Stick, the Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard, the Silver Stick, the Field Officer in Brigade Waiting, the Controller in the Lord Chamberlain's department, two Gentlemen Ushers, and the Exon of the Yeomen of the Guard. The Earl of Morley, Lord Frederic Kerr, Colonel the Hon. Henry Byng, and Major-General the Hon. A. Hardinge also attended his Majesty. The usual guard of Yeomen of the Guard was in attendance at the theatre and upon the stage. At the entrance of the theatre the Shah was received by the Lord Chamberlain, who conducted his Majesty to the Royal box. The Persian national air was played by the band in the Floral Hall, and "God Save the Queen" was sung before the performance began. It consisted of a selection of pieces from different operas.

NAVAL REVIEW AT SPITHEAD.

The Shah, with the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Russian Imperial Prince, or Cesarewitch, and the Cesarevna, sister to our Princess, the Duke of Edinburgh, and the Duke of Cambridge, attended by many persons of their several suites, went down from London to Portsmouth by a special train on the Monday morning, and embarked in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert before eleven o'clock. They were first saluted afloat by the old wooden line-of-battle ships the Victory, the St. Vincent, the Duke of Wellington, the Asia, and the Donegal, moored near the Dockyard Pier. These ships, also the Indian troop-ships Crocodile, Serapis, and Euphrates, were completely dressed with flags. The Victoria and Albert, commanded by Prince Leiningen, with Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy in superior command, bore the Royal standard of Persia, and that of the Prince of Wales together on her mainmast, the Union Jack on her bowsprit, and St. George's flag at her taffrail. She was followed by the Enchantress, with Mr. Goschen and the other Lords of the Admiralty, and by several other steam-boats. The members of the House of Lords were in the Simoom, the House of Commons in the Tamar, and there was the Trinity House yacht Galatea. Two miles off the Southsea shore, at the Spithead anchorage in the Solent between the Isle of Wight and Hampshire coast, lay the assembled fleet of British ironclads, in three long parallel lines, each line from east to west extending nearly two miles. The innermost line, nearest Portsmouth, consisted of twenty-four gun-boats or small vessels of war—namely, the Waterwitch, Swinger, Goshawk, Ariel, Beacon, Zephyr, Skylark, Cracker, Orwell, Bruiser, Foam, Plucky, Bloodhound, Kite, Blazer, Snake, Scourge, Bonetta, Arrow, and Comet; the Seaflower and Martin, sailing brigs. The next or central line comprised the eleven ironclads of the first division, which were the Valiant, 18 guns, Captain Bedingfield; Zealous, 20, Captain Hamilton; Hercules, 14, Captain Dowell, C.B.;

Hector, 18, Captain Cochrane; Audacious, 14, Captain Henderson; Northumberland, 28, Captain Alexander, C.B.; Agincourt, 28, Captain Adcan (flagship of Rear-Admiral Hornby, C.B.); Devastation, turret-ship, 4, Captain Hewett, V.C.; Hecate, 4, Commander Boyd; Gorgon, 4, Commander Hon. A'Court; Prince Albert, 4, Commander Bridges. The third line, which lay nearest to the Isle of Wight shore, contained the twelve ironclads of the second division, including three turret-ships. They were the Penelope, 11 guns, Captain C. Wake; Caledonian, 24, Captain Montgomerie; Black Prince, 28, Captain Lacy; Monarch, 6, Captain Boys; Vanguard, 14, Captain Spain; Achilles, 26, Captain Oldfield; Sultan, 12, Captain Vansittart, C.B.; Glatton, 2, Captain Aynsley; Hydra, 4, Commander Tinklar; Cyclops, 4, Commander Lupman; Royal Sovereign 5, Commander Cleveland. The Royal yacht, with the Royal spectators, passed from east to west between the central and outer line of ironclads, followed by the other yachts and steam-boats, and then passed from west to east between the central line and the line of gun-boats. Three general salutes were fired by the whole fleet—the first time, when the Victoria and Albert approached Spithead; the second time, at twelve o'clock, when she reached the western end of the lines; the third time, at two o'clock, when she left the fleet on her return to Portsmouth Dockyard. Between one and two o'clock the Royal yacht lay to while the Shah and the Prince and Princesses went, in a white barge of state, to inspect the flagship Agincourt, and likewise the Sultan, where the Shah was much astonished with the 18-ton 400-pounder guns on the main-deck. There was a luncheon for the Royal party at the official residence of Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy, and the Shah smoked a pipe on the lawn. He was afterwards taken into the dockyard to see the building of a ship to be called after him instead of the Blonde, as first proposed. The South-Western Railway brought his Majesty and their Royal Highnesses back to London at half-past seven in the evening.

Our Special Artist, in the illustration of the Fleet at Spithead, has shown the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, with the Alberta and the Vigilant conveying the Shah's attendants, passing between the lines of ironclad war-ships. Those on the right hand are the Agincourt flag-ship, which is nearest; the Northumberland, Audacious, Hector, Hercules, Zealous, and Valiant. On the left are the Sultan, Achilles, Vanguard, Monarch, Black Prince, Caledonia, and Penelope. The turret-ships Devastation and Hecate, on the right hand, the Glatton and Hydra on the left, are not shown in the sketch, having been passed by the Royal yacht before the moment at which the sketch was taken; and the other steamers, Enchantress and Galatea, Tamar and Simoom, are not yet come up.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

After dining at Buckingham Palace, upon his return from Portsmouth, the Shah went to the International Exhibition, Kensington, at half past ten. He was met by the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and Prince Arthur, with the Marquises of Lansdowne and Ripon, Earls Granville and Carnarvon, and others, who showed him the Machinery Department and the Picture Galleries. The Shah and their Royal Highnesses, with the Princess of Wales, the Cesarewitch and the Cesarevna, afterwards heard a concert of music in the Royal Albert Hall. Their seats were placed on a dais opposite the great organ, within a decorative border of green leaves and yellow flowers. The grand amphitheatre, filled with company in brilliant attire, many gentlemen wearing uniforms, had a superb effect. The Shah had the Princess of Wales on his right hand, the Cesarevna on his left; the Prince of Wales sat on the left hand of his sister-in-law; the Cesarewitch and the Duke of Edinburgh were to the right of the Princess of Wales. The music was performed by Madame Titiens, Mr. Sims Reeves, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, and other vocalists, with the orchestra, and Dr. Stainer at the organ. Yeomen of the Guard were on duty in the Albert Hall, and there was a guard of honour outside.

QUEEN'S REVIEW IN WINDSOR PARK.

On Tuesday week, in the morning, the Shah had an interview with Mr. Gladstone, Earl Granville, and the Duke of Argyll, on political business. He received deputations from the cities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen, the Anti-Slavery Society, the religious communions of Jews, Armenian Christians, and Parsees; and several persons connected with Indian Government were introduced to his Majesty. At three o'clock in the afternoon, having at the Paddington station met the Prince and Princess of Wales and several other Royal Highnesses, the Shah went to Windsor by a special train, which was slow, so that he did not get to the review-ground till five. It was in the vast lawn between Queen Anne's Ride and the Long Walk, surrounded with noble trees, which were in the full beauty of fresh summer leafage. The troops assembled for review, officers and men, numbered about 7400 of our finest soldiers. Beginning from the right of their line, there was the Royal Horse Artillery, which always claims that position; then the solid and brilliant masses of the household cavalry, the battalions of Guards, the other infantry regiments, the Dragoons, and Hussars, and, on the left flank, the batteries of Royal Artillery. Lord Strathnairn was in command of the whole line, Colonel Newton of the artillery, Sir Thomas MacMahon of the cavalry, and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar of the infantry. The array was about three-quarters of a mile long, and was completely lapped by a deep fringe of spectators stretching away right and left in a wide sweep, which left the troops ample space for their manœuvres. The space at the saluting point, reserved for the Queen and the Shah, was inclosed, and was marked by two lofty flags, the Royal standards of England and Persia. On both sides of this space were erected stands to accommodate the foreign Ministers, the Lords and Commons, and other privileged spectators. The Queen came in an open carriage, with the Princess of Wales and her sister, the Imperial Princess of Russia, attended by officers and ladies of the Court and Royal household, and escorted by Scots Greys. Her Majesty was dressed, as usual, in black, with some white in her bonnet; the two Princesses had white dresses and blue bonnets. The Shah, of course, wore his dark military uniform, with a blue ribbon across his breast, which glittered with diamonds and emeralds; he had on his gold spectacles. He rode a small white Arab, the tail of which was dyed pink, and was tied with a band of gold braid. The Prince of Wales wore his uniform as Colonel of the Rifle Brigade, the Cesarewitch a Russian uniform, the Duke of Edinburgh that of a volunteer artillery corps, and the Duke of Cambridge, Commander-in-Chief, that of a Field Marshal. The troops saluted and presented arms to the Queen, and lowered their colours while the National Anthem was played. The Queen's carriage, accompanied by the Shah riding with the Duke of Cambridge at his side, followed by the other Princes and the Staff, passed slowly along the line. They returned to the saluting point, and the troops marched past, the Royal Horse Artillery first, then the two regiments of Life Guards, the Royal Horse Guards, the 6th Dragoon Guards, the 7th Hussars, the 13th Hussars, the E and H batteries 14th brigade Royal Artillery, three battalions of Grenadier Guards, two of Coldstream Guards, one of Scots Fusilier Guards, the 7th Fusiliers, 16th Regiment, 96th Highlanders, and first battalion Rifle Brigade. The Shah watched the march of these excellent troops with great interest. The Prince of Wales rode past at the head of the Rifle Brigade, as its commander. After this march past the Queen a few manoeuvres of action were performed, representing the defence of Windsor against an enemy supposed to have crossed the Thames between Boveney and Bray. The Shah was much pleased, and gave the Duke of Cambridge a beautiful Persian scimitar, with a gold hilt, in a scabbard of purple velvet. At seven o'clock their Majesties left the park, and the Shah got back to London between nine and ten. He was too late to dine with Lord Granville and the Corps Diplomatique at the Foreign Office, as he had intended, but he went there for half an hour about midnight, when Lord and Lady Granville entertained a distinguished company.

WEST INDIA DOCK AND GREENWICH.

The Shah had arranged to see the Bank of England, as well as the Tower of London, before going down the river to Blackwall and Greenwich, on Wednesday week; but he was too much fatigued by his efforts the previous day. He went, about one o'clock, in an open carriage, from Buckingham Palace to the Tower, but did not stop there to see the armoury and regalia. At the Tower Wharf, kept by a guard of honour of the Coldstreams, he embarked in the river steam-boat Princess Alice, which was accompanied by the Cupid, having on board the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Crown Prince and Princess of Russia, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Teck and Princess Mary, Prince Christian, and the Duke of Cambridge, all in civilian dress. A salute was fired from the Tower guns, and the two steamers moved down the river, followed by other boats, one bearing the official persons of the Admiralty Board. The river was crowded with ships, barges, boats, and vessels of many different kinds. Their decks and rigging, as well as the wharves and roads on each bank, and windows and crane-stages of the warehouses, being thronged with people, it looked like all London upon the water and banks of the Thames, as it looks above Putney on the day of the University boat-race. Opposite the entrance to the West India Dock lay five of the floating steam fire-engines of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, under the orders of Captain Shaw. They were closely lashed together in a line, and upon the deck of each stood the firemen, with the hose-pipes ready for a discharge. The word was given, and they all at once saluted the Shah with several hundred jets of water, thrown horizontally against the sides of the Princess Alice steam-boat, after which they cast up as many perpendicular jets to a great height in the air, with a very fine effect. The steam-boat conveying his Majesty and the Princes entered the West India Dock by the Millwall gates, where the 26th Middlesex Volunteers formed a guard of honour. The West India Dock was full of shipping, packed close to each side, with an open channel between for the steam-boats to pass. All the decks, rigging, and yards of the ships, and the ground and buildings around the dock, swarmed with an immense multitude of sightseers, amongst whom were foreign sailors of every nation. The Shah was more astonished by this scene than by anything else. Having passed out of the dock by the Blackwall gates, his steam-boat went across to Greenwich, where the Shah and the Princes landed at the hospital stairs. They were conducted by Mr. Goschen, First Lord of the Admiralty, to luncheon in the Painted Hall. About five o'clock they came out, when the boys of the Chichester training-ship, in honour of the Shah, manned the yards of the model-ship rigging, on the masts erected in the grounds of the Greenwich Royal Hospital School. The Shah and their Royal Highnesses again embarked in the steam-boats, and were conveyed up the river to Westminster Bridge. In the evening, by command of the Queen, a State ball was given at Buckingham Palace, at which the Persian Sovereign and the British Princes and Princesses were present.

VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.

On Thursday week the Shah went to Liverpool by the London and North-Western Railway from Euston-square. He started at ten o'clock, in the Royal saloon carriage of a special train, with four of his Princes and Ministers; but his Prime Minister, the Sadr Azim, stayed at Buckingham Palace. The Earl of Morley, Lord in Waiting, General Hardinge, Groom in Waiting, Colonel Byng, Equerry, General Sir Henry Rawlinson, and Mr. Ronald Thomson attended his Majesty. Lord Richard Grosvenor, M.P., and other directors of the railway saw him off at the Euston-square station. The train, stopping but once at Lichfield, made the run from London to Liverpool, 192 miles, in less than four hours and a half, reaching the Lime-street station at half-past two. The Shah was there received by the Earl of Sefton, the Mayor of Liverpool (Mr. E. Samuelson), Sir James Ramsden, Lord Sandon, M.P., Mr. Cross, M.P., and General Lysons, commanding the military district. The halls of the hotel and station were full of company, and Lime-street, with the open spaces around St. George's Hall, contained many thousands of people. There was an escort of the 7th Dragoon Guards, and several battalions of volunteer rifles and volunteer artillery kept the streets. The Shah entered St. George's Hall, where an address of welcome was presented by the Mayor, to which his Majesty replied, with a translation of his reply by Sir H. Rawlinson. A procession was then formed, and the Mayor conducted the Shah to the Townhall, which was tastefully decorated with flowers, flags, garlands, and other festive devices. After reposing a quarter of an hour in a private smoking-room, the Shah went into the Council Chamber, and partook of a luncheon provided for him and the company by the Mayor of Liverpool. His Majesty was placed in a chair of state at the head of the table, between the Mayor and Lord Sefton. His health was drunk, which he acknowledged with a bow. At five o'clock he was taken to the Prince's Landing Stage, and embarked in one of the Mersey ferry-boats, decorated with bright carpets and silk curtains, and with beautiful hothouse plants and flowers. The rain had ceased, and the Shah was conveyed down the river to New Brighton, passing the large Atlantic steam-ships moored in the Sloyne, and getting a sight of the masts of shipping in the vast range of docks, both on the Liverpool and Birkenhead sides. His Majesty then returned, landing where he had embarked, and went by the North-Western Railway to Trentham, in Staffordshire, where he arrived at eight o'clock. The Duke and Duchess of Sutherland gave him a nobly hospitable reception. He walked in the gardens, which were illuminated that evening, and saw a game at bowls in the bowling-alley.

CREWE ENGINE FACTORY.

Leaving Trentham at half-past eleven on Friday, the Shah, accompanied by the Duke and by the Earl of Shrewsbury, went to Crewe, and saw the great railway locomotive-engine factory. One thing which attracted his notice was the conversion of pig iron into Bessemer steel. The cupola was tapped, and the fluid metal poured down a sand channel into the converting vessel. This was turned up, and the "blowing" commenced, with the visible result of a fierce and beautiful white flame streaming in a furious gale of wind from its mouth. Having glanced at the engines which force their tremendous draught through the melted metal, his Majesty passed to the cogging shop, where a ten-ton duplex steam-hammer was squeezing flat under its blows a huge red-hot bar of metal. Passing thence to the forge and rolling-mills, the Shah beheld an immense slab, white from the furnace, divided like a deal log, by the cutting action of a rapidly-driven steel saw. The slab of iron was sawn through in half a minute, though it measured 18 in. by 4 in. The saw runs at the rate of 13,000 ft. a minute, and its teeth are kept cold by a stream of water constantly directed against them. The next marvel was the thirty-ton duplex hammer—one of the tools designed by Mr. Ramsbottom, the late mechanical engineer to the company. This hammer displayed its strength on a great steel ingot drawn white from the furnace as the Shah approached. The lump of red-hot metal was attached to a traverser overhead, and was guided easily by one man in between the ponderous hammer blocks. These were set to work, and the shape of the mass altered visibly at each blow of the hammer. Other steam-hammers punching holes in tire-blocks and expanding tires, and a tire-rolling mill, working with beautiful ease and accuracy, were inspected on the way to that he admired the industrial prosperity of Manchester, and hoped to make some improvements in Persia. After this, his Majesty got some luncheon, and then set out for Salford, the adjacent town on the other side of the Irwell, to see the cotton-mills of Messrs. Haworth and Co. The way was by Cross-street, Albert-square, Mount-street, Peter-street, Deansgate, Liverpool-road, Water-street, and Regent-road, to Messrs. Haworth's. Arrived there, he was conducted first to one of the lower rooms, where he saw the cotton in all the stages, from the preparation of the raw material up to the weaving. He was led to the room where the enormous flywheel of the engine revolves; but the longest stay was made in the weaving-room, where 1100 frames were at full work. The Shah seemed more interested here than in any other portion, because it is here that the material is converted into the finished article. He stood a few minutes at one of the frames, and saw its working. He was about to pass out of the room when, on a signal from Mr. R. Haworth, the shuttles were stopped in an instant, and all the women and girls, leaving the frames and coming forward with bright paper flags to the edges of the gangway in which the Shah was standing, burst out into "God save our noble Queen." Waving the little flags over the head of the Shah, they sang the whole of the National Anthem, his Majesty seeming lost in wonder at the scene before him. At the close of the singing he bowed his approval and thanks, which so pleased the women that they clapped hands and gave him a general cheer. It may be observed that there were between 800 and 900 workpeople on the premises, most of them females; indeed, with the exception of two or three men to look after the machinery, all the hands in the weaving-room were women and girls, which the Persians seemed scarcely able to understand. Before quitting the factory the Shah saw two finished pieces of cotton branded with an inscription in Persian, and in the same language he wrote in the visitors' book a record of his visit, of which this is a translation:—"During my visit to Manchester I have gone through these works with pleasure, and I write my name in this book as a souvenir of my visit." The return was by Regent's-road, Egerton-road, Chester-road, Deansgate, Great Bridgewater-street, Oxford-street, Portland-street, Piccadilly, and London-road, to the railway station. The special train left the station at five o'clock on the return to Trentham, the escort of cavalry and the guard of honour of the Fusiliers giving a military salute, and the spectators, who thronged every foot of the platform, giving the Shah a parting cheer. His Majesty reached Trentham on his return from Manchester at six o'clock, having come back early, that there might be some hours of daylight for the enjoyment of the gardens.

The Shah returned to London from the Duke of Sutherland's mansion in Staffordshire on Saturday morning, and went, in the afternoon, to the garden party, given by the Prince and Princess of Wales, at the Duke of Devonshire's villa at Chiswick. The illustrious, noble, and fashionable company at this entertainment was so numerous that a mere list of their names fills nearly three columns of the Times. Her Majesty the Queen was there. On Monday morning there was an inspection for his Majesty of the engines and men of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, under Captain Shaw, in the gardens behind Buckingham Palace. In the afternoon his Majesty went to the Crystal Palace, with nearly all our Princes and Princesses, to see the plate-rolling mill. This last machine interested his Majesty very much, and he stood watching the red-hot slab passing backwards and forwards between the rollers, and growing gradually longer and thinner, till they were rolled into plates of 26 ft. by 2 ft. 6 in. in length and breadth, and a thickness, or rather a thinness, of only five-sixteenths of an inch. The eight-ton vertical steam-hammer stamping a steel plate at one decisive blow into a dome top for a locomotive boiler having been shown, his Majesty proceeded to the locomotive works. He was conducted through a forge and smithy containing 113 smiths' hearths and nineteen steam-hammers. The locomotive-engine shop, in which nineteen new engines are being constructed, was visited, and two nearly complete engines were lifted by the overhead travelling-crane, and carried out of the shop. Other shops were inspected; and Mr. Webb, locomotive superintendent to the London and North-Western Company, explained to the Shah the different processes.

VISIT TO MANCHESTER.

It was two o'clock when the Shah arrived from Crewe at the London-road station, Manchester, which was transformed by hangings or spreadings of coloured cloth, and by profuse floral decorations, into a place, "half fancy-bazaar, half-conservatory," as the Manchester Guardian says. The Mayor of Manchester, the County High Sheriff (Sir James Ramsden), and the Lord Lieutenant received his Majesty as he left the train, amidst the cheers of a large company of spectators. An escort of the 7th Dragoon Guards and the 101st (Bengal Fusiliers), the 19th Lancashire and 3rd Manchester Volunteers, all under the orders of General Lysons, did military honours to the foreign visitor. He entered an open carriage-and-four, which took him, in a procession of carriages, along Piccadilly, down Market-street, through St. Anne's-square and King-street, to the Townhall. An immense crowd of people all the way greeted him with vociferous cheering. At the Townhall, amidst a company of ladies and gentlemen, his Majesty was bidden to take his seat in a gilt chair on a scarlet dais, and to hear the Town Clerk read an address. He replied in a Persian speech, which was translated by Sir H. Rawlinson to mean a special entertainment, consisting of gymnastic performances, the playing of the great fountains, and a display of fireworks. On Tuesday morning the Shah went to see the Tower of London, the Bank of England, and St. Paul's Cathedral; he returned westward, and visited Mr. Gladstone in Carlton House Gardens, the Houses of Parliament, sitting at the time, and Westminster Abbey. On Wednesday the Shah paid his farewell visit to the Queen at Windsor; and he now departs from amongst us, taking France next in his grand tour of Europe. We shall give some illustrations of this week's proceedings.

The Earl of Carysfoot has substantiated his claim to vote for representative peers for Ireland.

The Hon. A. H. Thesiger has been made a Q.C. The learned gentleman goes the home circuit.

The Lord Lieutenancy of Berwickshire, vacant by the death of Lord Marjoribanks will, it is said, be conferred on the Earl of Haddington.

Some constituents of Baron Meyer de Rothschild have presented to him a painting representing the eastern side of Folkestone, the cliff, the harbour, and luggers.

The threatened strike of 8000 weavers in the Burnley district has been averted by the acceptance of an offer from the masters. In some cases the wages offered are higher, in others lower than the Blackburn wages, according to the standard list; but the secretary of the Weavers' Association states that the average will be about equal. Nearly 1000 men employed in the engineering trades in Sheffield are out on strike for a minimum advance of 2s. weekly upon their present wages, together with extra pay for overtime and out work. The Oldham Cotton Spinners and Manufacturers Association held a meeting on Tuesday, and refused to admit the representatives of the operatives to another conference on the subject of an advance of minders' wages. The operatives have resolved to hold district meetings for the purpose of explaining the grounds on which their demand is based.

FINE ARTS.

Messrs. Holloway and Son, the well-known printsellers, have just published a volume of engravings which reflects great credit on their enterprise, bearing in mind how uncertain it is that any work of the kind will now win remunerative appreciation in this country, however admirable the artistic skill engaged on it, however great the labour and outlay involved in its production. The publication we refer to is intended to form a suite to the similar work recently published in Paris, entitled "Les Collections Célèbres d'Œuvres d'Art en France." The present volume, called "Works of Art in the Collections of England," consists of fifty folio plates, drawn by Edouard Lièvre, and engraved by Bracquemond, Courty, Flameng, Greux, L'Hermite, Le Rat, J. Lièvre, Muselle, Rajon, Randall, and Valentin. The subjects comprise, among many others, specimens of ancient bronzes, Persian ware, crystals, Cellini and other metal-work, Henri Deux ware, Oriental and English china, Renaissance wood and ivory carving, Oriental cloisonné and Limoges enamels, repoussé armour, jade carving, and majolica ware. The specimens are, for the most part, judiciously selected either for their beauty, their rarity, or typical character. A few are from well-known sources, such as the collections of her Majesty, the British and South Kensington Museums; but the great majority are from private collections. The selection has, in consequence, proportionate novelty of interest to the general public. Among the illustrations are some of the choicest treasures in the collections of Barons Rothschild, Lord Overstone, Sir Richard Wallace, Sir Dudley C. Marjoribanks, and Messrs. Holford, Magniac, A. Morrison, A. Barker, J. Malcolm, J. Henderson, S. Addington, A. Fountaine, &c. Some idea is thereby afforded of the unrivalled wealth of works of art in private hands in this country. The volume is precious indeed, if only for the comprehensive representation which it affords of the arts of ornamentation in all ages. It is, however, from its illustrations of the present French school of etching that the publication derives its principal art-value. Objets d'art, similar to those depicted, may be seen in our public loan and permanent exhibitions, but no such volume of etchings has hitherto been published in England. It will have been seen, from the names we have quoted, that the plates include examples of many of the principal etchers of Paris. The French now enjoy a distinction in this fascinating branch of art similar to that attained by our engravers when "pure line" and mezzotint flourished among us. An inspection of these plates should convince our amateur practitioners and critics of etching that the art is susceptible of infinitely greater development than the loose, haphazard scratching which they find so clever and "suggestive." In every one of these plates will be found accurate draughtsmanship, complete modelling and light and shade, exquisitely precise elaboration of detail, and, above all, perhaps, consummate truth in the rendering of textures—a quality essential as regards the objects chosen for representation, to which etching, in skilful hands, lends itself with incomparable felicity. The sharpness and hardness of metal, the apparent softness of jade, the translucency of crystal, the lustre of majolica, the glaze of china or of Limoges enamel, and the dull surface of Oriental cloisonné work, the polish of ivory, the less hard surface of wood, are all discriminated with the nicest fidelity. In short, it is seldom that a work capable of affording such pure artistic pleasure, alike by the beauty of its execution and of the objects illustrated, has been brought under our notice. We may add that the whole of the plates, framed, may be inspected at Messrs. Holloway's new galleries, in Bedford-street, Strand.

The colossal equestrian statue of Sir James Outram, upon which Mr. Foley has been engaged some years, has been successfully cast, and is now erected for temporary exhibition in the lower part of Waterloo-place, previous to its being shipped to Calcutta, where (on the Esplanade before Government House) it will form a worthy pendant to the same sculptor's noble statue of Lord Hardinge—which was similarly exhibited to the London public in the old courtyard of Burlington House, previous to being forwarded to its destination. We are engraving the statue of Sir James Outram, and shall therefore have another opportunity of describing a work that will certainly rank as one of the finest pieces of sculpture of our day. We are glad to announce also that the eminent sculptor has nearly completed the great statue of the Prince Consort for the Albert Memorial in Hyde Park.

An extraordinary blunder, as we think, is about to be perpetrated in the new National Gallery. Mr. E. M. Barry strongly advocated the use of ornamental tiles for the flooring, but instead of allowing the appointed architect, who is surely the most competent to decide, to follow his own judgment in this matter of detail, he has been directed (according to a statement by Mr. Ayrton to the House of Commons) to supply a wooden flooring. Now, it is obvious that encaustic tiling, being non-inflammable, is a perfectly safe substance to be placed near any warming apparatus, nor can it be ignited superficially; and when we remember how many public and private buildings have been destroyed through the contiguity of heating pipes to timber joists, or by the ignition otherwise of the wooden flooring, we are amazed that any wood should be needlessly introduced into a structure intended to contain our priceless national works of art. From experience at the Alexandra and Crystal Palaces, it is evident that the danger of fire may exist where least suspected; and doubtless the destruction caused at Muswell-hill and Sydenham was accelerated and extended by the use of wood in the flooring and elsewhere.

We have already announced the appointment by her Majesty's Commissioners for the London International Exhibition of Mr. H. Cole as acting commissioner, with a salary of £1000 a year and a share in the profits of each annual exhibition. This appointment is to be followed by Mr. Cole's retirement from his post at the South Kensington Museum—a report of which was prematurely circulated some time back. A movement is on foot to present a testimonial to Mr. Cole on his retirement from the office he has so long and actively filled in the South Kensington Museum.

The Queen has bestowed her patronage on an exhibition of works of art to be held in Aberdeen in August. Her Majesty has also placed at the disposal of the committee several works in various departments of art in her collection at Windsor. Owners of works of art in the counties of Aberdeen, Banff, and Kincardine will likewise contribute.

A full-length portrait of the Right Hon. Sir James Fergusson, late Governor of South Australia, by Mr. Sydney Hodges, commissioned by the inhabitants of the colony for the New University building at Adelaide, is being exhibited in the Australian Court of the International Exhibition.

A memorial of the late Field Marshal Sir George Pollock, Bart., Constable of the Tower, by Mr. E. J. Physick, has been placed in Westminster Abbey.

We understand that the drawings and sketches of the late Mr. Edwin Weedon (for twenty-five years marine artist to this paper) will be sold by Messrs. Christie and Manson on Thursday next, July 10.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The six repetition performances of last week (already specified) were followed by "La Sonnambula," with Mdlle. Albani as Amina—for the last time this season—on Monday; and "L'Elisir d'Amore," with Mdlle. Smeroschi as Adina, on Tuesday, for the first time this season.

On Thursday the long-promised Italian version of Auber's "Les Diamans de la Couronne" was to be brought out, with Madame Adelina Patti as Caterina. Our comment on this event must necessarily be deferred until next week. The opera was announced for repetition this (Saturday) evening, "Marta," having been promised for Friday.

Next week—the last but two of the season at this establishment—will commence with a repetition of "Il Trovatore;" "Le Nozze di Figaro" being promised for Tuesday, with Mdlle. Albani's first performance of the character of the Countess.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Last week's performances here were also repetitions of operas as previously given. This week commenced with the third representation of "Mignon," followed, on Tuesday, by "Il Trovatore," on Thursday by "Rigoletto;" Norma being announced for to-night—forming, again, a series of repetitions.

On Monday "Faust" is to be repeated, and on Tuesday "Le Nozze di Figaro" is to be given, for the first time this season.

The production of Balfe's posthumous opera—Italianised as "Il Talismano"—will be the next specialty here.

Yesterday (Friday) week, Prince Poniatowski gave his annual concert—this time in Drury Lane Theatre, the principal artists of Mr. Mapleson's opera company having contributed to a series of varied performances which also included (between the parts) Madame Ristori's recitation of the fifth canto of "Francesca da Rimini." The concert commenced with Prince Poniatowski's Mass in F, of which work we spoke in detail when noticing its original production. The solos in the mass were sung by Mdlle. Titiens, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, and Signori Campanini and Agnesi; the two first-named artists, Madame Nilsson, MM. Capoul and Naudin, Signor Rota, and others having contributed to the miscellaneous selection which formed the second part of the concert. Signor Li Calsi and Prince Poniatowski alternately conducted.

The last Floral Hall concert of the season (postponed for a week) is announced for this (Saturday) morning, with a programme including the co-operation of the principal singers of the Royal Italian Opera.

The fourth grand concert at the Albert Hall, given with the co-operation of the artists of Her Majesty's Opera, also takes place to-day, having likewise been postponed for a week.

The fête given at the Crystal Palace on Monday—on the occasion of the visit of the Shah of Persia—included a miscellaneous concert, which took place on the Handel orchestra. The programme consisted chiefly of familiar music, the solo singers having been Mdlle. Marimon, Madame Irene de Sassi, M. Naudin, and Signori Urio and Foli. The specialties of the occasion were—a "Persian Love Song," for female chorus and band; and a characteristic orchestral piece, entitled "Kurrogrou." Both these are adaptations by Mr. Manns: the former from a movement in Glinka's Russian opera, "Rustan and Ludmilla," with English text supplied by Mr. Sutherland Edwards; the latter derived from a national air given by Mr. Carl Engel in his work "On the Study of National Music"—the theme being associated with traditions of a celebrated Persian bandit minstrel named "Kurrogrou." In the performances of the day the choir and band of the Crystal Palace were largely reinforced from various sources, several military bands having contributed greatly to the effect of the full pieces. Mr. Manns conducted with his invariable efficiency.

The second year's "National Music Meetings" at the Crystal Palace (established by Mr. Willert Beale) were inaugurated on Wednesday by formal preliminary proceedings, in preparation for the public competitions. These commenced on Thursday, and are to be continued to-day (Saturday), and on Tuesday and Thursday next—the distribution of prizes, followed by a grand concert and other proceedings, being announced for July 12. Of the first three days' competitions we must speak next week.

The annual festival of the Metropolitan Schools' Choral Society—conducted by Mr. John Hullah—took place, at the Crystal Palace, on Tuesday.

The miscellaneous concerts of the week included those of Mr. Sydney Smith and Mdlle. Carreno, well-known pianists; Mr. John Thomas, the eminent harpist; M. Jules Lefort, the accomplished baritone; and Signor Arditi, whom it is scarcely necessary to characterise as one of the few thoroughly competent operatic conductors of the day. M. Van Biene, the skilful violoncellist of Her Majesty's Opera, announces a matinée, to take place to-day (Saturday), at Tavistock House.

On Monday next the sixty-first season of the Philharmonic Society will end with the eighth concert of this year's series.

THEATRES.

PRINCESS'S.

The French plays still command the attention of an important and intelligent class of playgoers. The "Maison Neuve" of Victorien Sardou was produced on Monday for the first time in England. This celebrated comedy is in five acts, and was brought out in 1866, in Paris. Though called a comedy, it partakes more of the nature of drama. It affords, however, another opportunity for the display of Mdlle. Desclée's peculiar talent. It also abounds in very strong situations, and some of the scenes are hazardous. M. Daubray, who has not appeared for three years, played the part of the old-fashioned bourgeois de Paris with great unction. M. Didier, in the modern type of the ci-devant jeune homme, in spite of the caricature, was excellent.

GAIETY.

The extraordinary talents of Mr. George Conquest, both as an actor and an acrobat, which now for many seasons have made the Grecian pantomime a series of marvels, naturally raised a desire that these extraordinary feats of agility and exhibitions of histrionic power should be brought before a West-End audience and submitted to the test of the highest judgment. This trial of wit and athletic ingenuity has been long announced, and on Monday the first performance took place. To give due effect to the design, a new drama, written by Paul Meritt and Henry Spry, has been constructed, affording in the early acts scope for acting, and in the latter opportunity for pantomimic effects. It is called "Snae Fell"—a wild place in which an old sexton and custodian of the ruins is supposed, during a fit of delirium tremens, to see a vision in a dream. These ruins are near his dwelling in Mona's isle, and here certain faery revels are performed, an elaborate ballet being provided, in which Mdlle. Ada sustains the part of première danseuse. Here the wonderful head in which Mr. Conquest is wont to hide his diminished form is introduced, and is made to display the results of mechanical contrivance in an entirely unprecedented manner. The initial act is devoted to acting, showing how Dan Duxford is given up to drink, and how Nicholas Flinton (Mr. G. H. Macdermott), a supposed physician, tempts him to suspect his wife, whose brother has returned unknown to himself, and been wandering with his sister among the ruins. Miss Loseby personates the suffering wife, and her sufferings are pathetically pronounced. To Dan's inebriety and jealousy Mr. Conquest does full justice; and his son, as a Manx youth and the tea-spirit Robur, is seen in acrobatic business to follow admirably in his father's steps. As a spectacle, the whole affair is superb, and the music, by Mr. Oscar H. Barrett, is of rare excellence.

Miss Clive was to have performed on the morning of Saturday at the Queen's some selections of "Romeo and Juliet," but was unable to appear owing to an attack of rheumatism. In the evening the part of Constance was sustained by Miss Cooper, who undertook the task at short notice.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Last week we made a few remarks upon the general features of the Stockbridge meeting, dwelling particularly upon the importance of its two-year-old races. These contests were as interesting as ever, and Lemnos, Couronne de Fer, and Mr. Winkle are a trio which, we doubt not, will worthily maintain the fame of the Stockbridge youngsters. Lemnos especially, seeing how he beat Couronne de Fer at Ascot, would seem to be a particularly smart colt, though, for our part, we are not quite satisfied with the result of that race, and shall rather expect to see the tables turned when the two rivals next oppose each other. Mr. Bruton's colt is bred quite to order, being an own brother to that excellent mare Frivolity, and was very highly tried by his trainer before he was so unexpectedly defeated in his first essay by his stable companion, Tomahawk. That, indeed, was a dreadful "upset," and how it was accomplished by such a second-rate creature must for ever remain a mystery. However, other good animals have been defeated by their inferiors in their maiden races—as, for example, Dundee, Kingcraft, Favonius, and Sterling; and no doubt some horses, like men, are nervous on a first appearance. Before parting from Stockbridge we cannot help remarking how very bare the programme would have been stripped of the two-year-old contests and the Cup. Really the handicaps and selling races which form the padding of the card are quite contemptible, inferior to the "sport" which can be seen any day at Croydon or Kingsbury, and altogether unworthy of this old historic meeting. Half-mile scurries have, perhaps, their hidden use; but it is quite certain that those who originally laid out Stockbridge racecourse did not contemplate that it would one day become a battle-ground for tenth-rate crocks, struggling one with another to show which can exhibit the greatest deficiency of stamina in the shortest distance of ground. The meeting of the week has, of course, been the July meeting, the pleasantest, if the least exciting, of all the Newmarket gatherings. Ecossais, of course, had it all his own way in the July Stakes, and we are more than ever convinced that nothing will get near him as a two-year-old, though we certainly share the prevalent doubt whether his fore legs are sufficiently strong to stand the strain of a preparation for the Derby. Prince Charlie won a handicap over the T.Y.C. with 10st. on his back, giving exactly a stone to Blenheim, and beating him by a head—a wonderful performance. Achievement and Lady Elizabeth had each a very pretty turn of speed in their time, but neither would have had the slightest chance with the Prince, who is, beyond all doubt, the fastest horse ever foaled. The Gladiator Stakes was carried off by a colt of Mr. Merry's by Scottish Chief out of Lady Dot, a handsome youngster sure to be heard of by-and-by in the Derby betting.

The second day at Henley was decidedly tame, as the various races were virtually over so far from home that the finishes excited no interest. Gulston and Long, however, created a great sensation in the race for the Silver Goblets, by proving utterly unequal to hold their own against Trower and Knollys, who, to the surprise of everybody, ran right away from them. The London men were, no doubt, feeling the effects of the hard work they had done during the regatta; but still, looking to their previous performances, they should have been able to make a better fight of it. The Grand Challenge Cup fell to the London eight, which proved much too strong for the Eton boys; the Diamond Sculls to Mr. Dicker, a very promising novice; and the Thames Challenge Cup to the Thames Rowing Club, whilst the Visitors and the Wyfold Cups were respectively carried off by the Irish crews. The Irishmen were in great force this year, and the Kingstown Harbour crew, especially, was a remarkably good one, possibly the fastest four on the river.

The first of the annual contests between the amateur and professional cricketers took place at the Oval last week—the Gentlemen v. Players of the South—and resulted in an easy victory for the former, who won the match by eight wickets. It may be said to have been secured by the two Graces, as Mr. W. G. Grace scored 134 runs, and his brother 74, not out—pretty well for one day's work. The Gentlemen and Players again met last Monday, this time at Lord's, and the latter had the pleasure of fielding out for the whole day, as their opponents completely defied all the bowling that could be brought against them, scoring a total of 278 for the loss of only five wickets. Of this number the invincible Mr. Grace contributed more than half, carrying out his bat for the day for the magnificent score of 151 runs. The match was ultimately won by the Gentlemen in one innings with 55 runs to spare, their total reaching 315, while the Players in their two innings only scored 260. The cricket-match between Lancashire and Yorkshire closed on Tuesday evening, Yorkshire winning by 64 runs.

The second of the annual contests between the amateur athletes of the North and South of England took place at Lillie Bridge last Saturday, and proved, as it was feared, a very hollow affair for the South. Indeed, the Northerners only won the quarter; for which, however, they ran first and second, and divided the half mile; all the other prizes falling to their opponents. Scott won the three-mile race very easily in 15 min. 34 sec.; and Slade scored just as decided a victory in the mile, which he covered in 4 min. 30 sec. A match at the last named distance between these two celebrities would be as interesting as the famous Scott-Chinnery race, a year or two ago; but we suppose it cannot be arranged.

The crops over the entire north of Ireland are reported to look unusually well. Flax, which is naturally regarded with great interest in Ulster, in consequence of its close connection with the staple trade of the province, is remarkably promising.

A procession of Good Templars, two miles and a half long, promenaded the streets of Bristol on Monday, from Queen-square to the Zoological Gardens, Clifton. There were 8000 Good Templars in the procession, and nearly 20,000 at the gardens. On Tuesday the Good Templars' Conference began, and continued during the week.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

Lord Shaftesbury distributed the prizes, yesterday week, to the boys of the training-ship Chichester, moored off Greenwich. His Lordship afterwards gave the boys an address, in which he recommended them to read Southey's "Life of Nelson." Addressing the visitors present, Lord Shaftesbury said every one had a great interest in maintaining such institutions as the Chichester, because they would be the means of manning the Navy with British seamen instead of Swedes, Germans, and Italians. What was wanted was the real article—an article of British growth—who could be trusted in the hour of England's need.—The lads on board the Warspite, the training-ship of the Marine Society, lying off Charlton, underwent their annual inspection on Monday, in the presence of Admiral Sir Broke Middleton and an interested company of visitors. After several manœuvres in which the lads greatly distinguished themselves, prizes were presented by the gallant Admiral.

"LES ROSES." BY PORTAKIA.

The proposal to substitute arbitration for war in the settlement of international disputes is not a new one. It has been resorted to, under one form or another, in several cases, and not without a gratifying amount of success. But it must also be admitted that the attempt to allay excited passions by means of it has sometimes failed—notably in the Franco-German war—to prevent a resort to sanguinary extremities. Still, as Mr. Gladstone argued, its feasibility has been demonstrated in one case at least. The Geneva Arbitration may not furnish a precedent applicable to the circumstances of all Continental States, but, at any rate, it holds up to them an example of great moral worth. Whether on the strength of it we are entitled to invite other nations to enter into a general compact to substitute the more for the less reasonable method of solving international disputes is a question admitting of some difference of opinion. The majority of the House of Commons on Tuesday night dissented from the position assumed by the Prime Minister, that England has not yet acquired a title to undertake such a mission. Mr. Gladstone gave an assurance that in every particular case that may arise her Majesty's Government would in the future watch for every possible opportunity of using its influence and good offices to the effect contended for by Mr. Richard's motion, as, indeed, it had done for some years past. The less pretensions and ambitious the means resorted to by the British Government, he said, the more efficacious it was likely to prove. Perhaps he may be right; but it does not appear to us that the mode of proceeding suggested is necessarily wrong. There is in it nothing peremptory, nothing really obtrusive, nothing precipitate, if carried out—as it is sure to be by Earl Granville—with delicacy, considerateness, and tact. There can hardly be a doubt that the preparation, by a mixed commission, of a code of international law would be an important step in advance towards a permanent system of international arbitration. Surely a diplomatic movement towards obtaining this result might be initiated by her Majesty's Government, without exposing itself to the charge of meddling unjustifiably with the affairs of other nations. There is no obvious necessity for giving effect to the resolution of the House of Commons in an offensive manner or spirit. And, assuredly, it is time that something were done in the direction indicated by that resolution. That it will arouse the suspicion and jealousy of other Governments we do not believe. Something equivalent to it, it will be remembered, was proposed by the late Emperor Napoleon. His proposal, it is true, was not acceded to; but, at least, the fact of its having been made is not regarded as one of the blots of the Imperial policy. The matter is now committed to the judgment of our Foreign Secretary; and we can entertain no serious misgiving that he will so discharge the duty devolved upon him as to fail in demonstrating that the oneness of purpose between her Majesty's Government and the House of Commons in reference to the resolution passed on Tuesday night admits likewise of a oneness of action in regard of the plan of carrying it into effect.

THE COURT.

The Queen entertained at dinner, on Thursday week, at Windsor Castle, his Excellency the German Ambassador (Count Münster), the Duke and Duchess of Athole, and the Duke and Duchess of Manchester—all of whom left the castle the following day.

On Saturday last the Duchess of Cambridge and the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz visited her Majesty, and remained to luncheon. The Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster and Lady Augusta Stanley arrived at the castle and dined with the Queen.

On Sunday her Majesty, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service in the private chapel of the castle. The Dean of Westminster officiated. The Dean of Westminster and Lady Augusta Stanley and the Dean of Windsor and the Hon. Mrs. Wellesley dined with the Queen.

On Monday the Duke of Edinburgh and the Duke and Duchess of Argyll arrived at the castle, and dined with her Majesty. The Dean of Westminster and Lady Augusta Stanley left the castle.

On Tuesday Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne arrived at the castle to luncheon. The Duke of Edinburgh and the Duke and Duchess of Argyll left the castle. Major-General Sir T. M. and the Hon. Lady Biddulph dined with the Queen. The Hungarian band played in the quadrangle of the castle in the evening before her Majesty and the members of the Royal family.

On Wednesday Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne left the castle for London. The Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch and the Right Hon. W. E. and Mrs. Gladstone dined with the Queen.

Her Majesty, accompanied by the Duke of Edinburgh, Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, Prince Leopold, and Princess Beatrice, has taken frequent walks and drives.

A state concert was given on Thursday at Buckingham Palace.

The Queen will be represented by Prince Arthur at the forthcoming coronation of King Oscar of Norway, at Drontheim.

Lord Wrottesley and Colonel the Hon. H. Byng have succeeded Viscount Torrington and Colonel Lord James Murray as Lord and Groom in Waiting, and Major-General Lord Alfred Paget and Major-General H. F. Ponsonby have succeeded Lieutenant-General Viscount Bridport and Colonel H. Lynedoch Gardiner as Equerries in Waiting to her Majesty.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales were present at the ball given by the Goldsmiths' Company, at their civic hall, yesterday week. On Saturday last the Prince accompanied the Shah of Persia from Buckingham Palace to the Victoria station, and took leave of his Majesty upon his departure for the Continent. The Grand Duke Cesarevitch returned to Marlborough House from Hull, after the launch of the Cesarevna. On Monday the Prince and Princess, with the Grand Duke Cesarevitch and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna, were present at a review of the troops at Aldershot. In the evening their Royal and Imperial Highnesses were present at a ball given by the Duke and Duchess of Northumberland at Northumberland House. On Tuesday the Prince presided at a meeting at Marlborough House of her Majesty's Commissioners for the Vienna Exhibition. The Duke of Teck and Count Gleichen were present. The Cesarevitch inspected the prison of Newgate. In the evening the Prince and Princess and the Cesarevitch and the Cesarevna went to her Majesty's Opera, Drury Lane. On Wednesday the Cesarevitch visited St. Thomas's Hospital and Millbank prison. The Prince and Princess and the Cesarevitch and the Cesarevna dined with Countess Frances Waldegrave and the Right Hon. Chichester Fortescue at Strawberry Hill, and were afterwards present at a ball given by the Countess in honour of her Royal and Imperial visitors. The Princess and the Cesarevna have driven out daily.

The Prince has postponed the formal opening of the harbour of refuge at Holyhead until on or about Aug. 12. His Royal Highness will upon the occasion be the guest of the Hon. William Owen Stanley, M.P., Lord Lieutenant of the county, at his residence, Penrhos.

The Hon. Mrs. William Grey, Woman of the Bedchamber to the Princess, was married to Count G. d'Otrante, on Saturday last, at St. James's Church, Piccadilly. The Prince and Princess and the Grand Duchess the Cesarevna were present. The wedding breakfast was given by their Royal Highnesses at Marlborough House. Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck were among the guests.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

The Duke of Edinburgh presided, on Wednesday, at a meeting of the committee of management of the Royal Albert Hall Amateur Orchestral Society, held at Clarence House. In the evening his Royal Highness left town, en route for Russia. The Duke travelled from Charing-cross by the ordinary boat-train upon the South-Eastern Railway to Dover, whence he embarked on board the steamer Maid of Kent, Captain Pittock, for Ostend.

Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein presided at a meeting of the Windsor and Eton Association for the Education of Women, held, on Tuesday, at the Norman Tower, Windsor Castle. On Wednesday Prince and Princess Christian distributed the prizes to the successful competitors at the annual meeting of the Prince Consort's Windsor Association, which was held in the Home Park, Windsor.

Prince Arthur opened, on Wednesday, an industrial exhibition, the work of the officers and soldiers at Aldershot.

The Duke of Roxburghe has left Brown's Hotel for Norway.

Earl and Countess Delawarr have arrived at Cherbourg in their yacht the Sylph.

The Earl and Countess of Mount Charles have left Thomas's Hotel for Bifrons, their seat in Kent.

The Earl and Countess of Wilton left town on Saturday last for Homburg.

The Countess of Londoun and Mr. Hastings have arrived at Sea View, Isle of Wight, from town.

Entertainments have been given by the Austrian Ambassador, the French Ambassador, the Duchess of Northumberland, the Duchess of Buccleuch, the Marchioness of Ripon, the Marchioness of Westminster, the Marquis and Marchioness of Hertford, Countess Amherst, the Countess of Ellesmere, the Countess of Duncannon, the Countess of Home, Countess Cowper, Earl and Countess Cowley, the Earl and Countess of Malmesbury, Countess Frances Waldegrave, the Earl and Countess of Crawford and Balcarres, the Countess of Airlie, the Earl and Countess of Dartmouth, Viscount and Viscountess Holmesdale, Viscountess Cambermere, Lady Dashwood, Lord and Lady Egerton of Tatten, Lord and Lady Wenlock, Lord Carington, Lord and Lady de Tabley, Lady Headley, Lord and Lady Herries, Lord and Lady Hyllton, Lord Kesteven, Lady Carbery, Lady Charlotte Schreiber, Lady Susan Harcourt, Lady Margaret Beaumont, the Right Hon. Edward and Mrs. Cardwell, Mrs. Holford, Mr. and Mrs. Petre, Mrs. Marlay, and Mrs. Jackson.

"LES ROSES."

In this graceful picture, by a Belgian artist, we are invited to admire the simple and innocent self-surrender of an Eastern maiden to the delightful sense of floral fragrance. The mind of Lalla Rookh, or whoever she may be, is for the moment absorbed in the enjoyment of a sweet natural perfume, which may have the effect, as is usual, of reviving tender memories and calling up the dearest associations of earlier youth. So we think, at least, from the melting expression of her big black eye. A sensitive female nature is like that crystal vessel to which Lalla Rookh's own poet has elsewhere alluded—

You may break, you may ruin, the vase if you will,
But the scent of the roses hangs over it still.

We shall not attempt to pry into her sentimental experiences of the past. The Shah took care to send home all his Persian ladies before coming to England; so that we had no opportunity of making acquaintance with them and studying the national character in that amiable sex. They would probably, indeed, have been locked up in a chamber, or wrapped in a thick veil, if he had brought them to Buckingham Palace, and we might have known no more about them, in that case, than we do now. His Majesty is a good Mohammedan, and must comply with the rule imposed by his jealous creed and Asiatic race. But he was differently treated, in this respect, by his English hosts and their friends. Wherever he went, in town or country, he saw enough of our fairest and finest countrywomen; for their rage to see him and his diamonds was beyond all measure. They, too, are fond of smelling at a rose in bloom.

THE ROSE SHOW.

The Shah could not, in the fortnight and three days of his sojourn in England, be shown everything without exception that is to be seen in London in the fashionable season. Had there been time for a glance at all the customary entertainments of the gay world in our midst, the Shah might have found pleasure in a fête at the Regent's Park Gardens of the Royal Botanic Society, which took place last Wednesday under the presidency of the Duke of Teck. Or he might have been equally gratified with one of the grand flower shows of the Royal Horticultural Society, in their gardens at South Kensington. He would there have admired, as everywhere he must have done, both the English roses and the English ladies, displayed to the very best advantage in our honest English daylight. Roses and ladies are the incessant themes of Persian lyric poetry; and, supposing the Shah to be a reader of Hafiz, he could have quoted some pretty verses, upon this occasion, for the car of a Princess or Duchess, while strolling under the cool marquee, where those blooming beauties were collected for the public gratification. But the Shah was not there, and so lost his chance. Our Artist was there one day, as the Engraving proves, since he made use of his opportunity to do a sketch for the adornment of a page in this Number. If the Shah had been present at a Rose Show, and could he have brought Lalla Rookh with him, as suggested in the preceding note, all the company would have been pleased. None would have murmured, with Horace, at the great fuss of his visit—

Persicos odi, puer, apparatus;
Mitte sectari, rosa quo locorum
Sera moretur.

THE WIMBLEDON RIFLE MEETING.

The fourteenth annual prize meeting of the National Rifle Association began on Monday. It has in former years been opened on the Tuesday of the first week that fell within the month of July, but the number of matches and prizes for competition has made it necessary to take an entire fortnight. The camp of rifle volunteer corps on Wimbledon-common looks very much as in bygone summers, and our page of sketches, made on the camping-ground last week, shows many familiar incidents of that free military village, built with canvas in a few days or hours. There are matters of business, such as the appointment of markers to attend the shooting-targets; there are also refreshments and amusements to be provided for; and we observe among the latter a novel institution for ball practice at Wimbledon—that of a pair of billiard-tables, under their particular tent. The camp was laid out on this occasion under the superintendence of Captain Salmond, R.E., succeeding Captain Drake, and there is some improvement in the plan and width of its thoroughfares. The Canadian riflemen have pitched their tents near the iron house, with their flag displayed on a lofty mast. The ruling members of the council, Earl Ducie, Lieutenant-Colonel Oxley, and Captain Page, the secretary, Captain Mildmay, and the adjutant officers, Captains Costin and Woodhall, have conducted their work to the general satisfaction. As the shooting was to begin at nine o'clock on Monday morning, a large number of volunteer riflemen took up their abode in the tents on Saturday afternoon. The rain, we fear, during that first night must have disturbed their comfort in camp. There was Divine worship for them in the bell tent on Sunday, when the Rev. Canon Barry preached them an appropriate sermon. The first day's shooting was good, Mr. W. C. Fordyce winning the prize in the Alfred series of seven shots at 200 yards, with a score of 28, the highest that could possibly be made; and Mr. C. F. Lowe making 27 points in the extra series at that distance. Captain Easton, of the 105th Lanarkshire, gained a maximum of points in the Alexandra series. The Snider nursery prize, shot for at 500 yards, was equally contended for by Sergeant Woodman, 6th Hants, Corporals Sumnal and Leitch, 7th Salop, and Mr. Gott. On Tuesday began the first stage of competition for the Queen's prize, in which Sergeant Bennie, 13th Stirling, made 26 points out of 28, as did also Lieut. Ross, 1st Lanark, and Private David Jones, 11th Glamorgan. The Queen's prize contest, in subsequent stages, was continued on later days. Mr. Cardwell and Mr. Lowe, if no other Cabinet Ministers, visited the common on Wednesday. Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne have also been on the ground. The Houses of Lords and Commons had their match on Thursday. The usual review of the volunteer troops assembled will take place on Saturday next. It is to be regretted that the Shah did not see this Wimbledon meeting.

A fine-art exhibition, in connection with the Dumfries Mechanics' Institute, was opened on Monday in that town.

The Morning Post states that all prospect of bringing the Session to a termination within July has been abandoned, and that the prorogation of Parliament cannot take place before the second week in August.

The Extra Supplement.

"LE ROI EST MORT—VIVE LE ROI!"

The King never dies; that is to say, the King begins to live as soon as he is dead; such is the doctrine of regal immortality, in the flesh and on earth, which the monarchical system of politics involves, by its rule of hereditary succession. There was once a little Dauphin, or eldest son and heir of a great King of France. When the Royal Sire, with all the Court physicians, the nobles, statesmen, and lackeys, the tax-collectors, lawyers, and soldiers of his realm to help him, was really not able to keep the breath in his body any longer, there was a natural stoppage of the flow of blood in his veins. This was not quite an eagle; for blood of such rare quality, which had been transmitted from his ancestors the Capets in a direct lineage, with the special blessing of Heaven, might have been expected to hold on its majestic course, despite the failing mechanism of heart and lungs. And so, in fact, it did; the same precious blood was in another body, that of a younger Capet, who instantly became the King that had only seemed to die. "Le Roi est mort—Vive le Roi!" was the glad cry of his admiring courtiers, who hastened to tell the unconscious little boy what a sudden transformation had occurred, changing him at once into the sovereign person of his late departed father. The poor child, however, was rather frightened by this miraculous accession of the paternal might and glory to his small infantine being. As the high officers of State, with a Prince nearest of kin to his Majesty, and with a cowed Churchman to assure him of Divine grace, entered the presence of this very juvenile potentate, he wept in terror and clung to the knees of his nurse. This scene of French history was beheld four centuries later, only with the mind's eye, by an English artist named Marcus Stone, who forthwith took up his painting-brush, and cleverly put the affair on canvas, for the Royal Academy Exhibition of 1873. So it appears in our Engraving, which will be acceptable to many readers. But in France, just now, the King is neither alive nor dead.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The 36th Middlesex was officially inspected, last Saturday, on the Guards' ground in Hyde Park, by Colonel Lyons, C.B., Assistant Adjutant-General in the Home District, who expressed himself much pleased with the state of the regiment.

The London Irish, of which regiment Prince Arthur is Colonel, was inspected last Saturday, in Hyde Park, by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar. Prince Edward addressed and complimented the noble and gallant commandant, Lord Donnegall, on the manner in which his regiment acquitted itself, especially remarking upon the steadiness and smartness of the non-commissioned officers and men in the ranks, and the efficiency with which they were handled by their officers. The marching past he pronounced quite exceptional, and said that the movements generally reflected great credit upon the corps.

The officers of the whole brigade of the Gloucestershire Volunteer Artillery had a carbine prize competition, on Thursday week, at the Portishead range, for a number of prizes. The first prize, a set of four gilt salts in case (presented by Lady Davis), was won by Lieutenant Stock; the second, a similar prize (given by Mrs. S. V. Hare), was won by Lieutenant Curtis; the third, a claret jug (given by Miss Hare), was won by Captain Jebb; the fourth, a pair of candlesticks (given by Mrs. Savile), was won by Lieutenant Trotter, of the Newnham corps; and the fifth, consisting of the entrance fees, was won by Colonel Savile. The men belonging to the 3rd Gloucestershire and Newnham batteries, numbering between sixty and seventy, who have during the past week been encamped at Portishead, were inspected, on Friday week, by Colonel Hoste, C.B. The 1st Somersetshire Artillery, about forty strong, succeeded the Gloucestershire men, and remained in camp till Wednesday, when the battery was reoccupied by a detachment of the Royal Artillery from Horfield barracks.

The annual inspection of the Oldham or 31st Lancashire took place, last Saturday, in Chadderton Park, near Oldham. The whole of the day's work was very good, especially the volley-firing.

Last Saturday evening the 1st West York (Leeds) Artillery Volunteers, to the number of about 500, arrived at Morecambe for a week's encampment in a field overlooking the bay, on the road leading to Heysham. In addition to the usual battery practice, there has been long-range firing from two 40-pounder Armstrong field-pieces, which were situated on the beach.

At the Aberdeenshire Wapinschaw, held last week, the Queen's prize was won by Private Dawson, Inverurie, near Aberdeen, and the bronze medal of the National Rifle Association was gained by Private George Shepherd, another member of the Inverurie corps. This prize qualifies the winner to compete at Wimbledon for the Prince of Wales's prize. The money prizes this year amounted to £700.

The arrangements for the attendance of volunteers at Cannock Chase and Dartmoor in the forthcoming manoeuvres have been issued, and are framed to suit the convenience of those desirous of being present. Last year, it will be remembered, application was made by about 20,000 volunteers, from all parts of the country, to attend; but, consequent on the extension of the period in camp to fifteen instead of eight days, a comparatively small number were able to avail themselves of the invitation. A circular with reference to the manoeuvres of this year has been issued from the War Office to the commanding officers of metropolitan corps, in which it is stated that the period in camp will be for eight or fifteen days; and, what is equally important, where corps remain for the full period, individual men may relieve those whose business or other engagements will not admit of their staying over the short period. The circular further states that the two camps will be formed on or about July 26 and Aug. 16 respectively, and the volunteer contingent of the army to be assembled will consist of three battalions at a time. No corps will be allowed to send more than fifty rank and file. A large number of the metropolitan corps have asked permission to attend.

The governors of Heriot's Hospital, Edinburgh, have sanctioned plans for the erection of an elementary outdoor school at Abbeyhill, which, it is expected, will cost over £3000.

We are requested to contradict a report, which has appeared in several of the London newspapers, and in a few copies of our early edition this week, that the Shah had left a sum of £3000 to be given to the police. There is no foundation for the statement.

Mr. Baxter, M.P., Secretary to the Treasury, has, in his examination before the Select Committee on Civil Service Expenditure, made various startling suggestions for economising on existing establishments. One is to increase the hours of labour in public offices, and the other to supersede copyists by copying machines. The latter reform, he says, would effect a saving of from £200,000 to £300,000 a year.

NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION PRIZE MEETING: PREPARING FOR THE CAMP AT WIMBLEDON.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, July 10.

The Shah of Persia has at length arrived, and his sayings and doings and diamonds have quite eclipsed all other matters whatsoever. His Majesty reached Cherbourg at half-past eight on Saturday evening, after a tolerably fine and speedy passage from Portsmouth. Count Pujol, the representative of General MacMahon, and a number of other dignitaries belonging to the port, at once hastened on board, and were received by the Shah in the spacious saloon of the Rapide. Mutual compliments were exchanged, after which the deputation retired, and left the illustrious visitor to the repose he must have sorely needed. A display of fireworks served to divert popular attention till the small hours. At nine o'clock the next morning the Shah disembarked by means of a superbly decorated barge, and proceeded direct to the train, which was drawn up at a short distance from the landing-stage. The journey to Paris occupied about eight hours and a half, without including the time taken up by several stoppages; and the train arrived at the Passy station, which had been very tastefully decorated for the occasion, at about twenty minutes past seven. Here the Shah was received by Marshal MacMahon, General Ladmirault, and their respective staffs, and was further welcomed at the moment of alighting by the thunders of a Royal salute from Mount Valerien. Great efforts were made by the crowd to catch even a glimpse of the guest whose coming had set all Paris on tiptoe with expectation, but the immense body of troops stationed on the ground rendered this a matter of the utmost difficulty, and it is doubtful whether many of the assembled thousands were able to gratify their desires in this respect. The Shah and Marshal MacMahon, entering an open carriage, dashed off, attended by an escort of heavy cavalry, towards the Arc de Triomphe, where his Majesty had to accept the greetings of the Municipality, who were there congregated. For this purpose he alighted, but the interview was an exceedingly brief one; and, once more re-entering his carriage, he proceeded onwards to the Palais Bourbon, where he was received by M. Buffet. The number of people assembled to witness his arrival was immense, but no enthusiasm was displayed; and, indeed, the only expressions heard on all sides were those of disappointment at not having been able to obtain a better view owing to the omnipresent military. There were no official illuminations in the evening, but several private buildings made a most gorgeous display, and the boulevards were thronged to an unusual degree with people all busily discussing the Shah.

On Monday his Majesty remained quietly at home during the morning, reposing after the fatigues of his journey, but in the afternoon he drove along the whole length of the Boulevards in an open carriage. The day was magnificent; but, owing probably to the intense heat, there were very few people out at the time, and he attracted but little attention. From the Boulevards he proceeded to the Bois de Boulogne, where he visited the Jardin d'Acclimatation, and then strolled about the lake. At five o'clock on Tuesday he left by road for Versailles, and arrived at his destination shortly before six. After calling on several official personages, including Marshal MacMahon and M. Buffet, he drove through the gardens in company with the Marshal, and witnessed the preparations for the display of fireworks in his honour. Returning to the palace, he was entertained at a state banquet in the magnificent Galerie des Glaces, and was then conducted to the grand stand prepared for him overlooking the Bassin de Neptune, where the fireworks were let off. The Shah drove off shortly after eleven, but it was far into the small hours of the morning before the last of the multitude congregated at Versailles were able to effect their departure for Paris, owing to the great strain put upon the railway company. Yesterday afternoon the Shah received the members of the Corps Diplomatique, at the Palais Bourbon. To-day (Thursday) he is present at the great review in the Bois de Boulogne, in which nearly a hundred thousand men are to take part. One fact seems to have struck everyone who witnessed his progress in England as well as in France, and that is the silence which prevails amongst the crowd here whenever he makes his appearance in public. It may be due to the fact that people are too eager to see him to think of cheering; but it cannot fail to strike him unfavourably. However, the French journals, with their passion for self-glorification, make the most of it, and roundly assert that he is most favourably impressed with the quiet politeness of the French, after the boisterous roughness of the English. Whether he is or not, is, of course, a secret locked in his own breast.

Even the Assembly have been affected by the Shah. On Monday a complaint was made by M. Villain that the members present at his Majesty's arrival the preceding day had not been treated with due attention and respect, but had been elbowed aside by people vested in a little brief authority. He proposed that they should all go down in a body to to-day's review, and after some discussion his proposal was adopted. Apparently encouraged by his colleague's success, another member of the Left, M. Lamy, brought forward in turn a motion, but one of a more patriotic and more stirring character. He demanded permission to question the Government as to the advisability of putting an end to the state of siege, and moved that this matter should be taken into consideration on Monday. However, a crushing majority decided that his application was premature, and that it should not be again brought forward till the middle of November.

If it had not been for the Shah, there is no doubt that the duel between MM. Ranc and de Cassagnac would have been the all-engrossing topic this week. The encounter, after as many preliminary meetings and consultations on the part of the seconds as would have sufficed to arrange the articles of a diplomatic treaty, took place, at Essanges, in Luxembourg, on Monday. The first reports which reached us here were contradictory in the extreme—the different papers ascribing the victory to the champion they favoured. However, the official report of the seconds has been promulgated, and sets forth that the duel, which was fought with swords, took place at three o'clock in the afternoon; that at the outset M. de Cassagnac received a wound in the lower part of the arm, and that, on the combat being renewed, M. Ranc, in turn, received a thrust in the same region, incapacitating him from continuing the contest. This document wound up with the declaration that the seconds considered honour was satisfied. Nevertheless nine people out of ten one meets are wicked enough to express their regret that the result was not more serious, on the ground that both the parties concerned are public nuisances standing in need of a sharper lesson.

The constantly-recurring rumour that something will at last be done in the case of Marshal Bazaine has again been set into circulation—it is to be presumed with no further result than of old. Last Saturday the Government paid to Germany a further instalment of 250 million francs on account of the war indemnity.

SPAIN.

The Government has issued a manifesto to the nation expressing its determination to put an end to the Carlist war, for which purpose it is preparing a supreme effort by the use of the extraordinary powers granted to it by the Cortes. The manifesto appeals to all Spaniards who love their country and value liberty to make sacrifices to the full extent of their power.

The Carlists have resumed the offensive in Catalonia by investing the town of Vich. It is announced that the Saragossa Railway Company has had to pay blackmail to the insurgents.

ITALY.

Signor Minghetti has succeeded in forming a Cabinet, in which he himself takes the portfolio of Finance, and Signor Visconti-Venosta appears again as Foreign Minister.

SWITZERLAND.

The Federal Assembly opened its Session at Berne on Monday. The Council of Estates elected as its President M. Kopp, of Lucerne, and as its Vice-President M. Koechlin, of Basle. The National Council has elected M. Ziegler, of Zurich, as President, and M. Fehr-Herzog, of Aargau, as Vice-President.

The new bill for the revision of the Federal Constitution has been published. Among its first provisions is the liability of every Swiss to serve in the defence of his country. By other articles the Confederation is empowered to establish a university, a polytechnic school, and other educational establishments of a similar kind.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William has conferred the Order of the Black Eagle upon the Shah, and presented the insignia to him in brilliant.

Herr von Balan, hitherto German Minister at Brussels, has been appointed Secretary of State at the Berlin Foreign Office, with the rank of Prussian Minister of State.

The Supreme Consistory of the Prussian Protestant Church have, after long and stormy debates, determined not to confirm the sentence of expulsion passed by the Brandenburg Consistory against the Rev. Mr. Sydow for denying the miraculous birth of Christ in a public lecture. Mr. Sydow will only be reprimanded.

AUSTRIA.

The Emperor has conferred the grand cross of the Order of Francis Joseph upon Baron von Schwarz, Director of the Vienna Exhibition, in recognition of his eminent services.

RUSSIA.

It is officially announced from St. Petersburg that the Khan of Khiva, accompanied by his chief Ministers, has left the hiding-place to which he had retreated, surrendered to General Kaufmann, and asked for mercy. Intelligence from Khiva received at St. Petersburg announces that Mangut has been captured after an engagement, and has been destroyed and burnt down. The town of Kitai surrendered without resistance, and was spared. At the taking of Mangut the loss sustained by the Orenburg detachment was one officer and fifteen men severely wounded. The inhabitants within a circle of twelve versts around Kitai have been punished for attacks made upon the Orenburg detachment. A large number of Persians, held captives, have sought the protection of the Russian troops. The number of Persian slaves in Khiva is 10,000.

TURKEY.

The Sultan paid his expected visit to the Khedive last Saturday, and he appears from the telegram to have passed the night at Emrighien.

It is stated that the new firman given by the Sultan to the Khedive grants to Ismail Pacha and his successors almost complete independence. The succession is settled according to the principle of primogeniture, and almost the only acknowledgments of suzerainty that remain will be that the coins of the Khedive will bear the Sultan's inscription, his army must carry the Sultan's colours, and he must not, without the consent of the Porte, build or purchase ironclad ships of war. The annual contribution is fixed at about £150,000.

UNITED STATES.

At Philadelphia on Thursday week the President's proclamation, announcing that an international exhibition would be held in that city in 1876, was publicly read. The President commends the exhibition to all nations, in the interest of peace, civilisation, and international friendship.

The trial of the Modoc Indians has commenced. Three shocks of earthquake were felt at Buffalo last Saturday morning, causing the buildings and shipping to rock.

Cholera is disappearing at Nashville and Cincinnati. The new civil service rules are being enforced in the Washington departments, and a large number of promotions and appointments has recently been made there, after civil service examinations, some of those appointed being ladies.

INDIA.

Some particulars are telegraphed by the Calcutta correspondent of the Times of a peasant riot. The peasantry, fearing an enhancement, united to withhold their rents in the Putna district. They declared they would pay the magistrate only. They burned and plundered a few houses. There were two bands, which dispersed on the arrival of the magistrate. The Governor sent the police, and warned the tenants to pay their legal dues. The peasants are chiefly under Mohammedan landlords. It is a Hindoo, but not a Ferozee rising. The same correspondent has since telegraphed that Putna is quiet, and there is no excitement elsewhere. The rioters have been convicted. A proclamation has been issued which declares it lawful to resist landlords' excessive demands, but not to use violent means.

AUSTRALIA.

By the arrival of the Overland Mail we have advices from Melbourne to May 20. Parliament assembled for the dispatch of business on May 13. The Viceregal speech was delivered by Sir George Bowen. The prosperous condition of the colony and the satisfactory state of the public revenue were alluded to in congratulatory terms, and several measures having for their object the further development of the resources of the country were promised. In the Legislative Council the reply to the address was carried; and in the Legislative Assembly there was but a short, desultory debate. The bill for mining on private property, which last Session passed the Legislative Assembly and was rejected by the Legislative Council, is again to be introduced; and the Land Act Amendment Bill, which was dealt with in a similar manner. One of the provisions of this measure is to increase the maximum area allowed for selection from 320 to 640 acres. Provision is to be made for the further extension of the railway system, and in all probability the Session will not close without a line to Gipps Land being authorised. The Argus thinks a slight attack was made upon the Government for what has been termed the partial failure of the Four per Cent Loan, £500,000 of which was lately placed upon the Victoria market.

NEW ZEALAND.

The mail from New Zealand brings despatches which throw some light on recent telegrams from that colony reporting that great uneasiness prevailed in consequence of the attitude of the Maories. It appears that the fears of a general native rising were unfounded, the murders and outrages complained of having been committed by a small party of Maories whose land had been confiscated. Three men who were working near to the boundary of this land were treacherously fired upon, and one of them was shot and his body afterwards mutilated. The murderers afterwards fired upon another party of workmen, but none of them were injured. The Government had demanded the surrender of the murderers from a native chief with whom they had taken refuge, and who had given shelter to other outlaws, and, his replies being unsatisfactory, a committee of settlers had been appointed to "watch the Government." Several influential chiefs had come forward to denounce the crime and demand the surrender of the criminals.

The Rhine steamer service will be extended upwards as far as Strasburg from the 15th inst.

The French Academy of Science has elected Dr. William Carpenter foreign corresponding member.

Intelligence has reached New York that Enrique Palacios has landed in Honduras and overthrown the government of General Arias.

The dead bodies of eighteen Norwegian sailors, who attempted to winter in Spitzbergen, have been found by a German exploring ship which has visited the island.

The new Atlantic cable has been successfully submerged from the Great Eastern, and is now in operation. Not a single hitch occurred, although severe gales and fogs were encountered.

Engineers are already actively engaged in surveying the route of a proposed Persian railway between Teheran and Resht, on the Caspian Sea.

The French Academy has awarded the biennial prize of 20,000*fr.*, founded by Napoleon III., to M. Mariette, corresponding member of the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres, for his remarkable works on Egypt.

The convention between her Majesty and the Shah for continuing the system of telegraphic communication between Europe and India through Persia, which was signed in the English and Persian languages, at Teheran, in December last, has been issued.

From Lisbon we learn that the Portuguese Government has requested the Governor-General of Mozambique to render every assistance in his power to her Britannic Majesty's ships Shearwater and Nassau, which are engaged in taking soundings and gathering information for a chart of the west coast of Africa.

A report is telegraphed from New York of the financial position of the Erie Railway, according to which the funded debt is now forty million dollars, and the capital stock 16,537,000*dols.* The floating debt stands at 1,700,000*dols.*, having been reduced by over four million dollars. It is stated that the earnings of the line are regularly increasing.

The captain of the Murillo (the vessel which ran down the Northfleet) has been sentenced to pay a fine of 200,000*reis* by the Custom House authorities at Lisbon for entering the Tagus on his last voyage from London, and suddenly leaving on the ground that he merely went for orders, whereas he had a cargo for the port.

In consequence of the reduction of service between Italy and Malta to one mail packet each week instead of two, mails for Malta intended for conveyance by that route will, until further notice, be made up every Tuesday morning only. Supplementary mails will be sent on the evening of the same day on the chance of their arriving at Naples in time for the Italian packet. For the future the rates of postage on letters, newspapers, &c., addressed to Heligoland will be assimilated to those charged on correspondence for Germany; and patterns of merchandise may also be sent under the same conditions.

The fogs which are so frequently met with off the banks of Newfoundland have led to the stranding and probable loss of another fine English mail-steamer on the Nova Scotian coast. The human liner City of Washington, bound from Liverpool to New York, encountered very foggy weather throughout the whole voyage across the Atlantic, which it is supposed prevented the ship's exact position from being ascertained, and she ran ashore on a rock not far from the place where the Atlantic was wrecked. Fortunately the passengers and crew, besides a considerable quantity of stores, have been saved, and some hopes were entertained of ultimately floating the steamer.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Bank rate has been reduced from 6 to 5 per cent.

The Common Council have resolved to confer the freedom of the City on Sir Albert David Sassoon.

The receptions of the Lady Mayoress at the Mansion House will be held, as usual, on Tuesday afternoons from three to five o'clock during the present month.

The members of the Navy Club gave their annual banquet to the First Lord of the Admiralty, on Wednesday evening, at Willis's Rooms. Admiral Sir James Hope presided.

On Monday the Royal London Militia was presented with new colours by Lady Rose, wife of Sir William Anderson Rose, Colonel of the regiment, who, however, was prevented by ill-health from being present.

Sir Bartle Frere, the newly-elected President of the Royal Geographical Society, presided on Monday evening for the first time, and made some hopeful remarks on the character of the east coast tribes of Africa.

Monday being the Feast of the Translation of the Relics of St. Thomas of Canterbury, about 300 ladies and gentlemen took part in an excursion, organised by the Catholic Young Men's Association, to the scene of Thomas à Beckett's murder.

On Wednesday the School Ship Society held its annual meeting at the rooms of the Reformatory and Refuge Union, in Parliament-street—Mr. S. Cave, M.P., in the chair. The report, which possessed some satisfactory features, was adopted.

At Wednesday's meeting of the London School Board a number of vestries and district boards were reported as defaulters with respect to the first moiety of the precept issued in February last. The sum unpaid is nearly £11,000. Several tenders for the erection of new schools were accepted.

On Wednesday the annual Grand Archery Fête began at the Crystal Palace. There were seventeen targets in all, and the number of competitors was eighty-six, of whom forty-six were ladies and forty gentlemen. The meeting was continued on Thursday and Friday.

A large gathering was attracted to the annual meeting of the Society for Preventing Cruelty to Animals, held at St. James's Hall on Monday. The society is well supported, and gratifying proofs were afforded that it is doing good. Lord Harrowby presided, and the Duchess of Teck took part in the distribution of prizes to the youthful writers of essays on humanity to animals, the best of which was written by a girl.

The annual distribution of prizes to the children in the Warehousemen's and Clerks' Schools at Caterham took place on Saturday. There are now eighty-seven boys and thirty-nine girls in the institution. Mr. William Leaf, the treasurer, occupied the chair.

A Foresters' fête was held, on Tuesday, at Alexandra Park, in aid of the London Foresters' Asylum. It was the first of a series of demonstrations towards defraying the cost of the wing of the institution at Bexley-heath, the foundation-stone of which was laid in September last, and which already receives eight aged Foresters and their wives.

The summer half-yearly meeting and ninety-third election of the British Orphan Asylum, Mackenzie Park, Slough, was held, on Tuesday, at the Cannon-street Hotel, under the chairmanship of Sir Thomas Tilson. Last January there were 162 inmates in the orphanage, and at the present election twenty-two more were added from a list of forty-six candidates.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 100,021, of whom 33,146 were in workhouses and 66,875 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1872, 1871, and 1870, these figures show a decrease of 4260, 21,656, and 27,735 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 509, of whom 236 were men, 139 women, and 44 children under sixteen.

The Duke of Teck, the president, and the council of the Royal Botanic Society of London gave a fête in their gardens, in Regent's Park, on Wednesday night. The invited guests numbered upwards of 8000, and this number does not include the 2500 fellows and members of the society. The gardens were brilliantly illuminated with thousands of oil lamps, and the electric light, magnesium lights, and coloured fires were also used at intervals.

The annual summer fête of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys was held on Tuesday, at the school house, when, according to custom, the pupils gave specimens of their advancement in education, and received the prizes awarded to them for their proficiency in various branches. At a banquet which followed, a handsome silver salver and a purse of 1000 guineas were presented to Mr. F. Binckes, the secretary, for his valuable services.

Lord Shaftesbury and his daughter, Lady Victoria Ashley, were present, on Wednesday evening, at a gathering of watercress and flower sellers. About 600 of this neglected class were served with a meat tea at the Agricultural Hall, after which they were addressed in words of good advice by their kind-hearted patrons. In the course of the evening a silver card-case, and a handsome basket filled with choice flowers, were presented to the noble Lord and to Lady Victoria Ashley, the result of a penny subscription spontaneously organised among the watercress and flower sellers.

At a meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works it was resolved, upon the motion of Colonel Hogg, M.P., the chairman, to instruct the architect and engineer to consider whether it was necessary to take any sanitary precautions to prevent cholera, and that the works committee be empowered to act accordingly. A circular has been issued from the Local Government Board to the various local authorities advising sanitary measures to prevent the outbreak or spread of cholera in this country. Among these measures deserved prominence is given to the testing of drinking water and the free use of disinfectants in contaminated places.

In addition to the gifts made by the Mercers' Company, as mentioned by us, the following sums have been voted:—£105 to the Chichester training-ships, £105 to the London Orphan Asylum, £52 10s. to St. John's Hospital for Diseases of the Skin, and £52 10s. to the East London Hospital for Children. The Grocers' Company have sent £50 to the Council of the Charity Organisation Society, 15, Buckingham-street. The council of the Working Men's Club and Institute Union have received from the Queen a donation of £50, accompanied by a letter, in which Sir Thomas Biddulph communicates the satisfaction with which Her Majesty has heard of the society's operations, and of her deep interest in all that relates to the welfare of the working classes.

Mr. Bedford held an inquiry, on Monday, at Charing-cross Hospital, on the body of Mr. James Byrne, an American, aged about sixty-two, who threw himself from a window at the Charing-cross Hotel on Friday last. The evidence went to show that the deceased arrived in London on Friday, the 4th inst., and took apartments at the Charing-cross Hotel. About five o'clock the same evening he was seen to leap from the second floor of the building. He fell upon the glass portico over the booking-office of the station, fracturing his skull. He died in Charing-cross Hospital on Saturday. Of late he had appeared distressed in his mind. The jury returned a verdict, "That the deceased committed suicide while in a state of temporary insanity."—Louisa Albrecht, aged nineteen, the daughter of a merchant in Soho, has committed suicide. The deceased suffered from religious monomania, and had often said that the sooner she quitted this world the sooner her mind would be at rest.

The annual flower show in connection with the Window Gardening Society of Westminster was held on Tuesday in College-garden, under the direction of Lady Augusta Stanley. An influential gathering of ladies and gentlemen, together with a large muster of the working classes, indicated the success which has attended the efforts of the society for the past year. The competition was divided into three classes, the first being for working men or women; the second for children in the various local schools for the poor; and the last for the inmates of the parish workhouses and Westminster Hospital. Lord Shaftesbury distributed the awards, consisting of handsomely-bound books, together with sums of money ranging from 6s. to 1s. 6d.—The Hon. Mrs. Percy Wyndham distributed the prizes at the Clerkenwell Flower Show and Industrial Exhibition, held on Thursday week. This exhibition outvalued any of its predecessors in the quality of the plants shown. These, moreover, were supplemented by a number of articles, telling of leisure hours assiduously employed, such as specimens of art, needlework, and modelling. In the last-named class of objects was a small steam-engine, the piston, beam, and other ironwork of which had been neatly manufactured by a policeman out of a poker with which a refractory prisoner of his had essayed to dash out his brains.

The number of births and deaths registered in London last week was 2151 and 1198 respectively. The births were 40 and the deaths 243 below the average. The deaths from diarrhoea, which in the six previous weeks had slowly increased from 12 to 22, rose last week to 68; the average number is, however, 158. The favourable condition of the public health, remarks the Registrar-General, depends very much upon the action of the sanitary authorities of the water companies; the utmost purity of the water supply is required. Diarrhoea should be treated at once, otherwise it may turn to cholera; this applies especially to children. There was 1 death from smallpox, 33 from measles, 11 from scarlet fever, 7 from diphtheria, 43 from whooping-cough, and 24 from different forms of fever; 5 were certified as typhus, 12 as enteric, and 7 as simple continued fever. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis were 341, being 24 above the corrected average; 165 were referred to phthisis, 89 to bronchitis, and 65 to pneumonia. To different forms of violence 38 deaths were referred; 30 were the result of negligence or accident, including 12 from fractures and contusions, 2 from burns and scalds, 5 from drowning, 1 from poison, and 6 from suffocation. The death of a female, aged thirty-three years, was referred to "the sting of a bluebottle fly, charbon labialis, five days." Five cases of suicide and 3 of infanticide were registered. Three of the deaths from fractures and contusions, resulting from negligence or accident, were caused by horses or vehicles in the streets. The widow of a sawyer died on Thursday, at 104, Rotherhithe-street, from "natural decay," whose age was stated to be 101 years. The mean temperature was 61.6 deg., and slightly exceeded the mean for the corresponding week in fifty years.

Canon Miller was installed one of the Canons of Rochester Cathedral, after the first Lesson at evensong, last Saturday.

A stained-glass window has been placed in St. Mary's Church, Halifax, to the memory of the founder, Mr. Michael Stocks, of Upper Shibden Hall, at the cost of his son.

On St. Peter's Day a new church, dedicated to that Apostle, was opened by licence at Helperthorpe, in the archdiocese of York. The church is of Early English style.

The Archbishop of Canterbury and Mrs. Tait entertained the governesses and all the girls belonging to the Clergy Orphan School, St. John's-wood, at Lambeth Palace, last week.

The annual conference of clergy and laity of the diocese of Ely began its sittings on Wednesday in the cathedral. Upwards of a hundred delegates were present. The Bishop of Ely delivered the opening address.

The Upper House of Convocation sat on Friday, the 4th inst., with closed doors, to consider the subject of confession. The Lower House adopted the new rubric providing for a pause after the prayer for the Church Militant.

Under the direction of Mr. Joseph Monday, the annual evening concert in aid of the Holy Trinity Westminster National Schools was given, on Tuesday, at the Pimlico Rooms. The programme was ably carried out.

The annual festival of the St. Andrew's Waterside Mission was held at the Mission Church, at Gravesend, last week, and the services were attended by a large number of clergy and friends of this sailor's mission.

St. Peter's Church, Brackley, has been effectively restored and reopened, the Bishop of Peterborough preaching on the occasion to an immense congregation. Two stained windows have been placed in the church, and the high pews abolished.

The Bishop of Peterborough presided over a successful joint meeting, on Friday, the 4th, of the two great Church Missionary Societies, in his cathedral city. Canon Barry preached in the cathedral, and in the evening deputations from the two societies addressed a crowded joint meeting.

The last of the series of evidential discourses, which were inaugurated by the Christian Evidence Society in May, took place on Monday evening, at St. George's Hall, Langham-place—Lord Lyttelton in the chair. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol was the lecturer, his discourse being founded on the "Present Aspect of Christian Evidences."

The great transept organ in St. Paul's Cathedral is being removed by Bryceson Brothers and Morten, previous to completion at their factory and re-erection in the Victoria Assembly Rooms, Clifton, Bristol. London will therefore lose one of its largest and finest organs, and this magnificent instrument will again be devoted to orchestral and secular music, as at the Panopticon, for which institution it was built in 1853.

The prizes given by Henry W. Peek, M.P., of Wimbledon House, for essays on "The Maintenance of the Church of England as an Established Church," have been awarded by the judges—the Marquis of Salisbury, the Rev. Dr. Hessey, the Rev. Dr. Vaughan, and the Rev. Alfred Ainger, as follow:—First prize, £400, the Rev. Charles Hole, Loxbear Rectory, Tiverton; second prize, £200, the Rev. R. W. Dixon, Georgian-street, Carlisle; third prize, £100, the Rev. CAMBRIDGE.

Mr. Charles Plummer has been elected to the vacant fellowship at Corpus Christi. Mr. Plummer was placed in the first class by the classical moderators in Trinity Term, 1871, and in the same place by the examiners in the final classical school this term.

At a meeting of the Warden and Council of Keble on Monday, June 23, Mr. Henry Hicks Gibbs, M.A., Exeter, was elected a member of the council of the college, in place of Mr. Henry Edward Pellew, M.A., resigned.

It is reported that Mrs. Combe, widow of the late Mr. T. Combe, of the University press, has presented "The Light of the World," by Holman Hunt, to Keble College.

By a resolution of the Council of University College Professor Sheldon Amos's class in jurisprudence has been opened to ladies.

A brilliantly-attended conversation took place on Tuesday evening in the rooms of King's College. The company were received in the lobby by the Rev. Canon Barry, the Principal of the college. Wednesday being commemoration day, the Bishop of Winchester preached in the chapel, taking for his text the words—"But he knoweth the way that I take: when He hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold." (Job xxiii. 10). A large number of the old pupils, as well as of the students' friends, were present. After the service the distribution of prizes took place in the theatre of the college.

On Thursday week the annual speeches were delivered at Harrow School, when there was a large attendance of old Harrovians and other visitors. The Head Master, the Rev. Dr. Butler, took his seat at half-past twelve o'clock, and the speeches began shortly before one. The successful scholars were cordially cheered, and in awarding the prizes the Head Master congratulated them on their success, the result of diligent study and perseverance.

Lord Carnarvon presided, yesterday week, at the speech day of the upper school, at Dulwich College. In his address, after the distribution of the prizes, he extolled the debt of gratitude which society owed to such men as Edward Alleyn, the pious founder of the college, who, according to tradition, had been a personal friend of Shakespeare.

The biennial old Pauline Dinner took place, on the 2nd inst., at Willis's Rooms, with the Hon. Mr. Baron Pollock in the chair. About seventy sat down. The chairman first pledged his "Fellow Paulines" in a loving cup; "To the Pious Memory of Dean Colet, Founder of the School," according to custom; and eventually he proposed the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to St. Paul's School," which was received with great acclamation, and responded to by the High Master, the only non-Pauline present.

In his report to the school management committee of the London School Board Dr. E. A. Abbott speaks of the examination for the Mortimer Memorial Scholarship as one of the most interesting he has ever had the pleasure of conducting. The scholarship was won by W. E. Barker, Portman Chapel National School, Marylebone; and, through the liberality of the present Lord Mayor, Sir Sydney Waterlow, the examiner was enabled to award prizes to ten others of the forty-nine candidates who were examined.

Yesterday evening week the Bishop of Winchester attended St. John's Schools, Kennington, in fulfilment of his office as visitor, and distributed the prizes awarded by the examiners to those boys and girls who have made the greatest progress in the studies pursued at these places of education. The schools are termed middle-class schools, and are attached to the Church of England.

The First Lord of the Admiralty has kindly consented to distribute the prizes at the Royal Naval School, New Cross, on Tuesday, the 29th inst.

The Rev. J. Russell Washbourn, M.A., late scholar of Pembroke College, Oxford, has been appointed Second Classical Master and Chaplain of King Edward VI.'s Grammar School, Bromsgrove.

VISIT OF THE SHAH: GARDEN PARTY AT CHISWICK, GIVEN BY THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

THE SHAH AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

The usual sacrificial act of eliminating measures from the order-book in the beginning of July has been duly performed in the Commons by Mr. Gladstone; but it was wanting in the element of actuality, and therefore of solemnity. It seemed that, instead of the large measures which really, and in fact, stand in the way of the prorogation, a number of bills which have been long "quietly inurned," because they had months ago lost all vitality, were raked up for the purpose of being formally cast away, and therefore no notion of what is absolutely to be done in the way of legislation by Aug. 2 was afforded. Folk Parliamentary would have liked to know what is to become of the Education Amendment Bill and the one Rating Bill of the original trilogy which is left, which are taken to be doomed. Curiously enough, on that occasion, when the Premier was pointing out that every moment of the Parliamentary time left was being cut and curtailed members rose in numerous succession and asked that Government would give them days for airing their hobbies. The absurdity went so far that Mr. Donald Dalrymple had the temerity to demand a special opportunity for bringing on his romantic Habitual Drunkards Bill, his pretext being that its second reading was set aside by the Ministerial crisis in March last. With a certain grim politeness, Mr. Gladstone parried all the attacks made on the precious time of the Session, giving no hope that he could prevent private members' measures lapsing along with his own into the limbo that awaits them.

Everyone knows that the Judicature Bill is the one measure to which the Government could look back with satisfaction when the Session has ceased. A crafty design had evidently been laid by the leaders of the Opposition to set aside this bill, so that in the recess there would be one universal cry that the Session was all barren. The attack was opened by Mr. Disraeli with great skill. Nothing could have been more gentle than his treatment of the Judicature Bill in the abstract. He handled it as Isaac Walton advises a fisher to manipulate the worm he is putting on a hook, "tenderly, as if he loved it;" but every word led up to the suggestion with which he concluded, in a tone and manner of admirable mockery, that it should be withdrawn. As everyone else saw through the device, of course Mr. Gladstone was wide awake; and palpably he was in a proper and natural rage, which gave a force and a fervour to his observations in retort which were admirable. He darted out sarcasms imbued with a bitter humour, and at times rose to a height of indignant eloquence which was really fine. In fact, a more remarkable rhetorical duel has not been witnessed in the House for some time—Mr. Disraeli fencing with the small-sword with consummate dexterity, and Mr. Gladstone making tremendous play, and with equal science, with his terrible cut-and-thrust weapon. The effect on the House was such that practically the discussion was not continued. The second act of the Opposition was subsequently performed in the Lords, with Lord Cairns as the principal actor. Daringly irregular, he came forward to challenge and to discuss a matter which was actually under the consideration of the other House, and he practically sought to order the Commons not to proceed with a piece of legislation on which they were engaged. This he did with an ingenuity and a subtlety which were consummate, for he eluded the apparent irregularity by asserting that he was interposing to prevent an assault on the privileges of the House of Lords. The cry of "Privilege!" has been time out of mind a war-cry in both Houses; and doubtless Lord Cairns thought that it would be caught up with enthusiasm by the Peers. However that may have been, it was not his fault if their Lordships were not stirred to indignation, for his speech was an aggregation of every rhetorical art which could stimulate angry feeling—it was haughty, bitter, sarcastic, contemptuous, venomous; it seemed as if he was in a state of personal pique, and would spare no man in his wrath. Nevertheless there were times during his speech when his taunts and gibes were rendered more biting by the iciness of his tone and manner; while his outbreaks of indignation were the more forcible by the contrast. Whatever other effect he produced, one is certain—namely, that he took the Lord Chancellor by surprise, for he never expected that the question of "Privilege" would have been so craftily raised; and for once Lord Selborne was feeble and ineffective, his reply being mostly apologetic and deprecatory only.

It is to be noted that the Government has got into an odd way of suffering defeats, or just escaping by "flukes" from defeats. An instance of the latter was to be found during the debate, which is everlasting and nearly diurnal, on the Judicature Bill. Observers of the proceedings on this measure must have come to the conclusion that there prevails a strong feeling of antagonism in all parts of the House to the law officers of the Crown, who have the conduct of this measure, and every opportunity is taken to show that the sneering and haughty manner of the Attorney-General, not in the least concealed by studied attempts at outward courtesy, is resented, and that the boisterous audacity of the Solicitor-General is the subject of half-contemptuous mirth. It comes about, therefore, that many a division has been taken which would in other circumstances have been foregone. On a particular day the Attorney-General had proposed an amendment—no matter what—which all the lawyers, or nearly all of them, combined to protest against; and the greater part of the House—to wit, all the Opposition and many Liberals—flung itself into a contest which soon became a fray in the Parliamentary sense: noise, shouts, cheers, and yells, sharp angry speeches and loud cries of "Divide!" making up a clamour which would have been worthy of Pandemonium, if the components of that assembly could have so far forgotten that the "Princes of Darkness are gentlemen" as to kick up an unseemly row. The Ministerial "whips" flitted about, anxious, with "distraction in their aspect," soon to be succeeded by an appearance of absolute consternation, and it was easy to be perceived that if a division had been taken on the amendment the Government would have been stupendously beaten. A dodge was accordingly resorted to; and, though it was earlier than the usual time for breaking off proceedings, a lawyer—waiter on the Government, who sits always just behind the Prime Minister, and within whispering distance—received a hint to move to report progress, which he did with the eager start of obedience which is characteristic of his species. The malcontents, who saw their design about to be frustrated, were furious, but enough men were found to support the motion for striking work for the time, so the catastrophe to the Government was this time averted. Then on another occasion a Liberal member, leading a band of Liberal members, assisted by seven Conservatives or so, put the Ministry into an actual, if not a very large, minority. So practically inapt, if not absurd, was Mr. Henry Richard's motion on international arbitration, that, beyond the Premier's reply to the speech of the mover, there was no real debate; and the impression was complete and general that there would be no division. But, with a sort of malicious glee, Mr. Richard resolved to take advantage of the opportunity to enter his fancy motion on the journals of the House, and he forced on a division. The discussion had concluded at least an hour earlier than was expected; the House was thin; none of the leaders of the Opposition had been present during the sitting; most of the Cabinet Ministers and most of the officials of the second rank were absent; and even the second Ministerial "whip" had for once allowed himself the relaxation of a little festivity, and only arrived in time to perform his function of "telling," and therefore too late to perform his other, still more important, duty of "whipping." Forty-six members of the Opposition and forty-two loyal Liberals supported the Government; but the revolt from the Ministry was so great that they were left in a small minority, and another proof was given of the waning of their influence over their party, and the decline of the "strongest Administration that ever existed."

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

On Friday, the 4th inst., Lord Redesdale moved an address to the Crown praying her Majesty to bestow certain legal life peerages. Earl Granville, while generally in favour of such a reform, thought the present proposal would not succeed. Lord Salisbury argued warmly in favour of strengthening the House as proposed, and combated the fears of Earl Granville regarding the present motion. Among others, Lord Rosebery approved of the scheme. Lord Cairns, though supporting the motion as far as it went, moved the previous question, on the ground that it dealt with only one portion of the subject. The Lord Chancellor favoured the amendment. Lord Redesdale ultimately withdrew the motion. The Law Agents (Scotland) Bill was read the second time, after a brief discussion, during which the Duke of Richmond indicated several amendments.

The Earl of Shaftesbury moved, on Monday, the second reading of his bill for the prevention of frauds on charitable funds, by requiring the registration of all charitable societies, the publication of their accounts, and facility of access to the books in the case of all subscribers. The Marquis of Salisbury, while not objecting to the aim of the bill, thought it would prove utterly unworkable in its present form. Its provisions were of a highly penal nature, and would operate very harshly in the case of those who, in country places, got up small charitable societies, such as clothing clubs and other similar institutions. The Lord Chancellor concurring in this opinion, the Earl of Shaftesbury withdrew the bill. The Royal assent was given by commission to a large number of public and private bills. The Statute Law Revision Bill, the Slave Trade (East African Coasts) Bill, and the Slave Trade Consolidation Bill were read the second time; the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Bill went through Committee; and the Shrewsbury and Harrow Schools Property Bill and the Agricultural Children Bill were read the third time and passed.

The Earl of Kimberley, on Tuesday, moved the second reading of the Canada Loan Guarantee Bill, which was supported by the Earl of Carnarvon and the Duke of Buckingham, and passed without a division. Their Lordships then took into consideration the reasons assigned by the House of Commons for disagreeing with their Lordships' amendment on the Railway and Canal Traffic Bill providing an appeal from the Commons. The Marquis of Ripon moved that the amendment should not be insisted upon, which was opposed by the Duke of Richmond; and on a division being taken 79 voted for the retention of the amendment, against 63 for its abandonment. Lord Cairns then called attention to the changes introduced into the Judicature Bill by the House of Commons, and inquired whether the Government intended during the present Session to lay before Parliament a complete scheme for regulating appeals in Scotland and Ireland analogous to the appellate system for England. His Lordship contended that in altering the Judicature Bill as they had done the Commons have been guilty of a clear, palpable, and most serious infringement of the privileges of the House of Lords, and that it was a question whether the proposed changes would not involve a violation of the Act of Union with Scotland. The Lord Chancellor, after thanking Lord Cairns for his assistance in promoting the Judicature Bill in its earlier stages, reminded the House that the changes complained of had not originated with the Government. Individually he was in favour of bringing all appeals to the same court, but when the bill was in their Lordships' House he did not see such signs of approval as, in the face of the Acts of Union, would have justified the Government in adopting that proposal. Lord Selborne hoped their Lordships would not on account of an inadvertence take the extreme course indicated by Lord Cairns. The Marquis of Salisbury stoutly defended the privileges of the Lords. The Dukes of Argyll and Richmond and Earl Granville having spoken, the subject was dropped.

The Earl of Carnarvon, on Thursday, called attention to some statements which appeared in the public journals respecting the Ashantee war. The Earl of Kimberley regretted that the Government had received no information by this mail upon the subject which would enable them to say whether or not the statements were correct. At the same time, he was of opinion that the statements would turn out substantially true. After a few words from the Earl of Lauderdale, the subject dropped. Several bills upon the paper were advanced a stage.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

At a morning sitting, on Friday, the 4th, the Judicature Bill was resumed in Committee, and progress was made up to the twenty-fourth clause, which was not finally disposed of. In the evening Mr. Plunket urged the claims of the Irish civil servants to increase of salary. The proposal was opposed by the Government; but the motion was carried against them by 130 to 119. For a second time during the day Mr. Whalley was called to order by the Speaker for ventilating his own and the Tichborne claimant's grievances. An effort was made by Mr. Gordon and other members to obstruct the Entailed Estates Bill, and they succeeded to a certain extent, as the House resumed immediately after going into Committee on the bill, which was further postponed till Thursday, as was also the Stipendiary Magistrates Bill.

The House witnessed, on Monday, a "massacre of the innocents." The Trade Marks Registration Bill, the Prevention of Crime Bill, and others relating to bribery, Irish fisheries, and public prosecutors, are to be postponed till next Session. The Judicature Bill was again taken in Committee, and considerable progress made. The Military Manœuvres Bill was read the second time, the Militia (Service) Bill passed through Committee, and the Public Meetings (Ireland) Bill was rejected without a division.

The Judicature Bill was resumed in Committee at a morning sitting on Tuesday, and considerable progress made, the fifty-fourth clause having been reached. At the evening sitting Mr. Richard brought forward the subject of international arbitration. Mr. Gladstone, though entirely approving the aim of the motion, doubted whether it was not more likely to be forwarded by individual acts, like the Geneva Arbitration, than by the more ambitious policy of attempting to draw all foreign Powers into general communication. With regard to Great Britain, he pointed out that there was gradually growing up a practice, which in time would harden into rule, of availing ourselves of every opportunity of promoting the peaceful settlement of all disputes. Sir W. Lawson spoke in favour of the motion; after which Lord Enfield moved the "Previous Question." On a division, however, the House declined to adopt this mode of evading a decision by 98 to 88; and Mr. Richard's resolution was then put and carried.

Wednesday afternoon was occupied with Sir Dominic Corrigan's bill to prevent the sale of liquor in Ireland on Sundays. The measure was rejected by 140 votes to 83. The Burials Bill was talked out. The General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill and the Civil Bills, &c. (Ireland), Bill were read the second time; the Married Woman's Property Act (1870) Amendment Bill (No. 2) was passed through Committee; the Lords' Amendments to the Sites for Places of Religious Worship Bill were agreed to; and the Tramways Provisional Orders Confirmation Bill was read the third time and passed.

On Thursday, in reply to Sir Stafford Northcote, Mr. Chichester Fortescue said his attention had naturally been called to the letter which the hon. member for Derby (Mr. Plimsoll) had written to the secretary of the Merchant Shipping Commission. "I have called upon him," added Mr. Fortescue, "to state to me, as the person appointed to look after the administration of that department, and also to protect the public officers serving under that department, to furnish me with the names of the 'many officers of the Board of Trade' whom he accuses of corruption, and the grounds and nature of his charges, or, if he still perseveres in his refusal to do so, I have asked him to retract those charges. I have not yet received an answer." Mr. Gladstone made a statement as to the intentions of the Government with respect to the Judicature Bill. Since Tuesday last serious doubts had been entertained, in quarters entitled to much authority, as to whether the proposals which the Government intended to make with respect to the Irish and Scotch appeals was consistent with the privileges of the other House of Parliament. It was difficult to say what was meant by the "rights of the Peerage," but he thought it was a reasonable opinion that that expression did not point so much to what concerned the duties of the House of Lords collectively as it did to questions affecting the title of individuals to sit in that House. Having quoted a series of cases in which the privileges of the one House were affected by the legislative proceedings of the other without objections being raised on that score, the right hon. gentleman said he was sure that every member would desire to avoid conflict with the House of Lords, which had voluntarily sacrificed a part of its jurisdiction, and he thought there was a mode by which the desired end could be attained. He proposed to retain in the amendments everything that related to the new court of appeal and to all collateral measures. If that was done they would forbear to ask the House to adopt those portions which related to the House of Lords. If that House desired well to this measure their Lordships would find ready to their hands a Court evidently meant for the three kingdoms, but nothing that would destroy their jurisdiction on Scotch and Irish appeals which they might think proper to surrender. He should propose to recommit the bill on the report, so that no time might be lost, and in the course of the evening the Government would make the necessary alteration in the amendments. He thought this would be an act of courtesy and conciliation to the House of Lords, while it would preserve the title of this House to deal with the subject. Mr. Bouvier thought that the claim of the House of Lords was unfounded, for in the Acts uniting Scotland and Ireland to England—Acts which emanated in the House of Commons—the jurisdiction of the Upper House was much interfered with in the case of the Irish and Scotch peers. Mr. Disraeli said there was no identity between the precedents which the Prime Minister had quoted and the instance to which he wished to apply them, for in none of them could there have been a collision between the Houses of Parliament. Only one of them—viz., the Septennial Act—seemed to have the semblance of a precedent, but that referred not to the House of Commons, but to the Parliament of England. The privileges of the House of Lords did not rest upon Blackstone, whose passage was merely quoted in support of an argument. When the House had had time to digest the queer proposition of the Government, no doubt they would come to a decision which would maintain the privileges of both Houses. The House subsequently went into committee on the bill.

The passengers and officers of the steam-ship Windsor Castle, on her homeward voyage from Capetown, subscribed £10 in aid of the funds of the National Life-Boat Institution.

The season of the Royal London Yacht Club closed last Saturday, when Mr. Telford Field's Dione was successful in a match. The second match of the season of the Prince of Wales Yacht Club took place on Tuesday. The Surge won the first prize (£20), and the Arrow the second prize (£10).

A deputation has waited upon the Marquis of Ripon and Mr. Forster, to ask that a school of science and art and a library might be furnished at Bethnal-green Museum. The Lord President urged that, so long as the pictures of Sir Richard Wallace remained in the museum, there was no space for a school, but those pictures were themselves the best possible encouragement of art. A promise was given to attend to the library.

The vessels of the Channel Squadron which are on their way to Tromsø, Norway, to be present during the coronation of King Oscar, arrived in Leith roads on Tuesday afternoon. The ships are—the Agincourt, which carries Admiral Hornby's flag; Northumberland, Sultan, Hercules, and Valorous. The Provost and magistrates of Leith visited the Agincourt in the afternoon and paid their respects to the Admiral.

In an article headed "Scientific Results of the Month," which appeared in our issue of Saturday last, it was stated that "Messrs. Smith and Locke's method of casting metals under compression differs very little from the method employed, some years since, by Sir Joseph Whitworth, unless it be in some immaterial particulars." It was also stated that "this is one of the inventions which have been carried across the Atlantic, and then re-imported as a novelty." Mr. J. J. Ch. Smith, the patentee of "the Smith and Locke Process for Casting Metals by Continuous Pressure," writes denying this statement, and we willingly insert his correction. He says:—"I beg to inform you that my invention was patented in America in 1867, and complete protection was obtained in 1868. Sir Joseph Whitworth's invention is for compressing cast metal; but I cast metal by compression, and, although the idea in both cases is to gain one end, my process and its results are entirely different from Sir Joseph's. This has been confirmed by the most eminent engineers in this country, and the claims in my patent pronounced valid, in contradistinction to anything contained in the specification of Sir Joseph Whitworth. I am prepared to prove these statements, and to explain to anyone skilled in the subject the details of my process, as exhibited at the company's offices at Ludgate-circus."

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The presence of Eccossa completely spoilt the July and Chesterfield Stakes at Newmarket last week; and, even with the deeds of Achievement, Lady Elizabeth, and Cantiniere fresh in our memory, we are convinced that the son of Blair Athol and Margery Daw is the speediest youngster that has ever appeared on the turf. From the fact of his being always ridden right away from his field, it has been argued that the stable know that he will not struggle if collared at the finish of a race; but we put quite a different construction on these tactics, and think that Mr. Lefevre, being quite uninfluenced by betting considerations, and naturally proud of such a wonder, likes to see him make an example of his opponents. The Cheveley Stakes, in which Prince Charlie gave Blenheim a year, a stone, and a head beating, was quite the most brilliant race of the meeting. There can be no doubt that "the invincible" had to gallop; still, we fancy that he won pretty easily at the finish, and had the distance been a little further, would have squandered his field as usual. Tuesday's racing was far superior to that of any other day, though there were some very close and exciting finishes on the Friday. Houghton ran exceedingly well, and by his defeat of Falkland at level weights drew renewed attention to the great chance that Uhlán must possess for the Goodwood Stakes. Fordham rode Houghton in the most brilliant style, and the great jockey, who won nine events during the week, never exhibited to greater advantage his wonderful patience and power of making his effort exactly at the right moment.

Messrs. Tattersall put up an immense number of horses during the July meeting; but, with the exception of Mr. Gee's yearlings, there was no sale of any great importance. Thirty youngsters belonging to that gentleman averaged 191 gs., which must be considered very satisfactory when it is remembered that he purchased many of his mares in foal by unfashionable sires. Mr. Vyner gave 1000 gs., the highest price of the sale, for a very nice colt by Cambuscan—Little Lady; and the Lord Clifden—Potash colt fell to M. Lefevre's bid of 700 gs. The colt by Lord Clifden—Maid of the Mist was also greatly admired, and Mr. Houldsworth took him very cheap at 530 gs. On the Thursday the stud of the late Mr. John Kirk, whose melancholy death occurred in the Derby week, were disposed of. Glowworm, who has improved wonderfully in appearance since last season, made 1000 gs.; but Peggy Dawdle, owing to all her engagements being void, only reached half that sum. The horses belonging to the late Earl of Zetland were sold on Monday. The fourteen lots realised 6172 gs. Lord Lonsdale bought King Lud for 1650 gs., and Mr. Rice gave 1500 gs. for Klodive.

The M.C.C. and Ground v. Middlesex was played at the commencement of this week, and the club proved too strong for the county, winning easily by 84 runs. There were eight double figures in the first innings of the M.C.C., while Mr. I. D. Walker (40 and 40) and Mr. E. Rutter (16 and, not out, 30) fought hard to avert defeat. The match between the South of England United Eleven and Twenty-two of Leicester and Leicestershire was closed on Wednesday, the latter winning with twelve wickets to fall.

The Mayor of Leeds (Alderman Oxley) on Wednesday formally opened a new bridge across the River Aire, to replace an old structure.

About one o'clock on Thursday morning a fire broke out on the premises of the Civil Service Supply Association, Monkwell-street. The upper floors were burnt out, and other parts of the premises, with their contents, were damaged.

Mr. Joseph Hoare, of Child's Hill House, Hampstead, entertained, on Wednesday, about 400 of the agents of the London City Mission in his grounds at Hampstead. The guests were joined by a large company of ladies and gentlemen. Among the latter was the Earl of Shrewsbury, who after dinner addressed the missionaries on the subject of their work.

The Times says:—"At a meeting of leading persons connected with the staple manufactures of the country, held at Stafford House, on Wednesday, by permission of the Duke of Sutherland, resolutions were adopted in favour of the suggestion for presenting, by subscription, a short line of model railway to the Emperor of China, with a view of creating a sense of the vast benefits to be derived by the introduction of such works."

A series of important and interesting siege operations took place at Chatham, on Thursday week, in the presence of the Duke of Cambridge and a large number of spectators; the principal features being the explosion of a mine on the new ravelin, followed by attacks on and escalades of Prince Henry's bastion and the Gillingham face of the fortifications. Everything appears to have passed off very satisfactorily.

The matches last Saturday in connection with the Royal Mersey Yacht Club were of unusual interest. The first prize, a £70 cup, was awarded to the Arethusa, 58 tons; and the second, a £30 cup, to the Vanguard, 60 tons. The £50 cup was won by Norman; the £30 cup, for 15 and 20 ton yachts, by the Sunshine; and the £20 cup, for 10-ton yachts, by the Cloud. On Monday there were races for prizes amounting to £225, and on Tuesday the ocean race from Liverpool to Barrow took place.

A general court of the governors of the Royal Humane Society was held, on Wednesday, at the offices, Trafalgar-square—Mr. J. M. Cave in the chair. It appeared from the report of the society's operations for the last half year, which was presented by Mr. Lambton Young, the secretary, that the number of persons rescued by the society since December last had been seventy-six; nine were beyond recovery; and during the same time seven were prevented from attempting suicide; three were referred to this general court for the presentation of the silver medallion. Of the Hyde Park cases during the same time, thirteen were successfully treated, one was beyond recovery, one was found drowned, and four prevented from committing suicide. Since the opening of the Waterloo Bridge Receiving House, in February last, twenty-two cases had occurred, some of which had been taken to the society's establishment, and successfully treated there. The number of batlers in the Serpentine from the commencement of the year had been 92,536, and there had been fourteen accidents while bathing, one of which proved fatal. The committee of the Stanhope Memorial Fund had handed over to the Royal Humane Society the amount collected (£387 19s. 8d.), on condition that a gold medal, to be called the Stanhope Gold Medal, be given every year by the Royal Humane Society to the most deserving case that is brought to its notice during the preceding year. On the motion of the chairman the report was adopted. Silver medallions were then presented to Sub-Lieutenant R. T. Wood, of her Majesty's ship Endymion, for trying to save John Buller, able seaman, who accidentally fell overboard at Portland, on Jan. 18 last; to V. H. B. Kennett, for trying to save Charles Knight Foster, who was capsized from a boat in the Thames at Putney on March 20 last; and to Phillips Dowson, for saving two Japanese coolies, who were capsized from a barge in the harbour of Yokohama, Japan, on Jan. 12 last.

LAW AND POLICE.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

Two surgical witnesses, Mr. Bernard Holt and Mr. Seymour Hayden, reported, on Friday, the 4th inst., upon the examination of the Claimant in presence of Sir W. Ferguson, Mr. Canton, and Dr. Sutherland. During a detailed description of all the marks found Mr. Holt made various statements contradictory of the Claimant's own evidence, as well as incompatible with what has been proved respecting Roger Tichborne. The latter had an issue on his arm, and the Claimant professed to have had a seton, but no traces of either could be found on his arms. On the ankles there was no mark of a puncture or a vein opening, though Roger had been bled on both ankles at Canterbury. Witness examined the defendant in court as to the statement that Roger had been bled on the temporal artery, but he could find no marks on either temple. The thumb-nail which has been so prominently put forward as peculiar to Roger and the defendant Mr. Holt declared to be perfectly normal. Since seeing it he had produced the same appearance on one of his own nails. Mr. Hayden, who indorsed most of Mr. Holt's evidence, stated that it would be possible, in the course of three or four weeks, to produce a thumb like the defendant's. Captain Angell, of the Australian liner Collingrove, deposed to having known Arthur Orton intimately as a boy, also to having seen him at Wapping on his return from South America, and again at Hobart Town. In 1863 Mr. Robinson told him that he had been named an executor in Roger Tichborne's will. He was proud of it, though neither he nor his family had ever known the Tichbornes. He afterwards met the defendant at Mr. Holmes's office along with Colonel Lushington and Charles Orton. He acknowledged not recognising him at first, but as the interview proceeded "he began to see signs of Arthur Orton." The captain's final conclusion, as stated to the Court, was that the defendant had lost his identity, and was Arthur Orton without knowing it. There was certainly, he said, a strong resemblance between him and the late Mr. George Orton. Similar testimony was given by Mr. Pound, formerly a resident at Wapping. William Scowen, porter at Croydon station, on the London and Brighton Railway, gave an amusing account of having carried a parcel for the defendant from his house to a Mrs. Brand, at 110, Keating-road, Bermondsey. The parcel was taken in by Charles Orton, who said he was "Mrs. Brand's husband."

The progress of the trial was interrupted on Monday by an application from Dr. Kenealy to grant the defendant a few days' leave of absence, as he was suffering from erysipelas. This, after some discussion, was agreed to. The defendant having left the court, Mr. Thomas King, photographer on the staff of the Stereoscopic Company, was examined as to the peculiarity of the thumb shown in several of the photographs produced. He attributed it to the fading away of the focus of the lens. Mr. Charles Chabot, the expert in handwriting, stated the result of his examination of three sets of letters submitted to him—the defendant's, Arthur Orton's, and Roger Tichborne's. His general conclusion was that Orton's and the defendant's were in the same handwriting, but that Roger Tichborne's was different from either. He based his opinion chiefly on a series of nine peculiarities found in Roger's letters. The original and photographed letters put in were minutely examined by the Court and the jury.

The evidence of Mr. Chabot was continued on Wednesday. He resigned the witness-box for a short time to the Right Hon. Hugh Childers, M.P., who was in Melbourne at the head of the Commissioners of Customs from December, 1853, to February, 1857, and was called to speak to the state of the labour market in Melbourne in the summer of 1854, when the Claimant, as he states, arrived in that port. Mr. Childers was positive that at that time the difficulties respecting sailors, in consequence of the gold diggings, had nearly come to an end; in fact, there were more ships leaving Melbourne than arriving. Mrs. MacAlister, who arrived in this country from Victoria on Tuesday was under examination. She said that before she married Mr. MacAlister she was the wife of Mr. William Foster, by whom Arthur Orton was employed. She was quite certain that the defendant (who was again in court) was Arthur Orton.

On Thursday Mr. Matthew MacAlister, the husband of the lady examined on the previous day, was in the witness-box. He remembered a stockman named Arthur Orton in Mr. Foster's employment. According to the books, Orton left in October, 1858. After that time witness frequently saw him in Sale. Orton was generally known as "the butcher." He had a rough voice and a cockney accent; there was nothing French in it. Witness had a distinct recollection of Orton, and he and the defendant were the same man; of that he had not the slightest doubt. Some documentary evidence having been produced, the case for the prosecution was closed, and the trial was adjourned to Monday, the 21st, to enable Dr. Kenealy to prepare his speech for the defence.

Vice-Chancellor Malins has disposed of an application by Lord Colchester and Sir Robert Dallas, executors of the will of the late Lord Ellenborough, relative to some Exchequer Bills and cash amounting altogether to £700, and representing interest accumulated on money of suitors temporarily deposited with his Lordship in his capacity as holder of the sinecure office of Chief Clerk of the Court of Queen's Bench, now abolished. It was decided that no valid claim could be made by the executors to the fund.

In the Court of Probate, on Wednesday, the hearing of the case "Farrell v. Gordon" was resumed. The plaintiffs, as executors, propounded the will and ten codicils of Baroness Weld, under which her property, to the amount of about £60,000, was left to Archbishop Manning and other Roman Catholic dignitaries for the benefit of the Roman Catholic Church. The defendants, who are the sister and mother of the testatrix, opposed on the grounds of undue influence, incapacity, and that the will and codicils were not the will and codicils of the testatrix. The jury, without leaving the box, pronounced for the will.

The Claimant's bankruptcy came before the Court again on Wednesday, on its fourteenth adjournment. It was further adjourned till Nov. 5, pending the result of the proceedings in the Court of Queen's Bench.

Messrs. C. and R. H. Groombridge, of Paternoster-row, booksellers and publishers, have presented a petition for liquidation, estimating their liabilities at £16,000, against assets £10,000, consisting of books, debts, stock, copyrights, &c.

Startling evidence has been adduced at the Irish Assizes of the efficacy of the Peace Preservation Act. In Meath, where the Act is in operation, the Lord Chief Justice has congratulated the county on its almost entire immunity from crime; whereas in Clare the grand jury have made a presentment deploring the atrocious crimes that have occurred in the county and calling for the general adoption of the Act.

The Court of Session at Edinburgh has delivered judgment in the Mar estate case. The action was raised by John F. E. G. Eiskine, who claimed to be Earl of Mar on the death of his uncle, the late Earl of Mar and Kellie. His claim was resisted by the Earl of Kellie, and the judgment of the Lord Ordinary, who decided that the pursuer has no claim on the estate, has been affirmed by the Judges of the First Division.

In a suit brought in the Scottish Court of Session by Lady Pollok against her husband, Sir Hew Pollok, Lord Gifford on Tuesday granted separation, as prayed, and awarded her Ladyship an allowance of £500 per annum.

The July session of the Central Criminal Court was opened on Monday, with forty-four prisoners for trial. The Deputy-Recorder, in his charge to the grand jury, recapitulated the history of the charge against the Bidwells, Noyes, and Macdonnell, who are accused of having committed the great forgeries upon the Bank of England. In the course of the day true bills were found, and the trial was deferred until the August session. The hearing of the Highgate money-lending case was again postponed, in consequence of the continued absence of Mrs. Easterby, the prosecutrix. George Pearce Hill, a clerk, pleaded guilty to a charge of theft, and was ordered to undergo twelve months' imprisonment. Alfred Cracknell was convicted of having been on some premises with intent to commit a robbery, and was sent to prison for two years. William Cotton pleaded guilty to a charge of fraudulent bankruptcy, and was sentenced to two months' imprisonment, with hard labour. William Berry was found guilty of having made a false declaration in connection with the commutation of a pension, and was awarded four months' hard labour. At Tuesday's sittings sentence was passed upon the three members of the Goldsmith family whose names have been prominent in connection with charges of fraud and forgery. Montague and Rebecca, who had been convicted of felony, were each sentenced to five years' penal servitude; while Michael, whose offence was misdemeanour only, escaped with two years' hard labour. Joseph Lee, a clerk, and Thomas Parry, a butler, pleaded guilty to charges of forgery, and each was sentenced to five years' penal servitude. A similar punishment was awarded to Edward Lewis, a clerk, who was convicted of having obtained food and lodging under false pretences. In the course of the day Mr. Commissioner Kerr complained of the difficulty experienced in hearing the witnesses, owing to the conversation amongst the members of the Bar relative to the Tichborne trial. With the view of obtaining quietness, the learned Judge and the jury removed into another court. The Bidwells, together with George Macdonnell and Edwin Noyes Hill, have pleaded not guilty to the charges against them; and the Deputy Recorder has granted to each prisoner the restoration of a sum of £100 for the purposes of defence.—Reuben Alexander Bersen, or Berser Reuben Allender, said to be an Austrian converted Jew, seeking to become a minister of the Free Church of Scotland, was, on Wednesday, convicted of bigamy, the evidence disclosing a career of the most abandoned profligacy, and the sentence passed on the prisoner by Commissioner Kerr has been five years' penal servitude. Apostolos Demetrius Sfezzo, a Greek, was indicted under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act for feloniously attempting to leave England, taking with him a sum of money and other property which he ought to have handed over to his trustee in bankruptcy. As, however, there was no doubt that he had acted in ignorance of the law, he was merely ordered to enter into his own recognisances to come up for judgment when called upon to do so. Morris and Sarah Welsh, charged with having committed a highway robbery, were acquitted. Alfred Church, a labourer, who was indicted for the manslaughter of John Humphries, was acquitted. A similar verdict was returned in the case of John Hancock, who had been committed for the manslaughter of James Grey.

Mr. John Pullen, a cattle-dealer, of Chichester, has been summoned, at Guildhall, for sending unwholesome meat to the Metropolitan Meat Market for sale as human food. The defendant is a wealthy cattle-dealer, carrying on business at Chichester. He had a cow which had been suffering for some time from hip disease. On June 12 it was found necessary to have her slaughtered. A portion of the carcass was then dressed and sent up to the London market for sale. The inspector's attention was called to it, and it was condemned. It was urged for the defence that the defendant believed the meat to be good when he sent it up to London, and that he and his family dined off parts of it. Sir Thomas Dakin said there was no doubt, from the evidence of the inspectors, that the meat was unfit for human food. The imposition of fines being of no use, he sentenced the defendant to one month's imprisonment in the common gaol.

At Marlborough-street Mr. Abraham Beliaeff, who, under the influence of too much champagne, had struck a policeman a violent blow on the face with a stick, was sentenced to a month's imprisonment.

An Italian organ-player has been summoned at the Marylebone Police Court for having played upon his instrument to the annoyance of a lady residing near Manchester-square. The defendant had commenced to play at half-past ten at night, and refused to go away when requested to do so. The magistrate imposed a penalty of 10s., or seven days' imprisonment.

An elderly man, charged as Mr. Montague—which title, however, he disclaimed—was accused, at Wandsworth, with imposing upon Miss Clara Steggles by pretending to tell her fortune. He professed, as usual, to derive information from the stars regarding all the chief events of life, and that which he communicated to Miss Steggles had especial reference to matrimony. It assured her that she would be married in her twenty-first, twenty-fourth, or twenty-sixth year, and hinted the latter the better. The astrologer was ordered to undergo three months' hard labour.

There has been a conviction at the Clerkenwell Police Court for having left a tramway car whilst in motion, and the defendant, a surgeon, was fined 20s. and the costs. At Hammer-smith a penalty similar in amount has been imposed upon a gentleman who had attempted to enter a train in motion upon the London and South-Western Railway.

Mr. Tressler drowned himself in the river Lea about three weeks ago, and his widow has been charged at Worship-street with attempting to commit suicide at the same place. She was remanded for a week to the House of Detention.

Henry Tommey, who claims the double distinction of being a Waterloo veteran and almost a nonagenarian, has been fined 20s. for a street obstruction. He and an accomplice, named Taylor, paraded Cheapside with a placard headed "Gross Injustice by the House of Lords," Tommey having been aggrieved by a judgment of Lord St. Leonards involving a large sum of money.

At the Quarter Sessions at Windsor, on Monday, there were no prisoners for trial; and, according to the usual custom, the Recorder was presented with a pair of white kid gloves by the Mayor. This is the second occasion this year that there has been a maiden session.

A Spanish interpreter was fined £100 and costs by the magistrates of North Shields, on Monday, for having attempted to bribe a customs tide surveyor at that port to overlook the smuggling of a quantity of tobacco and spirits.

MR. HENRY COLE, C.B.,

NEW MUSIC.

DAN GODFREY'S NEW QUADRILLE.
THE PERSIAN QUADRILLE, on Persian Air. By DAN GODFREY, Bandmaster Grenadier Guards. Performed at Buckingham Palace, and re-mandated by the Shah. Illustrated. Price 4s. 6d. post-free, 5s. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

BY COMMAND.
THE PERSIAN NATIONAL MARCH. Arranged for the Piano-forte by DAN GODFREY (Band Master, Grenadier Guards). Illustrated with a Portrait of the Shah. This march is to be played (by command) by all the military and other bands during the visit of the Shah to this country; and should, therefore, be taken to order "Dan Godfrey's" Persian March. Price 2s. 6d. post-free, 3s. 6d. Military Band Parts, 4s. 6d. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NEW NUMBERS OF CHAPPELL'S
MUSICAL MAGAZINE.
 No. 108. Schumann's Short Piano Pieces. No. 109. Twelve Popular Songs by Mrs. Hemans. No. 110. New and Popular Dance Music by Strauss, Dan Godfrey, &c., &c. Price 1s. each Number: post-free, 1s. 3d. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S COMPLETE
TUTOR FOR THE PIANO-FORTE. 4s. 6d. post-free, 5s. This work contains the fullest instructions for the instrument, the Scale, a complete series of Exercises, a variety of new and modern Preludes, and a very large selection of the best and newest music, expressly arranged for this work, and excluding all the old and hackneyed airs so generally found in other tutors. The music is simple and easily understood, and nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely requisite for the pupil to learn at the commencement of his studies. The Publishers confidently invite public attention to this work, as at once the cheapest, the best, and the most modern of all elementary works on the piano-forte. Although the price is so low, the work consists of sixty pages of the full music style.—Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

W. SMALLWOOD'S NEW PIECES.
 IVY LEAVES. Galop. Illustrated. 2s. HAWTHORN BLOSSOMS. Petit Morceau. Illustrated. 2s. MOONLIT STREAM. Morceau de Salon. Illustrated. 2s. ALPINE ECHOES. Reminiscence. Illustrated. 2s. Post-free, 1s. 6d. each.—Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

 CHANGED. 4s. BLIND GIRL'S DREAM. 4s. IT WAS EARLY IN THE SPRINGTIME. 2s. Post-free for half price.—Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

GOUNOD'S NEW MARCH ROMAINE.
 Companion piece to the celebrated "Silver Trumpets." Composed expressly for the Piano. Price, for Piano, Organ (with pedal obbligato), or Harmonium, 2s. Piano Duet, 4s. Full Orchestra, 8s.; Septet, 2s. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

A NEW WORK FOR THE ORGAN OR HARMONIUM.
ORIGINAL VOLUNTARIES for the ORGAN or HARMONIUM. Composed in an easy form for the use of Amateurs by GEORGE FORD. Price 4s.; post-free, 5s. "This work will be found of immense value to all performers on either of the instruments for which it is written." Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO'S SCHOOL-ROOM
PIANO-FORTE. In Canadian Walnut or Mahogany Case. Price TWENTY GUINEAS. This instrument combines good quality of tone and excellence of workmanship. It has the merit of standing well in tune, and is capable of enduring hard school practice without going out of order.—Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO'S YACHT
PIANO. with Folding Keyboard, Cheek Action, Trichord Treble. In Solid Mahogany or Black Canadian Walnut Case, THIRTY GUINEAS; or in Maple, THIRTY-FIVE GUINEAS. Constructed for Ships' Cabins, to occupy the smallest possible space, and to stand the damp of a sea voyage; the back is strengthened with iron bars and metallic plates, and the whole of the mechanism is of the best quality.—Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

DULCIANA ORGAN HARMONIUM, by
 Alexander. This new instrument is especially adapted to the Drawing-Room. It has the sweetest tone possible, resembling the soft dulciana stop of the best organ, and, by a new patent air chest, is free from the slightest harshness. Price, 3 stops, oak, 10s.; mahogany, 12s.; or, rosewood, 14s. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO'S ORGAN
HARMONIUMS on the THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM.—These instruments have the round tone of the organ without the disadvantage of requiring tuning, with much quicker articulation than the American Organ, and at half the cost, at Chappell and Co.'s, New Bond-street.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-
GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case, Five Octaves, and Two Foot-Boards. The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured. The instruments now offered to the public will be found distinct of all that have hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and organ-like. Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows. The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect and without extra cost. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO'S CHURCH and
DRAWING-ROOM ORGANS on the THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM of HIRE, from 18s. per year, at Chappell and Co.'s, 50, New Bond-street. Lists on application.

VISIT OF THE SHAH OF PERSIA.

The departure of his Majesty Nasr-ood-Deen, Shah of Persia, on Saturday last, after a sojourn of seventeen days in this country, brought to a close that brilliant series of public and private entertainments, which has afforded many subjects for the Illustrations in two recent Numbers of this Journal. The series is here completed by adding several others, which represent some incidents of his Majesty's two days' stay at Trentham, in Staffordshire, the seat of the Duke of Sutherland; the garden party at Chiswick, given immediately upon his return to London, on Saturday, the 28th ult., by their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, when her Majesty the Queen was one of the Royal guests; the special Crystal Palace fête in honour of the Shah, on Monday, the 30th, with his second and more private visit to the Crystal Palace, on the next Thursday; his inspection of Madame Tassaud's Exhibition of Waxwork Figures, on the Wednesday; his embarkation, last Saturday, on board the French Government steam-yacht Rapide, for conveyance across the Channel, with an escort of French ships of war; concluding with a sketch of the attitude of our Royal Asiatic visitor, as he stood on the deck of the steamer, apart from his courtiers and servants, to take a last lingering look at the shores of England, where he has been so handsomely treated. These incidents will be related with less minuteness than those of a more official and ceremonial character which were heretofore described.

Trentham Hall, which is situated near

ON THE TERRACE AT TRENTHAM.

Barlaston, on the road from Stone to Stoke-upon-Trent and Newcastle-under-Lyne, is one of the most superb mansions in rural England. It stands on the site of an old priory of Augustinian monks which was suppressed at the Reformation, when the place was bestowed on the Leveson family, one of whom, Sir Richard Leveson, K.C.B., about two hundred years ago, bequeathed his estates to a nephew, Sir William Gower, Baronet, founder of the Gower peerage, improved with an Earldom in 1746, the Marquisate of Stafford in 1786, and the Dukedom of Sutherland in 1833. The park has great advantages of wood and water, but is low and said to be rather damp; the gardens, which extend over sixty-five acres, are extremely beautiful. They comprise the terrace garden, the Italian garden, the parterre, the trellis walk, the nursery garden, and the so-called Rainbow Walk. The house is a fine Italian building, with a belvedere tower and campanile 100 ft. high; adjoining the hall is the old church, restored in this age, which serves as a private chapel. It was on the Thursday evening, the 26th ult., after his visit that day to Liverpool, that the Shah went to Trentham, where he arrived at eight o'clock. The Duke of Sutherland met his Royal guest on the platform of the Trentham railway station, and conducted him to the hall, where he was received by the Duchess, the Marquis of Stafford, Lord Albert and Lord Ronald Leveson-Gower. Among the other visitors staying there was the Earl of Shrewsbury. The Italian garden was illuminated that evening with coloured lamps, which had a very pretty effect, the lines of the long balustrades and rows of urns with the forms of the arbours being distinctly shown in a variety of colours. A band played in the garden, while the Shah lounged on the terrace, or smoked his quiet pipe in the conservatory, reposing after the fatigues of his journey and the bustle of Liverpool. Next day he went to Crewe, as stated in our last, to see the London and North-Western Railway factory of locomotive engines; thence on to Manchester, for a sight of the cotton factories. He returned that Friday evening to Trentham, where he slept a second night. While there he rambled about the park, saw the deer, went in a boat on the lake, and joined the players in the bowling-alley, with a cigarette between his lips. Before leaving Trentham, which he did at eleven on the Saturday morning, his Majesty looked at the North Staffordshire pack of foxhounds, brought into the courtyard for his inspection. Altogether, he enjoyed his stay at Trentham very much, or it would have been hard to please him anywhere in this country.

Having got back to London at half-past three in the afternoon, his Majesty, about five o'clock, drove to Chiswick, where the Prince and Princess of Wales entertained him, and the Queen their mother, with other Royal and noble guests, and a numerous company besides, in the gardens of the Duke of Devonshire's villa. The Persians of his Majesty's suite were in attendance, as well as the Earl of Morley, Rear-Admiral Lord F. Kerr, Colonel the Hon. H. Byng, Major-General the Hon. A. Hardinge, and the members of the British mission who brought his Majesty from Belgium to England. Her Majesty the Queen, the Cesarewitch of Russia and the Cesarevna, Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Arthur, Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck were present. The band of the Grenadier Guards, conducted by Mr. D. Godfrey, played during the afternoon.

The entertainment provided by the Crystal Palace Company for the state visit of the Shah, the Cesarewitch, and the English Princes and Princesses, on Monday week, was rather spoiled by the rainy weather, but all these illustrious persons were there shortly before seven o'clock. They were met at the Alexandra Gate, at the north end of the palace, by Mr. T. Hughes, M.P., chairman of the directors, and by Mr. George Grove, the secretary, who led them along a path, carpeted with scarlet, down the nave, to the gorgeous pavilion erected on the stage of the theatre in the central transept opposite the great organ. This pavilion was formed of golden arches in the Alhambra style, with a canopy of glittering Persian lions and suns in gold; the pillars and galleries were adorned with flags and floral wreaths, and a fountain played in the centre of the floor. The palace was crowded with gaily-dressed spectators. The Shah took his seat in a chair of honour upon the dais, with the Princess of Wales at his left hand, and her sister, the Cesarevna, on his right; the Prince of Wales, in plain dress, sat next her Imperial Highness, while the Russian Crown Prince sat on the other side of the Princess of Wales. The Duke of Edinburgh, Princess Louise, the Duke of Teck, Prince Christian, and Prince Waldemar of Denmark, Princess Mary of Cambridge, the Duchess of Cambridge, and the Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, with the Shah's half-brother and one or two other Persian Princes, sat in the lower seats of the front semicircle. The concert was over before they arrived, but the Shah was probably more amused by a gymnastic exhibition of the German Turnverein, climbing ropes, turning on the horizontal bar, and wielding the big wooden club, which he and the Princes and Princesses handled for a moment to try its weight. The feats of the Japanese jugglers, and of a Mexican athlete, Senor Romah, on the high trapeze, were next performed for his diversion. The Royal party, at eight o'clock, went into the balcony above the terrace, and saw the great fountains playing, but the effect of these was not so pleasant as it should have been, for their copious spray of rising waters encountered a down-pouring deluge of rain. The Shah and the Princes and Princesses dined in the Queen's corridor. At ten o'clock they saw what the wet weather permitted to be shown of a grand display of fireworks, ending with a final girandole of 1600 large rockets, let off by the Shah's own hand through the electric wire. They returned to London in their carriages, getting home between eleven and twelve.

The occupations of his Persian Majesty on Tuesday week were an unceremonious visit to the Bank of England, the Tower of London, and St. Paul's Cathedral; an afternoon fashionable party at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone; a look in at the House of Lords and the House of Commons, while they were sitting; and a walk through Westminster Abbey, with Dean Stanley. On Wednesday week the Shah again went to Windsor, for the third time, and paid a farewell visit to the Queen at the castle. He also called on Prince and Princess Christian at Frogmore. Having returned to town about seven o'clock, he went to see Madame Tussaud's gallery of Waxwork Figures in Baker-street, where M. Victor Tussaud showed him every part of the exhibition. He was most struck with the effigy of the late Emperor Napoleon III.'s dead body as it appeared when lying in state at Chislehurst; but he also took much notice of the relics of Napoleon I. and the figures of Queen Victoria with her family around her.

The Shah was so much pleased with the Crystal Palace that he chose to go there on Thursday week, instead of taking his departure from England, as he had intended, on that day. It was an ordinary shilling admission day, with no particular novelty or speciality in the list of entertainments. The Persian Monarch went on this occasion without his diamonds among the common crowd of English people. He wore a simple tunic, which covered even his sword-belt; not a jewel was to be seen about him; and his companions, except one or two Persian officers in uniform, were as plainly dressed. The chairman and secretary of the Crystal Palace Company, with other directors, and Mr. Billings, the manager, received him as he arrived. He told them, in passable French, that he came again because he had enjoyed himself there so much on the Tuesday evening—"C'était la plus heureuse soirée que j'ai goûtée en Europe," said the Shah. Strolling among the stalls, he examined toys and photographs; tried a pair of opera-glasses, which he turned on the people in the gallery, and heartily joined in their laughter, bowing to them as they bowed to him, when they found themselves exposed to his distant gaze. He saw the art-students modelling from statues in the Greek Court; admired the Alhambra Court, and made the acquaintance of Mr. Owen Jones; and was delighted with Mr. James Ward's fine group of taxidermy, or preserved skins of beasts arranged to represent the forms and gestures of life, called "The Struggle," which displays a lion and tiger fighting with each other. His Majesty had another look at the Alhambra, and then descended to the marine aquarium, where Mr. W. A. Lloyd, the superintendent, was in waiting to receive him. As the Shah came to the glass front of each tank, the food on which the creatures in it are fed was dropped down from above. Nothing could exceed the interest manifested by the Shah in all that he saw. He stood some minutes watching the cuttles darting from the miniature rocks down upon crabs as the latter sank to the bottom, seizing their prey and returning with it to the crevices whence they had descended. He expressed much wonder at observing that when the cuttles reached the bottom they became the colour of the sand; and that on their ascent through the water they resumed the pinkish tint. He sat down in the aquarium, and, calling to him a child of a lady and gentleman among the visitors, fondled the child with much tenderness. He conversed with some Japanese ladies. On leaving the aquarium the Shah walked through the Byzantine, Renaissance, and Gothic courts on the eastern side of the building. He was photographed by Messrs. Negretti and Zambra, and purchased photographic views of the several courts and of the whole Crystal Palace. Turning into the nave again, his Majesty walked to the state box and thence into the balcony over the terrace. He saw the great fountains playing, and the people walking about the terraces and gardens. His Majesty instantly expressed a wish to walk unattended amongst them. Refusing the escort of any of his own servants, or of the police, or of the Crystal Palace officials, he boldly walked out into the balloon ground and saw the ascent of two balloons, with Mr. Ewens and Mr. Ewens, jun., in the cars. He went down to the water temples, and accepted a nosegay from the hands of a child, while constantly saluting the people with a smiling face. They heartily cheered him in return. Having re-entered the palace, he went into the refreshment-room to smoke, rested there half an hour, and then returned to town. In the evening he went to the International Exhibition, and bought some forty pictures, most of them landscapes by Belgian artists.

The Friday was spent much in quiet, but the Shah visited St. Thomas's Hospital at three o'clock, and in the evening went to the opera. He also called on the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Cesarewitch and Cesarevna, and went to Kensington, looking at the Hyde Park Albert Memorial on his way, to a garden party, which was given by the Duke and Duchess of Argyll. Baron Reuter had a private interview with the Shah at Buckingham Palace.

The Shah's departure, on Saturday, by the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, to Portsmouth, and his embarkation for Cherbourg on board the French Government yacht Rapide, was the last act of these remarkable proceedings. His Majesty was accompanied to the Victoria station by their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Arthur, the Duke of Cambridge, and Prince Christian, all in uniform. The Duke of Edinburgh and Prince Arthur, who had met him on his arrival at Dover, went with him to Portsmouth. There was a luncheon on board the Rapide, while the Shah's luggage was being shipped; his attendants went on board the Hirondelle, a companion steamer. The Rapide was formerly called the Aigle, and was kept for the personal service of the late Emperor Napoleon III.; the Hirondelle was used by the Empress Eugénie at Biarritz and elsewhere. The two English Princes having taken leave of his Persian Majesty, and all being ready for departure, the French yachts started at two o'clock. They were joined at Spithead by four of the great ironclads of our Channel Squadron, which formed a powerful escort, the Northumberland and Agincourt on the port side, the Sultan and Hercules on the starboard. As the shores of Hampshire and the Isle of Wight receded from view in the distance, the Shah was observed standing alone upon the after-deck, and looking back with an air of fixed meditation. The sea was calm and the air was clear; the yachts, with their guard of mighty British war-ships, went on towards France. About half-past five that afternoon, they were met in mid sea by the squadron of five French men-of-war, under Admiral Reynaud, sent to escort the Shah to Cherbourg. This squadron consisted of the Ocean, flagship, the Suffren, the Reine Blanche, the Armide, and the Tchets, ironclads, with the despatch-boat Rénard in attendance. Both squadrons fired a salute and manned yards, the sailors cheering aloft and on deck, while the bands played "God Save the Queen" and "La Marseillaise" in mutual compliment of the two nations. The British ships then returned to Portsmouth, while the Shah went forward to Cherbourg, where he remained on Saturday night, sleeping on board the yacht. He landed on Sunday, visited the Arsenal, and travelled by railway to Paris, arriving there about six o'clock; but our Paris correspondent must tell how he was received in the French capital.

The Shah having been made a Knight of the Garter during his visit to England, her Majesty the Queen presented him with the badge and collar set in diamonds. He gave the Queen his photograph, set in diamonds, and the same to the Prince of Wales. To the Duke of Cambridge, at the Windsor review, he gave a diamond-hilted sword; to Earl Granville he offered his jewelled portrait, but our Foreign Secretary, gracefully and skilfully as he does everything of the sort, plucked out the photograph from its costly setting, and would accept only his Majesty's likeness, without the precious stones around it. To Lord Morley, who had attended the Shah by the Queen's appointment, and to Colonel Henderson, Chief Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, he gave jewelled snuffboxes of gold; to Lady Rawlinson a tiara of diamonds, a bracelet to the Duchess of Sutherland, a sum of £2000 divided among the household servants at Buckingham Palace, and £3000 distributed among the police. So that X 24, whilst pacing on his beat in retrospective thought, will scarcely be disposed to say with Horace—

Persicos odi, puer, apparatus!

The which Latin, being interpreted, means "What a bother with the Shah!"

The annual outdoor fête to the hapless inmates of Hanwell Asylum came off on Tuesday. Of the 1100 women and 700 men confined in the asylum 600 and 500 respectively were deemed capable of participating in the sports.

The Registrar-General for Scotland has issued his abstract and short report for the year 1872, and states that the births registered were 118,873, or 34.9 per 1000 of the population; the deaths 75,741, or 22.2 per 1000; the marriages 25,580, or 7.5 per 1000. The birth-rate and death-rate coincided with the preceding ten years' average; the marriage-rate was considerably above the average.

Mr. Chichester Fortescue paid a visit to Liverpool yesterday week, distributed the prizes on board the frigate Conway, and delivered a thoughtful address to the lads in training for the merchant service, had a conference with the Commercial Law Committee of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce in reference to the amendment of the Merchant Shipping Act, and in the evening dined with the Mayor and a large party.

The secretary of the "Plimsoll" Commission has requested the hon. member for Derby to state specifically the names of the "many officers" of the Board of Trade whom, according to his evidence before the Commission, he believed to be "corrupt," also the nature of the corruption of which he accused them. In reply, Mr. Plimsoll reiterates the charges, but declines to state the grounds on which they are based, or to give the names of the particular officers whom he charges with corruption. To do so, he says, "would be to launch him into a mere personal controversy with the Board of Trade, and to divert the attention of the Commission from the real subject of their inquiry."

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The production, on Thursday week, of an Italian version of Auber's "Les Diamans de la Couronne" took place too late for our notice until now. This event adds another to the many fine works before comprised in the repertoire of this establishment, which includes similar adaptations of the same composer's "La Muette de Portici" ("Massaniello"), "Fra Diavolo," and "Le Domino Noir," and it also extends the already wide range of Madame Adelina Patti's charming performances, no one of which excels that now referred to. As to the opera itself, the music and the drama to which it is allied have been made so familiar by frequent representations of an English version that little need now be said thereon. Originally brought out in 1841, thirteen years later than "La Muette de Portici," and eleven years after "Fra Diavolo," it followed "Le Domino Noir" at an interval of four years.

"Les Diamans" belongs to its composer's ripest period, and contains some of his most exquisite music moulded with his most finished art, transcending in some respects, especially in the concerted pieces, many of his other works of the operatic class.

Of course, amidst all the surroundings, the performance of Madame Patti as Caterina—the young Queen of Portugal, who is first seen in her retreat as the supposed niece of the chief of a band of coiners—was a primary feature in the representation now referred to. The splendid voice of the singer, her perfect command of all the phases of her art, both in the brilliant and the expressive styles, and the inimitable charm of her acting, were never more worthily or more successfully displayed than on this occasion. From among many instances may be specified her admirable singing in the aria (with chorus) "Son la temuta," the ballata, "Un di nella foresta," and the duet (with Enrico) "Piu dolce momento"—all in the first act—the beautiful "Bolero" duet (with Diana); the air, with bravura variations, in the second act; and the rondo (from Auber's early opera "Leicester," introduced in the last finale. Other interpolations were made—an air for Diana, and a duet for that character and Sebastiano, in the second act (both taken from Auber's "La Neige"); a short duet for Sebastiano and Caterina in the same act; and an aria for the former at the beginning of the third act, both composed by Signor Vianesi, by whom also the recitatives were written, to the Italian text supplied by Signor Zaffira.

Madame Monbelli, as Diana, sang with great effect, particularly in the duet and the introduced aria already referred to. Signor Bettini, as Enrico, sang carefully; as did Signor Cotogni, as Sebastiano, a part that belongs properly to a tenor. Signor Ciampi missed the humour of the character of Rebollo—such as we have seen given to it at the Paris Opéra Comique—and Signor Tagliacico was scarcely better suited with the part of Campo-Mayor.

The musical substitutions and additions somewhat interfere with the unity of style of a work which, as its composer left it, is perfect of its kind. The superb performance of Madame Patti, however, would alone suffice to secure the success of the Italian version of "Les Diamans de la Couronne," which was given again on Saturday, and was announced for a third time yesterday (Friday).

This week's performances commenced with "Il Trovatore," for the last time; and on Tuesday "Le Nozze di Figaro" was given for the first time this season, with three novelties in the cast—Mdlle. Albani as the Countess, Madame Monbelli as Susanna, and Mdlle. Smeroschi as Cherubino. The two first performances were the most successful of the three. Mdlle. Albani was graceful and lady-like throughout, and was much applauded for her singing of "Porgi amor," and still more so (and justly) for her delivery of "Dove sono," Madame Monbelli having also particularly distinguished herself in the aria, "Deh vieni," the duet for the two, "Sull'aria," having been one of the encores of the evening. Other repetitions were those of the duet for the Count and Susanna, "Crudel perché," Cherubino's canzone, "Voi che sapete," and the overture. Mdlle. Smeroschi's page was not one of her most successful performances. M. Faure was, as heretofore, one of the best Figaros that have ever appeared in Mozart's comic masterpiece; and M. Maurel, as the Count, sang well and acted effectively, the cast having been completed by Madame Anese as Marcellina, and Signori Bettini, Ciampi, and Tagliacico respectively as Basilio, Bartolo, and Antonio.

For Thursday "Faust" was announced; for Friday (as already said), "Les Diamans de la Couronne," and for to-night (Saturday), a repetition of "Le Nozze di Figaro."

"Der Freischütz" is promised for next Tuesday, and "L'Etoile du Nord" for the following Friday, both for the first time this year, the week after next being the last of the season.

The fifth and last of the Floral Hall Concerts took place on Saturday afternoon, and the occasion again included the fine singing of Madame Adelina Patti, Mdlle. Albani, and other eminent members of the Royal Italian Opera company. The celebrated Hungarian Gipsy Band appeared for the first time in public, and played a national waltz with great success. Sir J. Benedict and Signori Vianesi and Bevigiani conducted.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The special performance given here yesterday (Friday) week in honour of the Shah of Persia calls for no detailed notice, having consisted of portions of operas cast as recently noticed by us—the first act of "La Traviata," the second act of "La Favorita," and the first act of "Mignon."—Madame Nilsson having been the representative of the heroines in the first and last named extracts, and Mdlle. Titiens in the central selection.

This week's performances commenced with a repetition of "Faust;" on Tuesday "Mignon" was given for the last time this season; for Thursday the last performance of "La Favorita" was announced; and for to-night (Saturday) "Le Nozze di Figaro," for the first time this season, which is to close at the end of next week, the production of Balfe's posthumous opera, "Il Talismano," being postponed to next year.

The fourth opera concert at the Royal Albert Hall, on Saturday, again comprised performances by Madames Nilsson and Trebelli-Bettini, Signori Campanini and Agnesi, and other principal vocalists of Her Majesty's Opera; the fine orchestra of which establishment likewise contributed to the selection. Mr. Cusins conducted.

NATIONAL MUSIC MEETINGS.

The first of this year's series of these competitive meetings at the Crystal Palace commenced on Thursday week, when class 8 (solo sopranos), class 10 (solo tenors), and a special class of juvenile wind bands competed publicly for the prizes assigned in each instance. Nine ladies had been selected from twenty-one applicants and four from seventeen gentlemen aspirants. The prize (a purse of £30) in each of these classes was awarded—in the one case, to Miss Jessie Jones; in the other, to Mr. Frank Gifford; certificates of merit having been conferred on Miss E. Tomsett and Mr. W. H. Wadmore.

Four juvenile brass bands competed—The Boys' Home, Regent's Park-road; the English and Continental College, Harrow

Marylebone Schools, Southall; and St. Mary's Orphanage, Hounslow. The principal prize (£25) was gained by the third of the bands just named, smaller prizes having been awarded to each of the others.

At the second competition, on Saturday, six contralto solo singers (class 9) and six tenor solo-singers (class 11) competed. The prize (in each case £30) was awarded in class 9 to Miss Bolingbroke, and in class 11 to Mr. E. Thorndike.

Another competition on Saturday was that between the brass bands of the Carrow Works, Norwich, the Royal Artillery band, Woolwich, and the 3rd Gloucester Volunteer Artillery band. Here the first prize (£50) was given to the second of the bands named, another prize (a military instrument value £22) having been awarded to the Carrow Works band.

The third day's contests (on Tuesday) began with class 2 (choral societies). The first prize (£100) was gained by the Stepney Tonic Sol-Fa Association; the second (a set of Messrs. Boosey and Co.'s "Royal Edition of Operas," given by them) to the South London Choral Association. The judges were Sir J. Benedict and Messrs. H. Leslie and J. Barnby.

In class 12 (trumpet solo players) only two competitors appeared—Mr. W. Morrow and Mr. W. Wilmore, the latter of whom obtained the first prize (£25), and the former the second prize (a trumpet, value £15 15s., given by Messrs. Besson). Here the umpires were Sir J. Benedict, Signor Ardit, and Mr. Cusins.

In class 4 (church choirs) there was no competition, and the first prize (£30) was awarded to the choir of St. Nicholas Church, Liverpool. In this case the judges were Sir J. Goss, Sir G. Elvey, and Mr. J. L. Hatton.

Of the closing day's contests, on Thursday (including the performances of the South Wales choristers and those of the Tonic Sol-Fa Association) we must speak next week.

The eighth and last concert of the sixty-first season of the Philharmonic Society, on Monday, commenced with a symphony by Emmanuel Bach, the second son of the great Sebastian. The work, like its composer's pianoforte music, has a special interest as marking the transition from the severe school to the freer and more modern style of Haydn. The other symphony was Beethoven's No. 7 (in A), and the overtures were that to the manuscript oratorio "St. John the Baptist," by Mr. G. A. Macfarren (performed at a concert of the British Orchestral Society in January last), and that composed by Weber in celebration of the fiftieth year of the reign of the King of Saxony in 1818. Madame Carreno-Sauret played Mendelssohn's capriccio in B minor, and M. Colyns, the Belgian violinist, executed the first movement of Rode's eighth concerto with much neatness of mechanism. Mdlle. Titens was the vocalist, and Mr. Cusins conducted, as usual.

Mr. Gustav Erlanger, pianist, gave an evening concert at St. George's Hall on Saturday, when he brought forward various pieces, vocal and instrumental, of his own composition, all of which were well received.

The eminent vocalist, Miss Edith Wynne, gave her concert (in the same locality) on Wednesday evening, when her scheme included a performance of Signor Randegger's operetta, "The Rival Beauties."

On Wednesday also Mr. Frederic Archer (organist to the Alexandra Palace Company) gave his concert, at the Hanover-square Rooms.

The annual concert of Mr. Brinley Richards, the pianist and composer, is announced for this (Saturday) evening.

We have already given an outline of the programme for the approaching Birmingham Musical Festival, the scheme of which has just been more definitely announced. On the opening day, Aug. 26, "Elijah" will be performed. At the evening concert Signor Schira's new cantata, entitled "The Lord of Burleigh," will be played for the first time, and a miscellaneous selection will include "Inno Della Pace," Rossini. The performances on the succeeding days will be as follow:—Wednesday morning, a new oratorio, "The Light of the World," composed expressly for this festival by Arthur S. Sullivan. Wednesday evening, a miscellaneous selection, comprising Beethoven's symphony in C minor. Thursday morning, "The Messiah." Thursday evening, a new cantata, by Signor Randegger, entitled "Fridolin" (first time of performance); and a miscellaneous selection, including "Song of Titans" (Rossini), overture to "William Tell," &c. Friday morning, sacred cantata, "God, Thou art Great" (Spohr), Imperial Mass (Haydn), "Ave Maria" (first time of performance), Rossini; double chorus, "Cantemus" (first time of performance), Rossini; and selections from "Israel in Egypt." Friday evening, "Judas Maccabæus." The principal vocalists will be Mdlle. Titens, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdlle. Albani, Madame Patey, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Santley, and Signor Foli. Organist, Mr. Stimpson; conductor, Sir Michael Costa. The band and chorus will be on the same large scale as usual at these great music meetings.

GLOBE.

On Friday week Mr. H. J. Montague brought his season to a close, and, as usual, addressed his audience on the occasion, stating that he and his company would retire awhile from the scene, and that during their "absence Mr. Edward Saker, the popular lessee and equally popular actor of the Alexandra Theatre, Liverpool, would make his first appearance before a London audience." This the gentleman in question did on Saturday last, in a piece entitled "Coming Home"—a new domestic drama by Mr. George Ralph Walker, founded on a Christmas story by the same author, who, it is evident, is an imitator of the late Charles Dickens. The new play bears the title of "Sithors to Grind," and has been played under that name successfully in the provinces. There has, of course, been a reason for that success, albeit the taste of the country and that of the town may differ, and that might prosper at the Alexandra which would fail at the Globe. At any rate, at the latter it would be subject to more searching criticism, and a higher quality of drama would be required. The work, such as it is, is more of the nature of a story than of a drama, and exhibits evidences of false taste which journalism has not been slow in exposing. Instead of sterling dialogue, pantomimic action is substituted; and the style too frequently runs into bathos where pathos had evidently been in the writer's intention. These objections are no doubt valid. On the other hand, we have to record that the performance receives much applause, and is well calculated to please a miscellaneous audience. It is rather difficult to give a sketch of the plot, which tells itself much better in action than in description. Two brothers—Tom and Joe Stammers—part early in life; the former gets on in the world and marries a haughty woman, Eglantine Stammers (Mrs. J. B. Howard), and, being supposed dead, leaves her £20,000. Joe is not so fortunate: he is reduced to the necessity of scissors-grinding for a subsistence. Tom had a daughter before marrying with Eglantine, and this daughter and the widow become rivals for the hand of Lord Templemore (Mr. J. H. Barnes). In his capacity of scissors-grinding, Joe and Eleanor Stammers become acquainted, and ultimately discover their mutual relationship. Eleanor finds a retreat in his cottage when driven out of doors by the haughty dame. Ultimately the latter is reduced to poverty, and the more humble persons of the story are raised to affluence. Added to these characters is one of a sentimental blacksmith, Ted Bluff (Mr. F. B. Warde), and a benevolent lawyer, Mr. Hackute (Mr. Fred Thorne). Of the manner in which these elements are made to work together, knowledge must be obtained by actual attendance at the theatre. Of the way in which the new drama may be received in the long run, and whether a long run may be predicated of it, it would be unwise at present to hazard a remark.

LYCEUM.

After a well-earned rest, Mr. Irving reappeared on Monday evening in "Charles I." From the opening scene with the children to the last word, "Remember!" the actor was at his best, and was well supported by Miss Bateman, as the Queen. This lady's admirable pronunciation of the French phrases lends a special truth to the representation. Mr. W. H. Stephens now represents the Marquis of Huntley. It need hardly be said that the part loses nothing in his hands. Mr. R. Markby, as Ireton, contributes his share to the success of the scene of the interview between the King and Cromwell. Miss G. Pouncefort, as Lady Eleanor, and Mr. Belmore, as Cromwell, continue to sustain their parts with the power of well-practised artistes.

FRENCH PLAYS.

Again we have to record progress at the St. James's and Princess's Theatres. At the former the Brussels company has been reinforced by the arrival of Mdlle. Fonti, who during the week has appeared in Offenbach's merry opéra-bouffe called "The Brigands," with which the English public are already familiar. "La Belle Hélène" and "Braconniers" are announced. We trust that the "Cent Vierges" is withdrawn. Madame Judic made her first appearance at the Princess's on Monday.

THE MAGAZINES FOR JULY.

The Cornhill is varied and versatile this month, and the present instalment of its principal fiction, "Zelda's Fortune," is the most brilliant we have had. We must caution the public, however, against supposing for a single moment that the criticisms of the daily press, more especially the art-criticisms, are concocted in the manner so piquantly described by Mr. Francillon. "Young Brown," a new fiction, opens with much cleverness, full of spirit and hard photographic truth. But the personages thus far are unpleasing, the comfortable ones repulsive, the interesting ones uncomfortable. The range of character is wide: from a profligate Duke to a compassionate ostler; the writer's observation is everywhere keen, but is especially evinced in his sketches of persons and things appertaining to the equine world. A paper on the history of the Civil Service Association chronicles its marvellous progress, claims the credit of its establishment for the Post Office, and hints that that energetic department regrets not having kept the management entirely in its own hands. "A Whewellite" argues against the adaptation of the planet Mars to sustain animal life. The atmosphere is, he thinks, excessively rare; the cold intense, the middle zones powdered over with hoar frost; the Arctic liable to tremendous catastrophes from the breaking up of masses of ice. We can scarcely understand how these latter phenomena could occur without the agency of heat. The panegyrist of the Brontë family hardly makes enough of his case. It is but a tepid admiration which deems it needful to insinuate an apology for "Wuthering Heights," and the mutilation of Emily Brontë's sublime death-song is the sheerest barbarism. The misprint here perpetrated of paths for forth is among the most detestable we remember. The personages most intimately connected with Bath, mentioned in the present instalment of the "Literary Recollections" of the city, are Beckford and Landor. Neither seems to have enjoyed more than a prophet's honour in "his own country." Beckford is remembered as "a vain, selfish, egotistical, rather priggish sort of person." The mention of Landor's name commonly elicits the remark, "Oh, he did so-and-so, and he had to leave the place."

"A Princess of Thule," in Macmillan, describes the introduction of the Shetland bride to the society of the metropolis. The picture, one of Mr. Black's best, is full of sweetness and delicate pathos, darkened by forebodings of impending trouble. Mr. Burnand's fiction is more lively and interesting than heretofore. The most important of the miscellaneous papers is a spirited sketch of Daniel O'Connell from the pen of one of the only competent judges of this remarkable man, his countrymen. Admitting his hero's derelictions from the English standard of decency and fair-dealing in politics, and lamenting that his example contributed so little to elevate the low standard of political morality in his own country, the writer nevertheless finds abundant material for eulogium in the real magnitude of his services, and especially in the great lesson he taught Irishmen of the sufficiency of peaceable agitation for the redress of grievances. The other contributions are unimportant.

With the exception of two pleasant papers on touring in Ireland and in Cashmere, and the continuation of "the Wykehamist's" sensible but discouraging remarks on the ways and means of improving the condition of the peasantry in the south of England, Fraser is chiefly devoted to theological and philosophical speculation. The earnestness of Miss Nightingale's "Sub Notes" commands respectful sympathy, blended with regret at the obscurity occasioned by the imperfection of the literary form. The general drift of Miss Nightingale's observations seems to be complaint of the prevalence of mere criticism in excess of practical work. Mr. Fitzjames Stephens' recent book is reviewed by a critic who alternately assents and differs in a cautious, half-hearted way, and appears to have no grasp of the subject. Mr. F. W. Newman versus Mr. Matthew Arnold is the old contest of earnest, ingenuous, somewhat narrow, and slightly uncouth religious feeling against the refinements of a dainty and not too masculine culture. In this case, however, culture has committed itself to sundry paradoxes, which feeling, aided by scholarship, has no difficulty in exposing, and might have exposed more effectively still. Professor Max Müller's lectures in controversy of Mr. Darwin's philosophy of language conclude rather oddly with the statement that some will hold him to have proved his opponent's case, and that he lacks time to show them that they are mistaken.

General Cluseret's account of the military organisation of the Commune, in the Fortnightly Review, may be full of truth—it is certainly full of vanity. Mr. H. Crompton's plea for a reform of the laws regulating the relations of masters and workmen would have gained greatly in weight by the adoption of a more temperate tone. The ablest article in the number is that on "The Abortiveness of French Revolutions," by Mr. J. C. Morison. Mr. Morison takes the gloomiest view of French political incapacity, and sums up the situation thus:—"The anarchy is such that it infallibly leads to despotism, and the despotism fatally becomes such as inevitably to lead to a new outbreak of anarchy." We think he hardly accords due weight to the fact of a Government having recently existed for nearly two years, which, on the whole, treated all parties with substantial fairness. The loss of this unprecedented example in French politics is the greatest misfortune attendant on the overthrow of M. Thiers. The Serbian author of a valuable essay on the rise and decline of Pan Slavism attributes the latter phenomenon to the discovery on the part of the Czechs and Southern Slavonians that "Pan Slavism" is practically equivalent to absorption into Russia. There are also interesting papers on Girton College and on the speculations of De Maillet, a French writer, whose fancies are sometimes, though erroneously, held to have anticipated Lamarck's theory of development.

"The Parisians," in Blackwood, continues to improve, and is, in these latter chapters especially, a typical representation of the mature yet shallow wisdom of a philosophic man of the world, the character in which Lord Lytton was, after all, most perfectly at home. Very French, too, is the exceedingly able paper on marriage in France, written with an evident leaning towards that cold and worldly institution. The paper undoubtedly establishes the existence of much actual comfort in French domestic life; but one rises from its perusal with a feeling that "a fine dissatisfaction" would be preferable to content procured by such business-like arrangements. "The Four Ages," treating principally of old age, is an essay full of genial wisdom.

The most important contribution to a good number of the Contemporary is Miss Simcox's essay on the influence of Mr. Stuart Mill's writings, which the authoress seems to consider to have principally consisted in the fairness of his temper and the reasonableness of his method. "More weight has been given," by her, "to a possible development or application of his teaching than to its substance." The number also contains excellent papers on the poetry of Victor Hugo, and on the condition of our hemisphere during the formation of the chief geological systems; together with an argument by Mr. Arthur Arnold in favour of the State purchase of railways, and one by the Hon. Dudley Campbell advocating a simpler but much more important innovation—the joint education of the sexes. Numerous instances are given of the admirable working of this salutary reform on the Continent and in the United States.

The Month has some characteristic papers. That on "The Bismarckian Persecution" illustrates the real or affected inability of Roman Catholics to understand two very obvious propositions—that the promulgation of the Infallibility decrees has altered the relation of their Church towards the civil power, and that he who tolerates nobody has no right to expect anybody to tolerate him. Another article describes the present condition of Louise Lateau, a Belgian girl who has been supernaturally rewarded for her sanctity by being pierced through the hands, branded on the forehead, cast into cataleptic fits, and otherwise subjected to agonising tortures, detailed with revolting minuteness. We have rarely seen such an instance of fatuous, grovelling superstition.

The Victoria has so interesting a reminiscence of Mr. Mill as to cause us to marvel, with Pope, "how the devil it got there." The last line explained the mystery; it is borrowed from a New York periodical.

The most important articles selected this month by the Transatlantic are Mr. C. F. Adams's funeral oration on Mr. Seward, and an account of the auriferous "black sands" of California.

"Clitje," in the Gentleman's Magazine, is full of sparkle; and Mr. Baker Hopkins's fiction promises to turn out a good example of the same school. A fanciful tale, entitled "A Strange Experiment," is introduced as by the (ex) Khivan correspondent of the Telegraph. If this be put forth as a passport to public favour, it is a strange experiment indeed. The Monthly Packet has one paper of much beauty, entitled "Twilight." The best contribution to Temple Bar is a poem in eighteenth-century style called "Horace in his Toga." We must be content with a mere acknowledgment of Tinsley, Belgravia, London Society, with its "holiday number," the New Monthly, the St. James's Magazine, Good Words, the Argosy, and Cassell's Magazine.

SIR HENRY RAWLINSON, K.C.B., F.R.S.

This distinguished political and military servant of the British Asiatic Empire, having resided six years in Persia—from 1833 to 1839, when he assisted the father of the present Shah to organise his army for the defence of that kingdom against foreign aggression—was properly chosen by our Queen to meet the Shah at Brussels with her invitation to England, and to be the chief of his English attendants while his Majesty sojourned amongst us. Major-General Sir Henry Creswick Rawlinson, K.C.B., is a son of A. T. Rawlinson, Esq., of Chadlington, Oxfordshire, but of an old Lancashire family; one of his brothers is the Rev. Canon Rawlinson, Professor of Ancient History at the University of Oxford and author of "The Five Great Monarchies." Sir Henry was born in 1813, was educated at Ealing School, served in the Bombay army, was Resident in Persia, as remarked above, then Political Agent at Kandahar, and helped to keep that position safe during the Afghan War. In 1843 he became the British Political Agent in Turkish Arabia; he was afterwards British Consul at Bagdad, and Consul-General in Asiatic Turkey. Having come home, he was elected a Director of the East India Company, in 1856, when the honour of knighthood was also conferred upon him. On the transfer of the Indian Government from the Company to the Queen's Administration, in 1858, he was appointed one of the Council to advise the Secretary of State for India. In the same year he was elected M.P. for Reigate. In April, 1859, he was sent as Special Envoy to the Court of Teheran, having resigned his seat in the House of Commons. At the general election of 1865 he was chosen M.P. for Frome, but withdrew from Parliament in 1868, and resumed his seat in the Council for India. Sir Henry is well known to be a scholar of high attainments in Oriental philology, antiquities, and history. He has contributed much to the discussions of the Asiatic and Geographical Societies, especially with reference to the interpretation of Babylonian, Assyrian, and Persian cuneiform inscriptions. The Royal Geographical Society elected him President on the death of Sir Roderick Murchison. He is also a Fellow of the Royal Society, a Doctor both of the Oxford and the Cambridge Universities, and an honorary member of several foreign learned societies.

The Portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, of Baker-street.

The Scotsman understands that the Lord Lieutenantcy of Berwickshire has been offered to the Duke of Roxburghe.

Monday was the first day of the Royal Agricultural Society's show at Hull. The proceedings began with a trial of various tillage implements. For this portion of the operations there were 304 entries. The collection of implements in the show-yard at Hull is one of the largest the society has obtained, there being between 5000 and 6000 entries. The entries of horses are somewhat below the average; while those of cattle, sheep, and pigs are about an average.

DEPARTURE OF THE SHAH FROM PORTSMOUTH.

FROM THE PICTURE BY MARCUS STONE

RT-VIVE LE ROI! 99

THE EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR HENRY RAWLINSON, K.C.B., MEMBER OF THE COUNCIL FOR INDIA.

THE SHAH AT MADAME TUSSAUD'S GALLERY OF WAXWORK FIGURES.

BY THE WAY.

Dr. Johnson had a good deal to say in favour of "private war," as he called duelling, and held that a man had as much right to defend his character as his property by force of arms. It would have been interesting to hear him on the fight which, thanks to the telegram system rather than to the intrinsic interest of the case, has been made a European affair—the rencontre between MM. de Cassagnac and Ranc. Possibly the sturdy old Englishman would have scoffed at the idea of a Frenchman's character being worth fighting about. In spite of the Doctor, we islanders have completely got rid of the habit of "sending messages." The law and the expressed determination of several of the Judges to hang the survivor in a fatal duel and his seconds had a good deal to do with the abandonment of the practice; and the fact that it had come to be resorted to by members of classes whose usual feelings on the subject of honour are not supposed to be very delicate had a good deal more. If we remember aright, the last "meeting" was between a linendraper's assistant and a gentleman of the hair-dressing persuasion, and the former was "winged." Dramatists, who cling to conventions, still make their heroes challenge one another; but the audiences laugh, and this is well, as we go to a theatre to be amused. But France, according to her own statement, the country of logic and justice, encourages and admires conflicts by which both are set at naught, and in which the wrongdoer will be the victor if he has sedulously attended the fencing-room or the shooting-gallery. In the affair of the De Cassagnac and Ranc duel the interest of those who attended to the subject was, perhaps, less barbarous than is usually the case; for, while both combatants were skilled gladiators, we are not aware that Europe would have gone into mourning had the matter ended in Eteocles and Polyneices fashion. However, both gentlemen have been spared to remain ornaments of civilised society. The report of the seconds varies from that of the telegram, and states that M. de Cassagnac received a wound which did not prevent his inflicting on M. Ranc a more severe one, that caused the cessation of the combat. Victory is therefore with the Imperialist champion.

We refer lovers of "Uncle Toby"—and that is equivalent to giving the advice to everybody capable of enjoying literary pleasure—to a short but very interesting paper in the new number of Macmillan. The writer asserts, on grounds which appear to be sound, that the character of Uncle Toby was drawn by Sterne from Captain Hinde, a neighbour of Lord Dacre, whom the great author used to visit at his country seat. Without spoiling a reader's enjoyment of the paper, we would mention that Captain Hinde, a retired officer, made an embattled front to his house, called in his labourers from the fields by the sound of a bugle, and had a battery at the end of his garden. His love for all living things was extraordinary; and, though the firing his guns was one of his chief delights, he one day discovered that a bullfinch had built her nest in the garden hedge close to his battery. Thereon he commanded that no more salutes should be fired until the little birds had flown. Such a piece of evidence is in itself strong enough to identify the portrait of "everybody's uncle."

The end of the case for the prosecution in re Tichborne will probably have come before these lines are read. Recent proceedings have been important, but they have not been exciting. The defendant's counsel justifiably asks for an adjournment, that he may consider the whole of the testimony that has been adduced, and the shape of his reply, and urges that his obtaining this grace will be the means of saving time. A certain period will, of course, be allowed him. The defendant is unwell. That people continue to discuss the case is clear, for Mr. Commissioner Kerr, on Tuesday, indignantly rose and took his court away with him to a more removed ground, observing that he would leave the place to counsel and others who wished to debate the Tichborne affair. But general interest will hardly revive until it is seen what cue Dr. Kenealy takes. We need scarcely say that Mr. Whalley has been again heard in the House of Commons with a question or two, or that the Government has totally declined to enter upon the topic. We might almost venture to submit to him that he has really done enough at present for his friend in making the splendid and amazing suggestion, which, at all risk of "contempt," he published last week, the plan of getting rid of the evidence of all the Catholic witnesses, by regarding it as given by direction of spiritual advisers. The Times has, however, a good deal depreciated the value of this idea, by pointing out that but a portion of those who have declared the defendant not to be Tichborne are of the faith so hateful to the member for Peterborough.

We are informed by one of the correspondents from Paris that the Shah has been so much delighted with England that he meditates another visit at no distant time. We shall, doubtless, be able to consider this fact with more serenity by-and-by than at present, when it is not inhospitable to say that we are a little like the giver of a festival who hears the last departing wheels "crunching the gravel." His Majesty is said to have lost no opportunity of proclaiming his delight with England, her Queen, and her people. He admires her Majesty more than any Sovereign whom he has seen, and he is enchanted with the eager welcome he received from the masses. He is reported to have used a word, in mentioning the latter, which has more significance in the East, where family feelings are cherished, than in some parts of Europe. "Are these persons all my cousins, that they are so happy to see me?" When Nasser-ed-din shall have paid us a few more visits he will, perhaps, discover that, except in Scotland, cousinhood does not necessarily imply the most enthusiastic affection of which human nature is capable. He knows already that gratia fratrum rara est, and that even a brother-in-law is occasionally an inconvenience of which a resolute relative gets quit by summary process. As we expected, we are told that the Shah declared that in France he had seen the sun for the first time. We decline to believe this: it is a Gallic fiction. We prefer to think of him, in Gay's words, as

A Persian, humble servant of the Sun,
Who, though devout, yet bigotry had none.

and a bigot is a person who is obstinately and unreasonably wedded to a particular opinion. If the Shah did not see the sun on a great many days when her Majesty's subjects were scorching and sweltering, he must have had in his train a counsellor of the true Oriental type. "If the King at noon day declares it is night, swear that you see the stars."

Mr. Macready's library has been sold. The catalogue was not a very large one, and perhaps the most important items in it consisted of volumes presented by their authors to the great tragedian. Talfourd gave "Ion," Knowles "Virginia," and other dramatists whose works had been fortunate enough to be produced by Mr. Macready paid him similar courtesy. His friend Mr. Dickens, of course, did not forget him when a new novel was complete, and these presentation copies brought high prices, "Nicholas Nickleby," for instance, fetching £16. Such sales are, of course, matter of business; but there is something unsatisfactory in the idea that a scholar occupies himself, up to nearly the last day of his life, in enriching his library, and that in a couple of months later the accumulations of fifty years are scattered by the auctioneer. We are glad to know that in the case of the last-mentioned author no such dispersion had to take place, and that all his well-chosen books passed by bequest to one who values them both as a gift and for their own sakes; but this is exceptional. A library is the reflection of its owner's mind, and some day, when we are taking thought for a memorial to an illustrious man, it may be worth considering whether the conservation of his book-collection—his portrait of himself—would not be a philosophical as well as a graceful way of showing him honour.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

The "Royal Edition of Songs of England," just published by Messrs. Boosey and Co., forms a worthy companion volume to their preceding collections, "The Songs of Scotland" and "The Songs of Wales." The work now referred to contains a choice selection of English melodies, ranging from the sixteenth century down to recent years, and including favourite pieces by Purcell, Boyce, Dibdin, Shield, Arne, Linley, Storace, Bishop, Balfe, and other popular composers, besides traditional and anonymous tunes. Where possible, the names of the authors of the words, as well as of the composers of the music, are given; and the whole has been carefully edited by Mr. J. L. Hatton, who has skillfully adapted new symphonies and accompaniments to many of the old songs. The volume is well printed, and altogether handsomely got up, and in these respects, as well as in cheapness, it resembles the valuable series of the "Royal Edition of Operas," issued by the same publishers.

"Belshazzar" and "Theodora" are names of oratorios that are but little known to the modern English public, but that bid fair to become more so through the excellent and cheap editions recently issued by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co. Both these fine works had rested long in oblivion, with the exception of occasional slight extracts from each, until their performance under the direction of Mr. Barnby—"Belshazzar" in May, and "Theodora" in June last, as noticed by us at the time. The composition of the oratorio first named belongs to the year 1744, that of the other dating five years later. It is from "Theodora" that the well-known air, "Angels ever bright and fair," is taken. This and the other work contain both solo pieces and choruses that render them quite as important as many other of Handel's oratorios that have been treated with less neglect. The editions now referred to are edited by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, and future repetition performances should help to rescue such grand music from its past comparative oblivion.

In a far lighter strain than the publications last noticed are "The Persian Love-Song," with English words cleverly adapted from the original by Mr. Sutherland Edwards, and the "Royal March," composed by Signor Vianesi for performance on the occasion of the recent state visit of the Shah of Persia to the Royal Italian Opera. The piece first mentioned (published by E. C. Boosey, of Little Argyle-street) was noticed by us when speaking of its recent performance at the Crystal Palace. Signor Vianesi's march is published (arranged for the pianoforte) by Messrs. Enoch and Sons, of Berners-street. It commences in true martial style, and introduces, by way of episode, a characteristic national air, which is followed by an effective coda.

Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co. have recently issued various novelties, both instrumental and vocal. Among the former are two by E. Paladilhe, the composer of the popular "Mandolinata." His "Barcarolle" is an effective pianoforte piece, in which a pervading melody is surrounded with brilliant passages calculated to display both the instrument and the performer's powers. Somewhat similar in treatment, although not in subject, is his "Chant des Feuilles," a graceful idyll. From Messrs. Cramer we have also an acceptable valse sentimentale, entitled "Geraldine," by Mr. T. Mudie, whose name appears far too seldom in print. Although the piece referred to is a bagatelle, it is written with that neatness of touch which shows the skilled and cultivated musician.

From the house of Mr. E. C. Boosey we have two agreeable vocal pieces by the esteemed tenor singer Mr. W. H. Cummings. His song, "She like a seraph sings," and his trio, "A land where beauty cannot fade," are both characterised by suavity of melody and rhythmic flow, and will be found very effective in performance. The trio is for soprano, contralto, and tenor. The same publisher has issued an expressive song entitled "Nothing," by Henriette, and a piece of similar kind, "There is a garden in her face," by E. N. Grazia, whose style (as well as name) is Italian in this instance; while there is much more of the English character in his ballad, "Only a Dream."

"What Care I?" (published by Messrs. Brewer and Co.) is a song of a bold and marked character. The words (by Rosalind) are well and pungently written, in inculcation of a philosophic self-contentment; and the melody is well suited thereto. The accompaniment would have borne a little revision in occasional passages for the left hand; but this a mere trifle, and does not affect the general merit of the song. Karl Schiller is the name associated with the music.

"Still the Angel Stars are Shining"—words by Adelaide A. Proctor—has been set to a very agreeable and vocal melody by Oliver Cramer, whose song should find favour among those who cultivate the sentimental style.

It will be sufficient merely to record the publication, by Messrs. Duff and Stewart, of Mr. George Carter's Cantata "Evangeline" (founded on Longfellow's poem)—having previously spoken of its favourable reception and repetition in performance at the Royal Albert Hall.

The Board of Trade returns for June are unfavourable, showing a considerable falling off both in quantities and values in all our principal exports. The total value was £19,470,083, against £20,223,621 last year.

At Waterford there was no opposition to the return of the Hon. Henry Villiers Stuart, in the room of Mr. de la Poer, who has resigned; and the hon. gentleman was duly elected yesterday week.

Mr. Maurice Brooks, a merchant and magistrate of Dublin, was, on Monday, nominated Lord Mayor for 1874. He was the Liberal candidate, the Conservative candidate (Dr. Owens) having been defeated on a vote of the council.

Last Saturday the contest for the Mulholland Cup, presented by Mr. John Mulholland, J.P., owner of the celebrated yacht Egeria, for annual competition between the rowing clubs of Belfast Lough, took place, and was won by the Carrickfergus Amateur Rowing Club, who also carried it off last year.

In the Corporation Hall, Derry, on Monday, the Conservative ladies of Londonderry presented Lord C. J. Hamilton, M.P. for King's Lynn and formerly M.P. for Derry, with an address and testimonial, consisting of a silver inkstand and half a dozen silver candlesticks to match.

THE VIENNA EXHIBITION.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

Vienna, Monday, July 7.

There was a time, before the era of international exhibitions, when English gold and silver smiths, and more especially English jewellers, were unable to compete successfully with those of France and Germany; but that period has gone by, and Great Britain—although the number of its exhibitors of plate and jewellery is much fewer than one could have desired—is admirably represented at the Vienna palace. Perhaps the most interesting display as a whole is that of Messrs. Hancock, whose handsome Gothic case in black and gold, surmounted by the Royal crown and plentifully decorated with armorial emblems, forms an invariable point of attraction in the British section in the nave. Their exhibition, which is strong alike in plate and jewellery, comprises, in the former category, the admirable Tennyson vase, modelled in chased and repoussé oxydised silver by Armistead, and illustrating the death of the blameless King, as sung by Tennyson in the last of his Idylls. Scarcely inferior in interest to this noble work are various spirited conceptions of Signor Monti and some graceful gold and silver jugs and vases—reproductions of ancient classic examples—which form a conspicuous portion of Messrs. Hancock's display. It is in jewellery, however, that they claim to carry off the palm, many of the parures exposed by the Bruton-street firm being unrivalled in the entire exhibition. First, among diamonds, there is Lady Dudley's wondrous "Star of the South," worth a fortune of itself, but with its value considerably enhanced by being set in a tiara of dazzling brilliants. Next comes a superb diamond necklace belonging to the same lady, the pendants of which are as large as pigeons' eggs. Then there is a very elegant suite composed of brilliants and button and pear shaped pearls, comprising a tiara in coronet form, cluster and drop necklace, bracelet, and earrings, the whole valued at £10,000; also a parure of emeralds and diamonds, the tiara of which is most superb, and is justly regarded by Messrs. Hancock as one of their greatest achievements. The necklace, composed of twelve emeralds forming bands, with seven others set as drops, all perfectly free from marks or feathers, is equally beautiful with the earrings and bracelet, which complete the suite, for which the bagatelle of £18,000 is asked. We have next a necklace of brilliants, with a superb central ruby, priced at £10,000; another of pink pearls and brilliants, the central pearl of which is fully the size of a pigeon's egg; and a third most remarkable one, of black pearls and diamonds, arranged in clusters with bows of brilliants, which had excited the admiration of the Empress of Austria, and would in all probability have been bought by her had not Sir Richard Wallace secured it for £3000. Smaller and less valuable, but exceedingly beautiful, ornaments, in sapphires, rubies, coral, and diamonds, abound in Messrs. Hancock's étalage, which furthermore boasts some very fine Etruscan jewellery not unworthy even of Castellani himself.

Messrs. Elkington's display fully sustains their old reputation. Their chefs-d'œuvre are two exceedingly beautiful repoussé vases, due to the talent and patience of a French artist, M. Morel-Ladeuil. The first of these, which has taken six years to produce, is adorned with some exquisite festoons of foliage, while upon a spreading pediment below recline two beautiful female figures, representing Poetry and Music. The second, which is much smaller but not less beautiful, illustrates in a similar manner Art and Science. Everything is so exquisitely delicate in these productions that it is difficult for the uninitiated to believe that such results have been attained solely by the process of hammering up from the reverse side. Having regard to the beauty of the designs and the skill and value of the workmanship, one is scarcely surprised to learn that the price of the larger vase is £6000, and of the smaller one rather more than half that sum. Plate for table services, of a high standard of excellence, is exhibited by Messrs. Elkington with lavish profusion, and in the midst of the brilliant display appear a couple of old friends—the Elcho challenge shield and the international volunteer trophy. Among the novelties exhibited by this enterprising firm are some curious reproductions of Chinese enamel ware, remarkably elegant and artistic in execution.

Mr. Thomas, of Old Bond-street, whose case is comparatively small and unpretending, is the exhibitor of a wonderful necklace of twenty large brilliants, each set en solitaire, the value of which is fixed at £35,000. There are earrings and a brilliant cross to match, which bring the price of the whole parure up to something like £50,000. Mr. Thomas further displays a beautiful necklace of pearls of the finest water and the most symmetrical shape, which he spent four years in collecting, together with a splendid large pink pearl and a superb brooch of emeralds and diamonds. He also exhibits some cheap jewellery, manufactured expressly to compete with the Austrian handicraftsmen on their own ground, the gold being all of fifteen-carat standard, and cheapness being attained by the lightness of the articles in comparison with more massive productions. On one side of Messrs. Hancock's case Mr. Aitchison, of Edinburgh, whose speciality is Scotch jewellery, exhibits Highland brooches, dirks, and ram's-head snuff-mulls, set with Scotch pearls, pebbles, and cairngorms. One cairngorm which he displays in the rough weighs seven pounds, and is supposed to be the largest yet found.

Before quitting the British section in the nave we must not neglect to call attention to the extensive display of carpets made by Mr. John Lewis, of Halifax, whose reproductions, by the way, of Oriental types are perfectly unrivalled. His display comprises what are technically termed Royal Wiltons, Anglo-Indians, Axminsters, and Turkeys, and is in every respect an admirable one. From Kidderminster we have six exhibitors, the chief of whom are Gower, Woodward, and Co., who show some specimens of a new variety called the Hohen-zollern, and some Brussels and velvet-pile carpets woven without seams; and Humphries and Sons, whose Wilton samples are remarkably fine. Cooke and Law, of London, moreover, have an extensive display, comprising almost every variety of rug and carpet.

At the entry of the southern transverse gallery, and facing one side of Minton's splendid exhibition of artistic pottery and porcelain, stands Pim Brothers and Co.'s large case, around which the Viennese ladies are remarkably fond of congregating of an afternoon, discussing the merits of the single and double, watered and satin-striped, checked and tartan plaid Irish poplins, rich figured terries, and beautiful furniture brocatelles which the firm exhibits. Close by the side of Messrs. Pim's display is the stall of Jacoby and Co., well known for their Nottingham and imitation Valenciennes lace; and a little way lower down the gallery is that of Copestake, Moore, Crampton, and Co., who contribute many charming novelties in the way of lace to the Exhibition.

In front extends the realm of cotton, represented in the various stages of its manufacture and the different purposes for which it serves by ten or twelve important firms. Messrs. Walter Evans and Co., of Derby, who exhibit every kind of sewing cotton and thread, stand undoubtedly pre-eminent in their particular line, although Manchester, Paisley, and Bolton

The House of Lords sat on Monday as a Committee of Privileges, to decide upon the petition of George Philip Stanhope, cousin of the late Earl of Chesterfield, who claims the earldom and the barony of Stanhope. Their Lordships decided that the claim was proved to their satisfaction.—The Committee then proceeded to consider the claims of the Marchioness of Lansdowne to the Barony of Nairne.

1. Each competitor will have to play a match of three games, with every other. The result of this match will be considered as a whole, and to the winner will be accounted one, to the loser nought.
2. The winner of the largest number of matches will receive the first prize, the next one the second prize, and so on.
3. Each match must be finished in two consecutive days.

4. Each match must make less than twenty moves per hour. The time he saves in the first hour standing is good for later moves.

Intending competitors are recommended to communicate with the directors, who will then take care that they are provided with suitable lodgings at comparatively low prices.

The will of Major-General Luke Smyth O'Connor, C.B., was proved on the 24th ult. by Ann Mitchell O'Connor, the relict, the sole executor.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1873.

For some months past intermittent rumours found circulation among our fellow-countrymen of a projected matrimonial engagement between her Majesty's second son, the Duke of Edinburgh, and the Grand Duchess Maria, daughter of the reigning Czar of Russia. The rumour has now been confirmed by fact. The betrothal of our Sailor Prince with the only daughter of Alexander II. of Russia has been publicly announced on authority not to be disputed. We need hardly say that the announcement has favourably impressed the minds of the British people. The match appears to be as suitable as any which it was within the power of his Royal Highness to make. The choice has been his own, prompted by personal attachment, not prescribed by state convenience or by political considerations. All such announcements affecting those we know, and for whose happiness in life we cherish sincere good wishes, awaken in our bosoms pleasurable sympathies. The union of two hearts, to be followed in due time by a union of hands and of lives, is one of those epochs in personal history which seldom fail of eliciting kindly sentiment.

The Duke of Edinburgh has commended himself to the British people by traits of character and by professional activity which have enlisted in his favour no little social interest. He has all the frankness of the naval order, combined with all that readiness to take part in public enterprises of philanthropy, charity, art, and science which can be expected from his high position. As he is not a political partisan—indeed, is precluded by his connection with the Sovereign of the realm from descending into the arena of party politics—he has made no political enemies. All ranks and classes may meet in his presence and avail themselves of his service in promoting the intellectual and social wellbeing of the people, without the smallest danger of provoking angry collision of feeling. And, as we have just intimated, he has lent himself and the powerful social influence which he wields to all movements but those of political society with hearty readiness and unaffected zeal. He, too, like his Royal brother the Prince of Wales, has passed through a crisis of danger and suffering, though at the opposite side of the globe, which deepened the affection with which the children of her Majesty are uniformly regarded by the people of this country. There is nothing strained therefore, nothing surprising or unnatural, in the pleasure with which the announcement of his betrothal has been received by the public. The spontaneous response of society to that announcement, if it could be condensed into a single sentence, would unquestionably take the shape of cordial congratulation, and of unfeigned desire on his behalf and on behalf of his bride-elect, that their married life may be a long and happy one.

The interest taken by the public in this purely personal alliance is greatly enhanced by the bearing which it must necessarily have upon the domestic happiness of her most gracious Majesty Queen Victoria. Any event calculated to strengthen in her heart a returning interest in the enjoyments and duties of her widowed life makes a forcible appeal to their sympathies, and never makes it in vain. The great sorrow through which they beheld her pass they know to be incapable of complete removal; the loss which she sustained they believe to be irreparable; but it is a source of gratification to them to be permitted to witness the gradual filling up of that vacancy in her affections created by the death of her Royal Consort, nearly a dozen years ago, by those objects of interest which seldom fail of gaining an ascendancy over a mother's heart. The multiplication of family ties, and the solicitudes and joys to which they have necessarily given rise, in the experience of the Queen, concur with other causes in inspiring the hope that the memory of that overwhelming event is so far lightened as to allow the free and uninterrupted play of those affections in which the happiness of a woman's life so largely consists, and which play so great a part in dissipating the gloom of brooding sorrow. Her Majesty's subjects will heartily congratulate her on this new event in her domestic life, and will entertain a hope that it will be to her a rich source of additional enjoyment.

There is no political significance in this betrothal. Dynastic alliances are of little importance in the present time. Probably in no age of the world have they had less influence in guiding the course of national affairs than they have in this. Unhappily, the great questions of international movement—questions, for instance, of peace or war—override all family ties. Policy, at any rate on the large scale, prosecutes its ends without any serious regard to the connections and relationships that may chance to subsist between Royal houses. Our foreign relations will not be modified, even by a hair's breadth, by the alliance of the Duke of Edinburgh with the daughter of the Czar. In one sense such a condition of things may be accepted without regret, but, no doubt, it has its disagreeable aspects. Still, one may be justified in assuming that the engagement between the Duke and the Grand Duchess, sanctioned as it has been by the Queen and the Czar, indicates and illustrates the friendly feeling which at present characterises the relations of the two Courts. Probably the rulers as well as the people of both countries have been taught by observation and experience that the respective interests of Governments which differ widely from each other in the form and working of their national institutions act wisely in giving all the freedom which they claim, and, along with that freedom, all due honour. We have no right to look down on any foreign people because they prefer their own political institutions and methods to those adopted by ourselves; nor have they any sufficient reason to regard us with coldness or dislike because we may chance to have advanced somewhat further in the way of political progress than they have done. Russia and England have many interests in common, many motives for holding each other in high respect. It will rather add to than detract from the force of those motives that the reigning houses of the two empires should be allied by marriage. It may predispose the subjects of both Crowns to mutual kindness and esteem. We believe that the marriage of the Prince of Wales with the Princess Alexandra of Denmark has tended to increase the interest which Englishmen and Danes had previously felt in each other's wellbeing. A similar consequence may result from the matrimonial alliance of the Duke of Edinburgh. Its indirect influence may, to a certain extent, be beneficial to both peoples. But whether this be so or not, we do but express the general sense of the public in saying that the announcement of this Royal betrothal has suggested thoughts and quickened feelings which are in perfect harmony with the event, and has diffused lively gratification amongst all classes of her Majesty's subjects.

The regatta of the Royal Clyde Yacht Club, sailed, on Tuesday from Largs, was a very successful affair. The first prize for the largest class of schooners was won by the Pantomime, and that for the largest class of cutters by the Oimara.

The formidable litigation before the House of Lords' Committee for Privileges respecting the dormant earldom of Mar has been resumed. Both claimants—Lord Kellie and Mr. Goodeve Erskine—are strongly represented.

The Masonic Festival of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Kent was held at Chatham on Wednesday, under the presidency of Viscount Holmsdale, M.P. The members of the craft appeared in mourning for the late Earl of Zetland.

The Board of Trade inquiry into the stranding of the steamer Clarinda was concluded, on Wednesday, at the Greenwich Police Court. The judgment was condemnatory of the conduct of the master, Mr. T. G. Thorpe, and the Court suspended his certificate for nine months.

The following appointments for the Social Science Congress, to be held at Norwich, have been made:—Mr. Joseph Brown, Q.C., president of the Jurisprudence department; Mr. P. F. O'Malley, Q.C., chairman of the Repression of Crime section; Professor W. B. Hodgson, LL.D., president of the Education department; and Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P., president of the department of Economy and Trade.

THE COURT.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, left Windsor Castle yesterday (Friday) week for the Isle of Wight. Her Majesty travelled by the Great Western and South-Western Railways to Gosport, and crossed thence in the Royal yacht Alberta, Captain the Prince of Leiningen, G.C.B., to Osborne, arriving at half-past one o'clock. On the following day Sir Howard Elphinstone visited her Majesty. On Sunday the Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service, performed at Osborne by the Rev. George Prothero. Her Majesty held a Council at Osborne on Thursday. The Queen, with Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, has walked and driven out daily, and has visited West Cowes and Newport. Sir Thomas M. Biddulph has arrived at Osborne.

The Duchess of Roxburghe has succeeded the Duchess Dowager of Athole as Lady in Waiting, and the Hon. Caroline Cavendish has succeeded the Hon. Harriet Phipps as Maid of Honour in Waiting to her Majesty.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Princess of Wales, accompanied by the Grand Duchess Cesarevna, visited Madame Jerichau's exhibition of pictures on Thursday week. The Grand Duke Cesarevitch visited the French Gallery, the Royal Academy of Arts, the Exhibition of Painters in Water Colours, the Burlington Fine Arts Club, and M. Gustave Doré's Gallery of Pictures. On the following day the Prince and the Cesarevitch went to Woolwich, and were present at a review of the Royal Artillery. Their Royal and Imperial Highnesses were entertained at luncheon by Lieut.-General Sir David Wood and the officers of the Royal Artillery, and afterwards inspected the Royal Laboratory and Arsenal. In the evening the Prince and Princess and the Cesarevna were present at a ball given by Countess Cowper, at her residence in Grosvenor-square. On Saturday last the Prince and Princess, accompanied by the Cesarevitch and the Cesarevna, visited the Bank of England, the Electric Telegraph Office, and the Tower of London, where their Royal and Imperial Highnesses were entertained at luncheon by Colonel the Hon. Percy Feilding, Colonel Goodlake, and the officers of the second battalion of Coldstream Guards. The Cesarevitch left Marlborough House in the evening for Darmstadt. On Sunday the Prince and Princess attended Divine service at the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The Rev. the Sub-Dean, the Rev. S. Flood Jones, and the Rev. Canon Harvey officiated. The Cesarevna went to the Russian chapel, Welbeck-street. On Monday their Royal and Imperial Highnesses had luncheon with the Premier and Mrs. Gladstone, at their residence on Carlton House-terrace. The South Wales Choral Union sang before the Prince and Princess and the Cesarevna at Marlborough House. In the evening their Royal and Imperial Highnesses dined with the Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne, at their residence, Berkeley-square. On Tuesday the Prince and Princess and the Cesarevna were entertained at a dinner and a ball by Earl and Countess Granville, at their residence on Carlton House-terrace. On Wednesday their Royal and Imperial Highnesses were present at a ball given by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, at Montague House.

BETROTHAL OF THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

The Duke of Edinburgh is betrothed to the Grand Duchess Marie-Alexandrovna, of Russia, the only daughter of the Emperor Alexander II. of Russia, by his Empress, Maria, daughter of the late Grand Duke Ludwig II. of Hesse-Darmstadt. The Grand Duchess is in her twentieth year, having been born on Oct. 17 (or, according to the old style of Russian calculation, Oct. 5), 1853.

Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein had arranged to leave Frogmore on Wednesday, en route for the Continent, on a visit to the Queen of Holland, at The Hague, and the King and Queen of the Belgians, at Brussels; but, in consequence of the indisposition of the Princess, their departure was deferred. Prince Christian, on behalf of the Duke of Edinburgh, presided, last Saturday, at the opening of an infirmary and an additional wing in connection with the London Orphan Asylum, at Watford.

Prince Arthur has embarked on board her Majesty's yacht Enchantress, Commander Carr, for Norway, to represent the Queen at the coronation of King Oscar II., at Drontheim.

Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne had a dinner-party, on Saturday last, at their residence in Grosvenor-square. Her Royal Highness and the Marquis have also dined with Viscount and Viscountess Strafford de Redcliffe and the Right Hon. the Speaker and Mrs. Brand.

The Duchess of Cambridge had a dinner-party on Wednesday, at her residence in the Ambassadors' Court, St. James's Palace.

THE CHURCH.

A peal of five bells has been presented to St. Peter's Church, Cembwich, near Bridgwater, by Mrs. Jeffery.

The Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot is chairman of the Council of the London Free and Open Church Association.

The Bishop of London has given notice that he will hold his next general ordination in St. Paul's Cathedral at Christmas.

The Bishop of Winchester entertained at dinner, on Tuesday evening, the Archdeacon and Rural Deans of his diocese at Winchester House, St. James's-square. After dinner the Right Rev. Prelate received about 300 of the clergy and other friends.

The churches of Enmoe, Somerset; of Hardwick, near Aylesbury; of Winterborne, Kingstone; of Brackley, Northants; and of Leatherhead have recently been reopened after restoration.

The Bishop of Winchester held a confirmation in the chapel of the Royal Patriotic Fund Girls' School, on Wandsworth-common, on Thursday week, when nearly a hundred boys and girls were confirmed.

The restoration of St. Alban's Abbey is progressing steadily under the care and superintendence of Sir George Gilbert Scott, though we regret to hear that before long it will have to be suspended, as the greater part of the £15,000 already collected for the purpose of its repair has been expended, and subscriptions come in more slowly than was hoped by its promoters.

Last Saturday the foundation-stone of the new parish church of Worlaby, near Brigg, in the diocese of Lincoln, was laid by Mrs. Astley, of Elsham Hall. The new church, which will be built upon the site of the three ancient edifices which have successively occupied the same spot, will cost about £3000, contributed by Lieutenant-Colonel Astley.

The annual examination of the girls in the Clergy Orphan School was held at St. John's-wood on the 11th inst. The Archbishop of Canterbury presided. The former prizes of £10, £5, and £3 each were awarded to Dora Millett, Hilda Grylls, and Evelyn Boyle respectively. The Archbishop expressed his gratification at the examination.

The Post says that arrangements are in progress for the establishment of a new bishopric for the district of Saskatchewan, where there are said to be 300,000 Pagan Indians. The district stretches about 700 miles eastward from the Rocky Mountains, and small settlements exist in various parts of it. In addition to these, there is a large general population. A committee has been formed for the purpose of carrying out the project.

Mrs. Clive, the wife of the Rev. Archer Clive, Chancellor and Prebendary of Hereford Cathedral, and formerly Rector of Solihull, near Birmingham, was writing in her boudoir on Saturday evening, surrounded by a number of books and manuscripts, when a spark flew from the fire and ignited her dress. Before assistance could arrive Mrs. Clive, who for years had been a confirmed invalid, was terribly burned, and died on the following morning. She was the authoress of "Paul Ferroll," a volume of poems, and other works.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. Galford Goodwin, B.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford, has been nominated by the trustees to the scholarship founded in honour of the late Earl of Derby, and called after him the Derby Scholarship. The scholarship was founded last year, and the present is the first election made.

Speech Day at Christ's Hospital was celebrated on Wednesday, when the principal prizes to the successful scholars were distributed by the Lord Mayor. The examiners' report spoke highly of the general efficiency shown in all subjects. The list of honours gained during the past year by "Old Blues" includes, at Cambridge, three scholarships, the second place in the examination for the Indian Civil Service; and at Oxford three first classes, two scholarships, a Radcliffe Travelling Fellowship, and the Gaisford prize for Greek verse.

Wednesday, the 9th inst., being the annual speech day at Highgate School, the prizes for composition and other school exercises were given away before a large number of visitors. Dr. Dyne, the Head Master, mentioned that among the honours gained by pupils from the school at the Universities and elsewhere during the preceding year had been two first-classes in moderations at Oxford and an entrance to Woolwich by open competition.

Thursday, the 10th inst., was speech-day at Haileybury College. By twelve o'clock, the time when the speeches began, between 300 and 400 people were assembled in the great school on the south side of the quadrangle. The pieces acted were selected from Aristophanes' "Clouds," "The Critic," "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," and "Richard II." The acting was very fair throughout. After the speeches the company adjourned to the hall, where a sumptuous dejeuner had been spread. There was a long honour-list for the last year.

"Domum Day" will take place at Winchester College on the 25th inst., and the ball follows the next evening at the New Guildhall.

NATIONS OF WESTERN ASIA.

The advance of Russian conquest with some elements of European civilisation seems in this age destined to put a new face on the border-lands that lie between Europe and Asia, or those parts of one and the other continent which surround the Caspian Sea. It is the manifest destiny of Russia to bring these countries, except such as belong to the two Mohammedan empires of Turkey and Persia, into the peaceful and industrial fellowship of civilised mankind, sharing in the ideas and habits of modern Christendom. To be jealous of this mission, confided by Providence to Russia, would be most unworthy of Great Britain, whose glorious and beneficent task is that of communicating English ways and means of life to the nations of Southern and Eastern Asia, within reach of her maritime commerce and naval power. The task of Russia in Northern and North-Western Asia—of Central Asia we prefer just now to say nothing—is equally commendable and useful to the common interests of humanity. On the western shore, at least, of the Caspian, in the highlands of the Caucasus, and again to the eastward, in the wild region of the Kirghiz Tartars beyond the Ural river, the rude practices of incessant rapine and unsparring warfare, among half-savage tribes of men, who were averse to every kind of productive labour, have been superseded by their subjection to an orderly government; and if only the same results follow the toilsome march of the Russian armies in the deserts of Turkestan, so much the better for all the world.

The eastern shores of the Caspian, as we have remarked, though reckoned to lie in Europe, have the aspect of border-lands, from the Ural river across the Volga to Circassia and Daghestan; while Georgia, separated from these by the Caucasus range of mountains, and also Armenia, the adjacent province of the Sultan's Empire, partake in like manner of both the European and the Asiatic characters, though these are not easily defined. The traveller who should pass through Roumania, down the Lower Danube, and thence across Turkey, or who should take the Crimea in his way to Tiflis or to Astrakhan, would find himself gradually conducted from European customs, scenes, and figures, to those of Asiatic nations. Our illustrations—those on the front page of this week's paper, representing several types of Armenian, Tartar, and Kurdish races, and the group of men and women in Georgia which appears in another Engraving—will suggest to the observant reader, without needing a particular description, some confirmation of this general remark. To enter more into detail on the present occasion would take up more space than we can now afford; but there will be another opportunity of discussing the subject. It is enough here to mention that all these nations—Armenians, Georgians, Mingrelians, Circassians, and Tartars, as well as the Kirghizes, Turkomans, Usbeks, and Bashkirs, on the opposite or eastern shores of the Caspian—have been shaken up together, in extreme geographical and ethnological confusion, by mutual warlike incursions, and by intrusive migrations hither and thither, since the beginning of authentic history. They present even a stranger medley than the diverse mixed peoples of Hindostan under British rule, from the Cashmere frontier to the Bay of Bengal or to the Malabar coast. This political experience of our own might teach us to understand the difficult problem of Russian Imperial Government in the West of Asia, and likewise in the East of Europe. But it is not always that one is disposed to judge another by the measure wherewith he would desire himself to be judged.

BRITISH LEGATION, TEHRAN.

As the Shah Nasr-ood-Deen has lately seen a good deal of us Englishmen in our own country, it is natural to ask how much he had the opportunity of making English acquaintances when he stayed at home in his capital city of Teheran. The whole number of Europeans residing at Teheran does not usually exceed fifty, as we learn from Mr. W. Brittlebank's narrative of his tour last year in "Persia during the Famine" (just published by Mr. B. M. Pickering, of Piccadilly). There are, perhaps, three or four English households connected with the official diplomatic representation of her Majesty Queen Victoria at the Court of his Majesty the Shah. The British Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary receives a salary of £5000 a year; he is assisted by a staff consisting of the Secretary of Legation, the Oriental Secretary, and another secretary; the translator, who is also Vice-Consul; and the physician. Our illustration gives a view of the building allotted for the residence of the British Legation at Teheran. Having casually referred to Mr. Brittlebank's little book, we may here add that it is worth reading, as the latest description of Persia by an English traveller. But there is little pleasure in the scenes which came under his eye at Bushire, where the miseries of the famine were horribly displayed; at Shiraz and Isfahan, once famous towns, now in a wretched state of decay and filthy squalor; lastly, at Teheran, which does not make a favourable impression on European visitors. Between these cities, from the south to the north of the Shah's kingdom, is a dismal road of several hundred miles "over sandy deserts and salt plains." As the author says of his own journey to Teheran in the month of May, "It was almost a repetition of that between Shiraz and Isfahan. But the marches were longer and more fatiguing, the sun grew hotter and hotter, the salt plains intensified our thirst, and dead bodies in every stage of decomposition became more and more frequent. Upon these vultures gorged, unheeding the traveller, or flying away on lazy wing to a little distance until he passed. The unhappy beings who thus perished on the desert plains were doubtless driven from their own mountain homes or villages by want, and were on their way to some one of the chief towns of the country, in the hope of finding there the food for which they starved. They lay where they fell exhausted, and found in death relief from their sufferings." This is not an inviting description of Persia, nor encouraging for the shareholders in Baron Reuter's schemes for the sudden transformation of that country into a modern industrial paradise of wealth. Its misery has either been caused by long ages of oppression and barbarous misrule, or by the arid soil, the parching climate, and the lack of rivers, for which Nature has to answer; but, in the lifetime of Nasr-ood-Deen and Baron Reuter, it will scarcely be possible to redress entirely these unhappy conditions of Persia.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

We suppose that the Alexandra Park meeting, which took place at the end of last week, must be considered a success, for the attendance was very large on both days, and there were no accidents to jockeys or horses. Still, we do not believe that the nature of the course will ever admit of a really high-class fixture being brought off, as the turns are so abrupt that one or two horses ran out in several of the races, and completely destroyed their respective chances. A very nice racing-like filly by Trumpeter—Lady Palmerston, one of Mr. Fisher's powerful team of two-year-olds, won a couple of events; but the best youngster that ran at the meeting was Couronne de Fer, who, with 10 to 1 on him, disposed of Vincent with great ease. Bauernfanger, who appears to have dispensed with his hood and blinkers, was also in capital form, and beat Blenheim very cleverly indeed for the seven-furlong Alexandra Cup, which M. Lefevre won last year with Drummond. The last-named colt, who was on the ground but did not run, would probably have made a better fight with the German horse, as the distance was a little too far for Blenheim. The numerous "little-gos" of the present week at Sutton Park, Chelmsford, Ipswich, &c., need no remark.

On Wednesday Messrs. Tattersall disposed of the whole of the Alvediston stud, the property of Mr. William Day, the well-known trainer. The sale took place at Alexandra Park, which is well adapted for the exhibition of blood stock. Eighty-five lots realised 12,813 gs., a satisfactory result when it is remembered that the thirty-three yearlings are by no means fashionably bred. Araby's Daughter, the dam of Oxonian, only fetched 350 gs., as she is nineteen years old; but her colt foal, own brother to Oxonian, reached 400 gs. The highest price of the sale (460 gs.) was given by Mr. Weatherby for Maid of Athol, a fine young mare by Blair Athol—Tunstall Maid. Of the sires, Camerino was bought in, and Man-at-Arms and Promised Land were knocked down for 150 gs. and 160 gs. respectively. To-day (Saturday) the sale of Sir Joseph Hawley's stud will take place at Middle Park, when some sensational bidding may be expected. Rosicrucian is sure to cause much competition; among the brood mares are Bas Bleu (dam of Blue Gown), Salamanca (dam of Pero Gomez), and Madame Eglantine (dam of Rosicrucian); while yearling brothers to Blue Gown and Pero Gomez and a sister to Rosicrucian will set half the ring nodding.

The annual Eton and Harrow cricket-match was played on Friday and Saturday last, and excited more than usual interest, as the chances of the two elevens were believed to be so evenly balanced that at Lord's, on the night before the match commenced, slight odds were offered on whichever team won the toss. Fortune, as usual, favoured Eton in this respect, and the Light Blues were not disposed of till they had made 145, to which total F. M. Buckland (37) and H. E. Whitmore (not out, 29) were the chief contributors. Thanks chiefly to the capital batting of W. H. Long (36), F. L. Shand (36), and G. B. Walker (23), Harrow headed this score by one run, and the excitement rose higher than ever. Things looked black for Eton during the early part of the second innings, as she lost six good wickets for only 39 runs; but the fine play of F. Judd (38) and H. P. Alleyne (41) completely altered the aspect of affairs, and materially helped to swell a total of 166. The batting of P. F. Hadow (not out, 54) and P. E. Crutchley (49) proved too much for the Eton bowling, and Harrow won a grandly contested match by five wickets. The bowling of F. M. Buckland (Eton) and F. L. Shand (Harrow) was excellent, and they were credited with nine and eight wickets respectively. At the Oval, Lancashire defeated Surrey by 106 runs on Wednesday; and at Prince's Ground the Grenadiers achieved a victory over the Rest of the Brigade by 166 runs on the first innings. At the latter match a brilliant company was present, including the Princess of Wales and the Cesarevna.

Walton-on-Thames Regatta, one of the pleasantest aquatic gatherings of the season, took place on Saturday last. Some very good men had entered—notably Knollys and Trowers, who won the Senior Pairs from two Ino men, and W. L. Slater, who was, however, defeated by E. Connant, a very promising man, in the Senior Sculls. Mrs. Ingram, with her usual kindness, placed the grounds of Mount Felix at the disposal of the committee, and they were filled with a large and fashionable company. The prizes were presented at the conclusion of the regatta by Mrs. Lucas and Mrs. Lindsay. On Monday the trial-heat of the Wingfield Sculls was won by E. C. Decker (Cambridge), who beat W. H. Eyre (Thames R. C.), and F. S. Gullston (London R. C.); and on Wednesday he disposed of C. C. Knollys (Oxford) with the greatest ease, and became amateur champion for the year.

EARTHQUAKE NEAR VENICE: RUINS OF THE CHURCH OF SAN PIETRO DI FERRETTO.

EARTHQUAKE IN ITALY.

It does not often happen that the range of Italian earthquakes, having a violent and destructive character, extends northward of Mount Vesuvius, which serves probably as a safety-valve. But the Venetian territory, round the head of the Adriatic, lying towards the feet of the Carnic Alps, was severely visited by such disturbance on Sunday week, and shocks were felt last Saturday in the neighbourhood of Rome at Frosinone and Alatri. In the former instance, both at Treviso and Belluno, which are situated almost due north of Venice, serious damage was done; at Belluno, amidst the "dolomite" mountains, four persons were killed and several much hurt. The waters of the Lake of Santa Croce, near Belluno, boiled for several days. In four of the villages around Vittorio disasters occurred, by which fourteen lives were lost and many persons were injured, the shock taking effect here at five in the morning, when most of them were in bed in their houses. Two were killed at Torres, four at Curago, eleven at Puso, two at Visione, and one at Cavessago. But it was at Ferretto, four or five miles from Conegliano, which is a town near the Piave river, two hours' journey by railway from Venice, that the greatest loss of life took place. In the Church of San Pietro di Ferretto, at the celebration of early mass that Sunday morning, there was a congregation of 150 people. Three successive shocks of earthquake were felt; at the third shock down fell the roof and one side of the building. Thirty-eight persons were killed and nearly eighty were more or less hurt, scarcely anyone escaping without some injury. The officiating priest had an arm broken, while his assistants were killed. In the course of that day all the bodies were got out the ruins; next day they were buried. Our view of the remains of the building is from a sketch by Mr. S. A. Douglas Volk, of Venice. He found the inside of the church filled with rubbish to the depth of four feet. The timber of the building was rotten and extremely frail. A shock was perceived at Venice, which caused some plaster to fall from the walls or roof in St. Mark's Cathedral, and excited a momentary panic. The city of Verona was also visited that day by two earthquake shocks, and several houses were damaged.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, July 17.

The Shah is already beginning to pall upon the jaded palates of the fickle Parisians. They have said all they can say about him and his diamonds; have originated several witticisms, more or less apposite and more or less improper, at his expense; have stared, or rather tried their hardest to stare, him out of countenance; and are now quite willing that he should quit the stage of popular interest and give place to the next player who is to strut his little hour thereon. Who this next player will be is, of course, at present a mere matter of conjecture; but rumour for the thousandth time points to Marshal Bazaine, whose trial really seems likely to take place at last. There are, however, still a comparatively few Frenchmen who profess the deepest interest in all the movements of the Persian Monarch. These are the authors of the hundreds, if not thousands, of petitions for the order of the Lion and Sun which have been sent into the Palais Bourbon. National weaknesses will bear the test of anything, and, despite the ridicule so continuously heaped by the press and the drama upon the French mania for decorations, the numberless applications made to the Shah prove that this passion is still as strong under the Republic as ever it was in the days of the Empire.

As to the Shah himself, he seems to have enjoyed himself thoroughly, despite the prevailing coolness of his receptions in public. If he is unable, from want of cultivation, to appreciate fully that perfection of taste which the French, somehow by instinct, bring to bear upon all they essay in the way of decoration, the splendid weather, gay dresses, and generally superb effects of the spectacles that have been placed before him cannot fail to have struck home. After the review of Thursday he presented a sword to Marshal MacMahon as a token of esteem, and has subsequently bestowed the order of the Lion and Sun upon that distinguished soldier and also upon M. Buffet. On Friday he visited the well-known circus in the Champs Elysées, and subsequently inspected, by torchlight, the treasures of antique art contained in the sculpture galleries of the Louvre. If truth be told, he seems by all accounts to have been much more powerfully impressed by what he witnessed at the former than at the latter. On Saturday he visited Notre Dame and the Luxembourg, and in the evening paid the long-anticipated visit to the opera, where he was the occasion of two severe disappointments—grieving the audience by appearing without his diamonds, and the artistes by neglecting to pay a visit behind the scenes. It really seems as if this latter omission has been felt more severely than the former, for everyone is commenting upon it. On Sunday his Majesty went to Longchamps to view the races specially got up in his honour by the Jockey Club. The day was dull, and at one time the weather looked threatening, but fortunately held up, so that the latter part of the programme could be successfully carried out. This consisted in a grand fête de nuit on such a scale as has not been attempted here for a long time. The illumination of the Trocadero and the Champs Elysées was in the same style as on bygone fifteenth of August, but, in addition to the attractions of an incalculable number of white and coloured lamps lavished in every direction over these localities, there was a general display of stars and laurel-wreaths on the facades of the different public buildings, and of fireworks on the river, and a retraite aux flambeaux, or torchlight procession of military bands. All this was witnessed by the Shah from a pavilion erected on the summit of the Trocadero. On Monday his Majesty paid a visit to the Jardin des Plantes, the collection of which is still far from complete, and on Tuesday, after inspecting the Hotel de la Monnaie, honoured Marshal MacMahon with his presence at a ball held at the Elysée. Yesterday, after holding a brief reception at the Palais Bourbon, he went to the Louvre, and has gone to-day to view the National Assembly.

The deputies, no doubt, will be on their best behaviour on this occasion; but it is almost to be regretted that his visit did not take place either on Saturday or Monday, on both of which days the sitting was of a character to have certainly astounded him. On the first of these occasions a bill for introducing trial by jury into the colonies led to a most stormy scene, which was only checked by the Vice-President leaving the chair, and was again enacted on the debate being resumed. On Wednesday M. Ernoul, the Minister of Justice, moved the prorogation of the Assembly on the 27th inst., and sought to introduce a bill giving to the Permanent Committee the power to institute immediate prosecutions for offences against the dignity of this body during the recess. The measure was ultimately carried, but not without the most strenuous opposition on the part of the Left and a very powerful speech from M. Gambetta, in which he paid some high compliments to the freedom of thought and speech enjoyed in England. The Shah's visit to Versailles to-day will probably be his last appearance in public here; for, as at present arranged, he starts for Vienna, via Geneva and Turin, to-morrow (Friday).

SPAIN.

Changes are about to take place in the personnel of the Spanish Government. On Wednesday the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Justice, and Finance resigned their portfolios in order to facilitate the formation of a homogeneous Cabinet, and it is reported that a majority of the Cortes have demanded the formation of an energetic Ministry under Salmeron. At a secret meeting of the Cortes on Tuesday it was resolved to proceed with the discussion of the Federal Constitution immediately, and hold two sittings daily till the subject has been disposed of.

Meanwhile the Carlists are actively engaged in combining their forces. The Carlist chief Saballs, at the head of 4000 men, has surprised and defeated, near Ripoli, a column 1000 strong under General Cabriny. It is stated that General Cabriny was killed and the greater portion of his force taken prisoners. Don Carlos re-entered Spain on Tuesday night, and has issued a proclamation to the Carlist volunteers.

A reign of terror seems to prevail in many parts of Spain, and the telegrams report a number of most atrocious outrages. Alcoy, an important manufacturing town in the province of Alicante, has been the scene of terrible barbarities; and there have been riots at Malaga, in the course of which some of the municipal councillors were killed.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

A telegram from Copenhagen states that Prince Arthur is expected to solicit the hand of Princess Thyra, the youngest daughter of the King of Denmark and sister of the Princess of Wales. The Princess is rather more than three years younger than Prince Arthur, and will complete her twentieth year on Sept. 29.

The Dagblad announces that the Gladau, of the Swedish expedition to the North Pole, which had been blocked by ice at Malinoe since Sept. 16, 1872, has arrived at Tromsøe.

RUSSIA.

Letters from Khiva, received at St. Petersburg, announce that the Khan has presented himself at the Russian camp, and declared himself a vassal of the Czar. General Kaufmann has restored the Khan to his position of ruler, but has appointed a council of administration for the period of the Russians' stay in the Khanate. As a mark of gratitude for the consideration shown him, the Khan, on June 24, promulgated a manifesto abolishing slavery for ever. General Kaufmann has sent a despatch to Persia requesting that preparations be made to receive the Persian slaves who have been set free.

AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND.

The Budget of the colony of Victoria was submitted to the Legislative Assembly on Thursday week. The revenue is estimated at £4,205,878, and the expenditure at £4,171,688, including nearly £1,000,000 for education and public works. The Treasury proposes to borrow £1,000,000 for railway extensions.

By a telegram from Melbourne, of the 9th inst., we learn that New Zealand is quiet, and that the latest salmon-breeding experiments have proved successful.

CHINA.

The Japanese Ambassadors and the Foreign Ministers had an audience of the Emperor of China, at Peking, on the morning of the 29th ult. The ceremonies were in the European style.

GREECE.

In the Chamber of Deputies a vote of want of confidence in the Ministry, proposed by the Opposition, has been defeated by a majority of six votes in favour of the Government.

A communication has reached Vienna that the Sultan will be unable to visit the Exhibition there owing to his presence being required in Constantinople by important State affairs.

We learn by a telegram from Hong-Kong that the inquiry into the loss of the steamer Bokhara has terminated, and that the captain is exonerated from blame.

A New York telegram states that the Mormons have abandoned the intention of removing to Arizona, the pioneer of the expedition having returned disheartened.

A Berlin letter states that a party of German savans are about to start on an expedition to explore the Libyan desert, the expense of which (£4000) is to be borne by the Khedive of Egypt.

It was recently announced that the Turkish Government intended to send some war-vessels to Sumatra. This news is now declared to be incorrect, and the Constantinople paper which published it is to be suspended.

The Simoom has sailed from Portsmouth for the seat of war on the West Coast of Africa, with several detachments of troops and a number of mountain howitzers; and the mail-steamer Congo follows from the Mersey, with war material and stores.

The Queen has approved the appointment of Mr. George Berkeley, late Lieutenant-Governor of St. Vincent and now Acting Administrator of Lagos, to be Governor-in-Chief of the West African Settlements.

The next mails for Australia and New Zealand will be dispatched from London as follows:—Via Southampton, on the morning of Thursday, July 31; via Brindisi, on the evening of Friday, Aug. 8.

A telegram has been received in Berlin announcing that the English steamer conveying the German exploring expedition to Congo has been wrecked off Sierra Leone, with the loss of all the effects and scientific instruments on board, but no lives.

The competition at the Paris Ecole des Beaux Arts for the Grand Prix de Rome has resulted as follows:—The first prize was awarded to M. Puget, a pupil of M. Victor Masse; the second prize to M. Hillemacher, and "honourable mention" to M. Corbaz-Maimontel, pupils of M. Francois Bazin.

An adjourned meeting of shareholders in the Jersey Joint-Stock Bank was held yesterday week, at which a report was presented, showing liabilities to the extent of £135,000, with assets amounting to £100,000. A vote of censure on the directors was proposed, but was outvoted.

The Assembly of the Cape of Good Hope has passed a bill for the establishment of a university in that colony, and the Council has affirmed a resolution of the Assembly authorising the Government to spend £26,000 in promoting the immigration into the Cape of British artisans and labourers.

The expectation that the Inman steamer City of Washington might be got off the Gull Rock Bar, on which she had struck, has not been fulfilled. A telegram from Halifax announces that the vessel has broken in two. An inquiry has been opened at Halifax into the loss of the steamer.

A Zanzibar letter states that the Livingstone Search Expedition, under Lieutenant Cameron, was last heard of at Ugo. Young Moffat, who accompanied the party, has fallen a victim to the dangers of African travel, which his distinguished relative has so long survived.

The young Maharajah of Joudhpore has offered the Cawnpore Memorial Church Committee to present them, from his quarries at Mahraua, with the whole of the white marble required to pave the chancel and apse of the church, and to convey it to Cawnpore ready to be placed. This princely gift, which is entirely spontaneous, is accompanied with an expression of his Highness's admiration of the "heroic gallantry and resignation of those who lost their lives at Cawnpore in the eventful year of 1857." The Maharajah's father was conspicuous at that time in putting himself in front of the movement which confirmed the chiefs of Rajpootana in their allegiance to the British Government.

On the despatch-vessel Helicon stopping, recently, at Chanak, in the Dardanelles, to inquire for letters, she received intelligence from Rhodes, dated June 16, that a volcanic eruption had occurred in the island of Niseros, one of the Sporades, on the site of an extinct volcano. About the 10th new craters burst forth, ejecting ashes, stones, and lava, and covering the ground to a considerable extent; but hitherto, happily, no loss of life had occurred. Numerous crevices had been formed in the sides of the mountain, from which hot water flowed. The island was daily being shaken by earthquakes, causing the greatest alarm to the inhabitants. The shocks did not extend to the surrounding islands; but the smoke from the crater was plainly seen from Rhodes, fifty miles distant.

The Devastation made her gunnery trials, on Wednesday, off Spithead, with the utmost success.

To commemorate the establishment of a new Liberal Club at Nottingham, a banquet was given, on Wednesday evening, in the Mechanics' Hall, at which the Duke of St. Albans presided over about 600 of the borough and county electors. There were present Lord Cowper, the Marquis of Hartington, and many influential members of the House of Commons.

A fatal accident has occurred at a school at Romsey to a child of the Prince and Princess de Vismes, similar to that which recently befell one of the Queen's grandchildren. The little boy, who was four years old, was looking out of an upstairs window when a protecting iron gave way, and he fell some twenty feet, and died a few hours after the accident.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Park rate was on Thursday reduced from 5 per cent, to which it was lowered on the 10th inst., to 4½.

Sir A. Clarke, the Governor Elect of the Straits Settlements, has been entertained at the London Tavern by his friends.

Mr. Henry Graves, of Pall-mall, has presented to the Royal Caledonian Asylum a number of fine proof engravings, illustrating Scottish subjects, and worth more than 100 guineas.

The rewards given by the Royal Society for the Protection of Life from Fire were distributed, on Tuesday afternoon, by the Lord Mayor, in the Council Chamber of the Guildhall.

The annual meeting of the Newvenders' Benevolent and Provident Institution was held, on Tuesday evening, at Willis's Rooms. There was a large attendance.

At a meeting, on Wednesday, of the shareholders of the London and Westminster Bank, the sum of £5025 16s. was appropriated as a gift to the clerks of that establishment.

The fourth flower show of the season at the Royal Horticultural Society's Gardens—being almost exclusively confined to pelargoniums—was held on Wednesday and Thursday.

Four additional wards of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic have been opened. All the rooms are fitted up with neatness, and indications of comfort are to be seen throughout the whole establishment.

Yesterday week the Lady Mayoreess gave a ball at the Mansion House. The guests numbered about 800.—Her Majesty's Ministers have accepted invitations by the Lord Mayor to a dinner at the Mansion House on the 30th inst.

The Marquis of Lorne presided, yesterday week, at the annual meeting of the Working Men's Club and Institute Union, and spoke with hearty admiration of its management and of the advantages offered to its members.

The Marquis of Bute lectured, on Monday night, on the "Shrines of the Holy Land." His Lordship avoided all controversial matter, and simply gave his experiences of Bethlehem, Nazareth, and Jerusalem.

The portraits of the late Earl of Derby and Lord Mayo, which were commissioned of Captain Mercier by the Committee of the Junior Carlton Club, are finished, and have received the approbation of the relatives and former colleagues of the deceased noblemen.

The Metropolitan Board of Works, in compliance with recommendations of the finance committee, has agreed to advance £7000 to the St. Pancras Vestry for paving works, and £37,000 to enable the Marylebone Vestry to effect an improvement in Little James-street and Charles-street, Lisson-grove.

The Dowager Marchioness of Westminster has paid in to the account of the Corps of Commissioners, at their bankers, £4666, being the whole of the amount necessary to clear off the debt on the Burgoyne buildings. The noble donor had previously given £1000 to the fund.

Mr. Eaton, favourably known in connection with the recent explorations in Palestine, has been appointed secretary of the Royal Academy, and Mr. Pickersgill (a nephew of the R.A. of that name) keeper, in the room of Messrs. Knight and Landseer, who have retired on pensions equivalent to the salaries formerly received by them.

The Common Council of the City elected a Town Clerk on Thursday. The successful candidate was Mr. John Braddick Monckton, solicitor, of Lincoln's-inn-fields; the one nearest to him was Mr. Edward Besley, barrister, of the Central Criminal Court and Middlesex Sessions. There were several other candidates, of whom the only one that approached Mr. Besley and Mr. Monckton was Mr. Moir, likewise a barrister.

A tessellated pavement has been discovered, seven feet below the street level, on the site of some old buildings recently pulled down on the north side of Bishopsgate-street Within. Its proximity to the surface would indicate a period late in the Roman occupation. It has been seen by members of the London and Middlesex Archaeological Society, and a record of its existence will thus be preserved.

A commemoration festival of the London Orphan Asylum was held at the new institution at Watford, on Saturday, on the occasion of its completing the sixtieth year of its labours. On the same day was held the summer fête of the Home for Little Boys, at Farningham; while at Addlestone, where a village home has been founded under the patronage of the Duchess of Teck, the first stones of three additional cottages were laid.

At a meeting of the Court of Common Council, on Thursday, a letter from Mr. Gladstone was read, offering the honour of a baronetcy to the Lord Mayor in connection with the Shah's visit to the City and the splendid reception which was accorded to his Majesty. At the same time the honour of knighthood was tendered to Mr. Alderman White and Mr. Sheriff Perkins, the Sheriffs. The communications were received with loud cheers.

The first report of the Council of the Royal Albert Hall has been issued. The members are congratulated on the success which has attended the concerts of the Amateur Orchestral Society, and on the maintenance of the Sunday organ performances. The report expresses the belief of the council that a balance of £5726 against the capital account on the year's operations will be removed when the proceeds of the Shah's reception are placed to the credit of the revenue account.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 99,004; of whom 33,086 were in workhouses and 66,008 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1872, 1871, and 1870, these figures show a decrease of 3417, 21,575, and 28,517 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 491, of whom 326 were men, 140 women, and 25 children under sixteen.

The railing surrounding St. Paul's Cathedral is known to have been erected contrary to the opinion of Sir Christopher Wren, and its removal, as contemplated, will much improve the view of the beautiful exterior of the church. The proposal to throw the whole of the paved area before the western front into the public roadway seems, however, to be a mistake. To do so will be no advantage to the traffic at that point, and the space will certainly be appropriated in a way not calculated to maintain the dignity of the metropolitan cathedral.

Last Saturday one of seventy-three schools which the London School Board contemplate erecting for the accommodation of 102,000 children was opened, in the presence of most of the members of the board and many visitors. The new school occupies a central position in the densely-populated districts of Shoreditch, Bethnal-green, and Whitechapel. Addresses were delivered by Lord Lawrence, the chairman of the board; Mr. C. Reed, M.P., the vice-chairman and chairman of the committee of works; Mr. Morley, M.P.; and other gentlemen.

The new east architectural court at the South Kensington Museum, which was begun some six years ago, when the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos was Lord President, as part of a plan which provided for another court of equal height on the west side of the museum, has been opened. The court has cost £34,800, of which sum £32,000 was for the structure and £2,800 for the decorations; and the collection is probably the finest ever brought together in any European city.

The Court of Common Council has received from one of its committees a report on the Emanuel Hospital scheme, as approved by her Majesty. After reciting the various failures before the Commission and in Parliament to obtain modifications of the scheme, it concluded by regretting that the Commissioners had thought fit to make so violent a change in the administration of Lady Dacre's charity. A special court will be called for the election of governors.

An influential meeting was held at Willis's Rooms, yesterday week, to take steps for recognising the public services of Mr. Henry Cole, C.B., on his retirement from the direction of the South Kensington Museum. The Marquis of Westminster presided, and amongst the speakers, in addition to the noble chairman, were the Duke of Sutherland, Earl Granville, Lord Houghton, Lord Clarence Paget, Sir M. D. Wyatt, Mr. George Godwin, Mr. Horsley, R.A., and Mr. C. Minton Campbell. An executive committee was appointed.

The conference held, on Monday, between the committee of master builders and deputation from the masons and carpenters, with the object of effecting a peaceful settlement of the existing dispute, unfortunately ended in failure. At a meeting held in Westminster-chambers, on Wednesday—Mr. B. Hannen, the chairman of the Central Association of Master Builders, presiding—it was resolved to establish an association of employers in the building trade throughout the country for the general protection of its members.

The Wellington monument for St. Paul's continues to make very slow progress, judging by Mr. Lowe's answer to a question put by Mr. Goldsmid in the House of Commons. The special engagement of Mr. Coleman (in the place of Mr. Penrose) to look after the execution of the work by Mr. A. Stevens, the sculptor, does not appear to have been productive of any marked benefit. On June 7, the date of the last report, "Mr. Stevens was convalescent, and again at work on the monument"—an announcement which was received in the House with a laugh. "The whole marble work was now finished, but the sculpture had not made much progress." It was, however, reported last year that the architectural or marble work was then ready for erection, or nearly so, and the (bronze) sculpture would probably be completed this year. Now it is merely "hoped" that the monument will be finished by the end of 1874!

There were 2217 births and 1181 deaths registered in London last week, the former being 13 and the latter 320 below the average. The Registrar-General says:—"The fatality from diarrhoea is increasing; the deaths referred to this disease, which in the two previous weeks had been 22 and 63, further rose to 100 last week, which was, however, 75 below the corrected average number for the corresponding week in the last ten years. Of the hundred deaths from diarrhoea, 78 were of infants under one year of age. To simple cholera 6 deaths were referred, 3 of infants under one year and 3 of adults." There were 3 deaths from smallpox, 24 from measles, 6 from scarlet fever, 5 from diphtheria, 36 from whooping-cough, and 20 from different forms of fever. The fatal cases of whooping-cough, measles, and scarlet fever were less numerous than in recent weeks. Seven deaths were caused by street accidents.

THE WIMBLEDON PRIZE MEETING.

Amongst the competition of Thursday week was the match between the Lords and the Commons. The representatives of the Peerage were the Earl of Denbigh, the Earl of Kingston, Earl Ducie, and Lord Cloncurry, with the Marquis of Lorne, who had been taken from the Commons' reserves in order to equalise the list. The members of the Lower House who shot in the match were Lord Bury, Mr. Arthur Vivian, Mr. Arthur Bass, Mr. Malcolm, and Mr. Fordyce. The Lords made 252 points and the Commons 262. The latter were thus victorious by ten points. The first stage of the Queen's prize was closely contested. The name of Corporal Willows, of the 4th Lincoln, heads the list, and he wins the silver medal and a purse of £60. He was closely run by Wace, of the Hon. Artillery Regiment, and Lister, of the Bradford Rifles.

One of the events of Friday was the decision of the Prince of Wales's prize, for which Private J. S. Hall, 18th Lincoln, and Private Boyd, of Ayr, tied with 69 points each. The first stage of the competition for the St. George's Challenge Vase was decided, and the vase and gold jewel, together with thirty dragon sovereigns, passed into the hands of Sergeant Tildesley, of the 1st Bedfordshire, who made the splendid score of 23 in seven shots at 500 yards; while Sergeant Aken, of Liverpool, and Captain Humphrys, a former Queen's prizeman, marked 27 each. In the course of the competition for the Curtis and Harvey prize, at 200 yards, Corporal Brooke, of the 1st Devon, made 28, the highest possible score. Private Elton, of the 12th Middlesex, had a similar success in the Eley prize; and Private Davies, 1st Salop, in the firing for the Snider Association Cup. The Martin's Challenge Cup competition was concluded. Private Dunlop, who is first, takes the challenge cup and £20. Lieutenant-Colonel Rimington, 2nd London, won the chief Alexandra prize.

Several leading events were decided on Saturday last. There was a large attendance of visitors, and among them were the Duke and Duchess of Teck, the Lord Chancellor and Lady Selborne, and Lord Cairns. The chief attraction was the match for the International Snider Trophy. Colonel Peters, of the Canadian Rifles, who acted as umpire, declared the result as follows:—England, 1180; Scotland, 1168; Ireland, 1072. Major Waller, of the St. George's, made the highest score in the winning team—70 points—and also the highest in the match. The contest amongst the county teams for the China Cup resulted in a victory for Nottingham with 333 points. For the Belgian Challenge Cup, for volley-firing, the 26th Middlesex (the Customs and Docks corps) made 196 points, and were declared the winners. The ties in the St. George's Challenge Vase competition were shot off after some of the best scores had been disqualified, and the result is that Ingram (1st Lanark) takes the silver jewel and £25, in the first stage, and Corporal Hamery, of Cambridge University, the Dragon Cup, in the second stage. The first prize in the Secretary of State for War series was won by McCreath, 5th Ayr (Beith), who made 26 points at 900 yards with a Henry rifle. The other rifles used which took prizes were the Swinburne-Henry, Martini-Henry-Metford, and the Snider. The first prize given by the National Arms Company was also taken by a Henry rifle by Burgess, of Newcastle, with 27 points in seven shots at 500 yards. Livesey (Sussex) and Humphry (Cambridge University) made like scores with the Martini-Henry. The Martin's Challenge Cup for marksmen went to Mr. Dunlop, C.B.,

London Scottish, who made 26 in seven shots at 600 yards with the Snider.

On Sunday morning religious services took place in the Umbrella Tent, where a sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Macdougall, the Rector of Godmanchester, to the volunteers and a large congregation of the general public. Rain fell all day and reduced the camp to the condition of a swamp. In the afternoon a gale arose and blew down the Umbrella Tent, happily without inflicting any serious injury on the few persons underneath. The attendance of visitors was very small.

The camp rapidly recovered from the havoc effected by Sunday's storm, and Monday's firing proceeded steadily. Lieutenant Earl Waldegrave, of the London Brigade, secured the Rifle Oaks prize, with a score of 27, out of a possible 28. In the first stage of the Albert prize Lieutenant Menzies, of the 1st Edinburgh, and Mr. Gould Smith, of Bristol, made the same score at both ranges; and their aggregate of 70 was not repeated, though several 69s appear on the list. Captain Burt, Colonel Malcolm, M.P., Mr. J. Rigby, Mr. Boyd, and Mr. Joyce were the winners of the ladies' prizes. The ties for the Snider Association Cup have been shot off. Sergeant Clark, Queen's Edinburgh; Colour-Sergeant Tildesley, 1st Bedfordshire; Private Davies, 1st Salop; Corporal Mullineux, 40th Lancashire; and Private Wilson, Queen's Westminster, shooting at a carton target at 200 yards, made a centre each the first round; the second round Clark and Tildesley obtained a carton each; the third Clark made a carton (which counts five), and took the prize. Tildesley only obtained a centre.

The final stage of the Queen's prize competition, on Tuesday, was much retarded by the heavy showers of rain which ominously inaugurated St. Swithin's Day. At the 800 yards Private Baker, of the 1st Gloucester, had the lead with a fine score of 25. At the 900 yards he was passed by Corporal Pullman, of the 2nd Middlesex, whose aggregate was 47, Baker's being 45, and Sergeant Archibald Menzies, of the 1st Edinburgh, making a good third with 43. At the 1000 yards Baker and Pullman tied with 59, and Menzies beat them by one, making the top score 60. The marking of Corporal Pullman's last two shots, both misses, occasioned some inquiry at the council tent. The Queen's prizeman was borne off to head-quarters on the shoulders of his "brither Scots." He is a brother of Captain Menzies, a well-known shot, and of two other gentlemen holding official rank in Glasgow and Edinburgh. Sergeant Archibald Menzies, who is now about twenty years of age, first appeared at a public rifle competition in the All-Comers' Association meeting in the Scottish capital last year. He is a law student. The match between the public schools for the beautiful Ashburton Challenge Shield was decided. The schools which sent eleven were Winchester, Harrow, Marlborough, Cheltenham, Eton, Rugby, and Derby. It was a bitter disappointment to the Harrow boys when their splendid shooting at the 500 yards failed of success, and the last two centres scored for Winchester made this school the winners for the third year. The Spencer Cup, which is shot for by the highest scorer in each team, was won for Eton by Sergeant Mellish. The grand aggregate prize has now been decided. It is taken by Colour-Sergeant Kirk, who was before this disqualified for an alleged wrong return in the Alexandra, a competition which enters into the calculations for the aggregate prize. Corporal Willows, of the 4th Lincoln, would, had the disqualification of Mr. Kirk been upheld, have taken the £50 awarded for the best aggregate. The Snider Wimbledon Cup, at 600 yards, 40 marks the highest possible score, has been gained by Mr. Cortis, 1st A.B. Sussex, with 33 points. The first stage of the Army and Navy Challenge Cup, with money prizes to the value of £155, was decided. At 500 yards Privates Harris, 34th Regiment, and Halloway, 1st battalion 7th, made 36 out of a possible 40, and gain £7 10s. each. In the course of the shooting for the Bass prizes, Mr. Dunlop, London Scottish, made, at 500 yards, 23, the highest possible score. Privates M. Verrall, 4th Sussex, and Wade, 1st Lancashire, made 27 each, at 500 yards, for the Licensed Victuallers' prize.

Though one of the pleasantest shooting days yet experienced at Wimbledon, Wednesday was dull enough at the targets. For the Irish International Challenge Trophy, Scotland's champion, Private W. Clark, of Edinburgh, scored 65; Private Hynes, for Ireland, 59; and Major Waller, for England, 59. The trophy therefore goes to Scotland this year. Private Harris, of the 34th Regiment, carried off the Army and Navy Challenge Cup; and Mr. Arthur, of Birmingham, the Arthur prize, with a score of 38. In the match between the two Universities for the Chancellor's Plate, the victory fell to the representatives of Oxford, who scored six points over their opponents. The Albert prize, second stage, £100, was gained by Private Sprott, 1st Lancashire; the Ladies' Snider prize, 500 yards, is taken by Corporal Mayfield. For the Any Rifle Wimbledon Cup, at 1000 yards, Private Ward, of Cheshire, Quarter-master-Sergeant Cortis, 1st A. B. Sussex, and Ensign Smyth, 3rd Lanark, tied. For the Licensed Victuallers' prize, at 500 yards, excellent scores were made, Mr. Grundy, 1st Notts, and Mr. Arrowsmith, Bristol, heading the score with 23 each, and sharing £15 between them. There were eight who scored 27. General Eyre's prize of £100 was won this year by the Royal Marines, but the prize does not pass unless it is won again by the same corps. Meantime, Sergeants Keen and Whithead take £5 each.

The competition for the Elcho Shield took place on Thursday (between eight men for each country, from England, Ireland, and Scotland), and was won by Ireland, with 1195 points—England scoring 1175 and Scotland 1128. The Rajah of Kolapore's Cup, for which eight of the Canadians competed, was also in the programme.

Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck, will present the prizes this (Saturday) afternoon; and the review and march past will follow.

The annual meeting of the East of Scotland Artillery Association took place at Barry Links, near Monifieth, on Saturday last. The Dysart detachment gained the first prize.

Mr. Mechi's farm at Tiptree Hall, Essex, is open to inspection by those who are interested in agricultural production, and will remain so until harvest, which will commence early in August.

A monster fête was held on Tuesday, in Blenheim Park, the seat of the Duke of Marlborough, in aid of the widows' and orphans' fund of the Great Western and Bristol and Exeter Railways' Provident Society.

Mr. Justice Blackburn began, on Tuesday, the hearing of the petition against the return of Mr. W. K. Wait for Gloucester. The specific charges laid include bribery, treating, undue influence, and impersonation.

The council of King's College, London, have elected Dr. John Curnow to the chair of anatomy, vacant by the death of the late Professor Partridge, F.R.S.—The distribution of the annual prizes at King's College School will take place on Tuesday, July 29, at two o'clock, when the Lord Mayor will take the chair.

NEW BOOKS.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer's celebrated but, no doubt, ironical phrase concerning the working classes does duty for the title of Our New Masters, by Thomas Wright, the "Journeyman Engineer" (Strahan and Co.). The author would like the public to know that, although nearly all, if not all, the contents of his volume have already appeared in the pages of certain periodicals, he nevertheless had, from the very first, contemplated a systematic book, and has not gathered together into a heterogeneous collection a quantity of disconnected articles, simply because there were enough of them to fill a certain number of pages. The author, struck by the ignorance generally exhibited as to what manner of men the working classes are by the other classes of society, thought it would be found useful if he, himself one of "our new masters," were to publish some information of a trustworthy sort, as being founded upon personal knowledge, "setting forth what manner of men they were, how their class was composed, what views they really did and what they did not entertain on the more prominent 'questions of the day,' and wherein lay their strength and weakness." Hence this volume, very creditable to a "working man" as a specimen of temperate feeling, sound judgment, practical views, and literary composition. A great many readers, however, will fail to see how "our new masters" are placed in any new and striking light, or how any pregnant facts, hitherto undreamed of, are revealed concerning them. Most people, one would say, are and have long been perfectly aware that the "working classes" are divided into dissident and dissimilar sections; that they are used by political agitators as a mere stalking-horse; that their condition is not regarded by themselves as satisfactory or by others, unless, perhaps, by a few enthusiastic Conservatives after dinner, as reassuring in respect of the future; that their political power, overwhelming as it might and perhaps will some day be, is at present almost "chaotic and useless" for want of proper leaders and proper organisation; that they have some and morbidly invent and imagine other grievances; that they are for the most part inclined towards Republicanism through sheer discontent, just as they would, probably, under a Republican form of government, cry out, as the Israelites cried of old, "Nay, but we will have a king to reign over us;" that they have no truly representative organ amongst the newspapers, which, nevertheless, pretend to represent them; and that, in fine, the "Journeyman Engineer" has a great deal to say about them which is true rather than new, but which is sufficiently important to bear and even require to be constantly pressed, upon public attention, especially when the task is performed by so competent an authority as the "Journeyman Engineer." One of the most amusing, though at the same time shocking, articles is that which is entitled "The Press and the People," and in which plentiful examples are given of the coarse, vituperative, disloyal, and utterly abominable writing in the highest favour amongst "our new masters."

It is not our habit to notice books of theological or anti-theological controversy; but Dr. Strauss's recent essay, The Old Faith and the New, which has been skillfully translated into English by Miss Mathilde Blind (Messrs. Asher and Co.), was announced by Mr. Gladstone, in his speech at Liverpool, the other day, as a work of some importance on the wrong side. We believe that this estimate of its polemical force is greatly exaggerated, and that nobody who has a fair acquaintance with the old stock arguments for and against Christianity will find anything new in Dr. Strauss's latest performance. Bishop Butler and Archdeacon Paley have, indeed, bequeathed to their countrymen a sufficient antidote for the distressing malady of rash denial which has afflicted so many German philosophers since the time of those sound-minded English divines. The most agreeable part of Dr. Strauss's book is the appendix, which consists of a dissertation on the poetry of Goethe and Schiller, and the music of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven. But what has this to do with the grave questions, "Are we still Christians?" "Have we a Religion?" "What is our Conception of the Universe?" and "What is our Rule of Life?" We are rather at a loss to understand the motive of Dr. Strauss in attaching these criticisms of literary and artistic genius to his dry and dreary treatise of the Cosmic Evolution, which he prefers to a God. The great poets and composers of Germany never belonged to his ungenial sect, and he cannot pretend to claim a monopoly in the enjoyment of their noble works.

The copious Life of John Sebastian Bach, in two volumes, by Dr. C. H. Bitter, published in Germany a few years ago, has been turned to good account in an abridged English translation recently issued by Messrs. Houlston and Sons. The adaptation has been skillfully and carefully made by Miss Janet E. Kay-Shuttleworth. In this reduced shape the leading features in the career of the great contemporary of Handel are given with sufficient fulness for ordinary readers, and the volume is supplemented by a valuable catalogue, in detail, of the vast collection of Bach's works, most of which have only been made known within recent years, many of them largely through the exertions of the German Bach Society. The book is further rendered special by a preface contributed by Sir Julius Benedict, in which this distinguished musician expatiates on the bright example offered by the great master of the past, and concludes with the expression of a hope that it may inspire the young votaries of art with the desire of treading in his path.

Musical students, both professional and amateur, will find much valuable instruction in a comprehensive treatise on harmony, counterpoint, and composition, compiled by Mr. H. C. Banister, under the general title of Music, and published by Messrs. Deighton, Bell, and Co., of Cambridge. The compiler's object has been, as stated in his preface, "to supply the want, long expressed, of a compendious manual of musical knowledge for the use of candidates for middle-class examination in connection with the Universities, &c." The work consists of three principal divisions, each of which is subdivided into chapters treating in detail of the subjects of notation, time, rhythm, harmony, counterpoint, and composition. A supplemental glossary of terms used in music adds to the value of the book.

A book written with a purpose is Adamantia: the Truth about the South African Diamond Fields, by Captain Augustus F. Lindley (W. H. and L. Collingridge); and the purpose is "to inform the British Parliament and the British public how their Government has robbed the Orange Free State (one of the two South African Republics) of its diamond fields." It, therefore, belongs to the category of controversial books, towards which the most impartial justice is done when their existence merely is notified, so that those persons who have the time, the inclination, and the requisite amount of technical knowledge, may examine for themselves the points in dispute. The author seems to be haunted by a misgiving to the effect that the "plain terms" he has sometimes employed may not meet with general approval; but he defends himself on the ground that what he has said is true. There are several diagrams to assist the reader.

THE SHAH IN PARIS: RECEPTION AT THE ARC DE TRIOMPHE BY THE PREFECT OF THE SEINE AND MUNICIPAL COUNCIL.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

It can hardly be said that the situation in the Legislature is wholly abnormal; for always in July there are heat and pressure and fluster, and horribly late sittings, and hopeless but resolute clinging to the idea by everyone that work enough to occupy two Sessions will be got through in three weeks. But this time there seems to be unusual worry and fuss. Private members deliberately go on endeavouring to have their motions aired at impossible hours of the night and morning; second readings of bills are moved as calmly as if they would ever be heard of again this year; and, worst of all, the Government does much the same thing. They, too, have important bills, which are sure to be the subject of fierce contest, only in their very earliest stages, and no symptoms are given of sacrificial intent with regard to them. But, worst of all, there have been nearly a party crisis and a collision between the two Houses of the Legislature. True, it has been averted, but in a manner which has covered the Prime Minister with confusion of face, has made Mr. Disraeli radiant, and Lord Cairns presumably jubilant.

To descend to particulars. The second stage of the dispute—if a set of proceedings which were, so to speak, founded on the anonymous (that is, in defiance of the rule which prescribes that each House knows nothing of the goings on of the other, except by means of the official papers which they interchange), can be so called—was interesting; for Mr. Gladstone came forward and made a very remarkable speech, the substance of which was that some authorities were of opinion that Lord Cairns was right in his assertion of a breach of the privileges of the Lords in the matter of the transfer of Scotch and Irish appeals to the new Appellate Court in the Judicature Bill. Nevertheless, he himself was constant in an opinion that it was an undue assumption. Of course everyone expected that, after this, a resolve to struggle and do battle would be announced. Quite the contrary. With many honeyed phrases about harmony and courtesy and conciliation, and sweet counsel between the two Houses, the Premier signified that he would assuage the wrath of Lord Cairns by sending back the bill merely with certain indications, well understood by the initiated, that their Lordships might do a gracious thing by enacting the change themselves. The cause of all the mischief, Mr. Bouverie, grimly smiling, agreed that the claim of privilege was naught, but held that the enactments which he himself had suggested should be thrown over for the year. Having watched the proceedings with intentness, not overt indeed, but careful, Mr. Disraeli struck in and gave forth one of his subtle speeches, in which he manages to damage and ridicule, without committing himself to anything, his position being ticklish, as he had to reconcile his co-operation with Lord Cairns with his own avowed reverence for the privileges of the House of Commons. It seemed as if Mr. Vernon Harcourt had foreseen the circumstances which had arisen, for he came out with a speech which was one of full preparedness, teeming with recondite illustrations and quotations, and which was a masterpiece of irony, in regard to the way in which he pretended to praise both Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli for their faithful devotion to the maintenance of the privileges of the Commons, which was not exactly what they were doing.

However, the matter was not, as was supposed, settled yet. On a subsequent day the arrangement made by the Government cropped up, and there was hot talk, and Mr. Bouverie hovered in his stormy-petrel way over the discussion, and advised and suggested from a total yielding point of view; and Mr. Gladstone refined and used sophisticated arguments, and endeavoured to conceal his real desire to do anything to get rid of the whole business, so that the Judicature bill was safe. At a critical moment Mr. Disraeli came in with a tremendous oration, which, in many parts laboured and long-drawn out, was in others brilliant and flashy, and all through subtle and crafty in a more eminent degree than his former address. Nothing could have been happier than his quizzing of Mr. Vernon Harcourt for some communications to a newspaper on the subject in hand, the effect not being spoiled by the fact that he was talking of the wrong man, as that was not known until the next day. At length, with a look of painful anxiety on his face, Mr. Gladstone signified that he had gathered the feeling of the House to be that the (to Lord Cairns) obnoxious clauses had better be foregone; that he would consult his colleagues and tell the House his resolve next day. Everyone knew that the result was a foregone conclusion, so that on the following day, when the announcement was to be made, there was no great gathering of members, though some people believed that Mr. Gladstone would seize the opportunity to retort on Mr. Disraeli some of the many gibes and taunts and ridicule which he had showered on the leader of the House co nomine. But, for once, discretion prevailed; and in the fewest possible sentences Mr. Gladstone told that he had given way, that the disputed provisions would disappear, and that he would take an incomplete Judicature Bill rather than risk the loss of a complete one; and so this doughty and exciting episode came to a close.

There have been some special features in the proceedings of the Commons. Notably the House has been sitting till four o'clock in the morning on more than one occasion. There is a conventional term in Parliament to the effect that nothing is so unimportant as a Turnpike Bill, and yet now even such a measure has caused a controversy so fierce that time, day and night and their alternations, have been disregarded, and the contest resolved itself into one of physical strength and endurance, for it is nothing else when the proceedings consist only of a long-continued series of divisions up to the hours when the sunlight streams fully into the chamber. Something of the effect of these protracted sittings is to be found in the difficulty of making Houses at twelve o'clock on Wednesdays—once, at least, that process not being completed until past one in the afternoon.

One day, as soon as the House had assembled, Mr. Mitchell-Henry rose, and, exercising a curious privilege appertaining to every individual member, said, using the technical Parliamentary phrase, "I spy strangers in the House." Instantly everyone included in that phrase was bundled out, and the doors were closed. Some who may be called benevolent Parliamentary fairies took the trouble to reveal what occurred during the continuance of the secret conclave, and it seems that Mr. Mitchell-Henry complained that the Irish members, and he in particular, were not adequately reported, and something must be done to correct an evil more growing every day. No doubt it must be trying to so painstaking and anxious a member as Mr. Mitchell-Henry to find that he appears before his constituents and the public only in little in the journals; but it must be understood that there are other considerations influencing those who have debates reported, besides the collection and dissemination of parliamentary eloquence; that it is possible that there may be matter abroad more interesting to the general public than discussions on local or personal grievances in the House; and that sometimes a column of advertisements has a prettier and at the same time a more solid look than the like quantity of speech which is not exactly oratory.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

On Friday, the 11th, Lord Halifax informed the Duke of Somerset that the Government intended to ask Parliament to vote a sum necessary to maintain the breakwater and other works at Alderney. After Lord Granville had answered a question as to the boundary between the Persian and Turkish territories, the House went into Committee on the Law Agents (Scotland) Bill. Lord Colonsay moved the insertion of a clause exempting Writers to the Signet from the necessity of passing the examination prescribed by the bill for admission to practice as law agents, on the ground that they had previously passed a higher examination. Although supported by the Duke of Richmond and Lord Cairns, the clause was negatived by 46 against 39 votes. Several amendments having been inserted, on the motion of Lord Colonsay, the bill passed through Committee. The Canada Loan Guarantee Bill was passed.

The subjects of the military situation at Cape Coast Castle, the confessional in the Established Church, and the Concession to Baron Reuter in Persia were discussed on Monday. The Public Schools (Eton College Property) Bill was read the second time; and the Tithe Commutation Acts Amendment Bill, the National Debt Commissioners (Annuities) Bill, and the Prison Officers' Superannuation (Ireland) Bill were passed.

On Tuesday the report of the Law Agents (Scotland) Bill was received; the subjects of the services of medical officers on the West Coast of Africa, and the importation of coolies to Cuba, were considered; the Public Works Loan Commissioners (School and Sanitary Loan) Bill and the Militia (Service, &c.) Bill were read the second time; and the Colonial Church Bill was read the third time and passed.

On Thursday the Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 3) Bill, the Court of Queen's Bench, Ireland (Grand Jurors) Bill, and the Public Works Loan Commissioners (School and Sanitary Loans) Bill passed through Committee. The Railway and Canal Traffic Bill was brought up, and the Commons' amendment to the Lords' amendments agreed to. The Law Agents (Scotland) Bill was read the third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

An unusual incident took place on Friday, the 11th. Mr. Mitchell Henry drew the Speaker's attention to the presence of "strangers" in the House, and, in accordance with a standing rule, the House was cleared of all but members and officers. It is understood that Mr. Henry then complained of the manner in which many members, and especially Irish members, were systematically treated by the reporters, who either misreported or did not report their remarks at all, and thus made them appear ridiculous to their constituents. Mr. Bouverie objected to the purpose to which Mr. Henry had put the privilege of the House, as did also Mr. Gladstone in a mild way. Mr. Whalley was proceeding to complain of his own treatment, which he attributed to the religious creed of the reporters, when he was called to order by the Speaker, who gave it as his opinion that the House was in favour of the readmission of the strangers. The doors were accordingly reopened. Mr. Gladstone having assured Mr. Bouverie that Mr. O'Keeffe would receive the benefit of the new rule suggested by Lord Hartington and adopted by the Irish National Board of Education, the hon. member stated that he would not proceed with his motion on the Callan schools. The Judicature Bill was resumed in Committee at clause 75, which relates to the personal officers of future Judges. The whole clauses proper, up to 94, were passed, and the postponed clauses entered upon. An amendment of the Attorney-General on clause 31, by which the business of the Court of Bankruptcy would be transferred from the Court of Chancery to the Court of Exchequer, was discussed, divided upon, and carried by 114 to 70. At the evening sitting Colonel Lindsay called attention to the state of the volunteer force, and some discussion followed, in which Lord Elcho supported the conscription. The subject ultimately dropped. Mr. Macfie not being in his place to move his colonial waste lands proposal, Mr. Whalley proceeded to call attention to the "law relating to contempt of court," when the House was counted out.

The Judicature Bill was passed through Committee on Monday, and a long debate ensued as to whether the amendments relating to the transfer of Scotch and Irish appeals to the new Appellate Court should be persevered in, Mr. Gladstone promising to consider what course should be pursued. The report was fixed for Thursday. The Turnpike Trusts Continuance Bill was passed through Committee, Lord G. Cavenish having withdrawn the instruction for the compulsory adoption of the Highways Act. The Lords' amendments to the Railway and Canal Traffic Bill were considered, and the bill was ordered to be sent back to the Lords with a further amendment. The Exchequer Bonds (£1,600,000) Bill and the Regulation of Railways (Returns) Bill were read the second time.

At the afternoon sitting on Tuesday Mr. Gladstone announced that the Government had abandoned their intention of recommitting the Supreme Court of Judicature Bill with the view of transferring the Scotch and Irish appeals from the House of Lords to the new Court of Appeal. The Premier explained that this course had been adopted because the Government were sensible of the risks which the bill might have to encounter in the House of Lords, in consequence of the serious and probably lengthened debates to which it would there be subjected. The Rating (Valuation and Liability) Bill gave rise to a succession of sharp debates. Mr. Gladstone objected to the recommitment of the whole bill, which would be fatal to it for this Session, and again asserted that this measure was the basis of the whole Government scheme for the reform of local taxation. Eventually it was moved and agreed to that the bill should only be recommitted as regarded clauses 1, 3, and 19, and any new clauses relating to the subject matter of the three clauses specified; and the House then went into Committee on the bill, passed clause 1 with verbal amendments, and rejected clause 19. The new clause proposed by Mr. Stansfeld, defining the rateable value of land used as plantation, was under discussion when progress was reported. The Military Manœuvres Bill was read the third time and passed. The Exchequer Bonds (£1,600,000) Bill and the Treasury Chest Fund Bill were passed through Committee. The Turnpike Acts Continuance Bill, as amended, was considered and agreed to. At the evening sitting the subjects of the ecclesiastical policy of the Government in regard to the Established Church in the West Indies and the revenues of the Established Church in England were discussed; and attention was called, but without effect, to the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1871.

The bill for giving certain powers to Scotch tenant-farmers to erect labourers' cottages at the expense of the landlords was again discussed on Wednesday, and finally disposed of by an adverse vote of 78 to 74. Mr. T. Collins's bill for applying the cumulative vote to the election of aldermen by town councillors was debated at some length, and talked out. The Public Health Act (1872) Amendment Bill was read the second time; and the Exchequer Bonds Bill, the Treasury Chest Fund Bill, the Turnpike Acts Continuance Bill, and the Revising Barristers Bill were read the third time and passed.

Mr. Aytton, on Thursday, in reply to questions, intimated that the sculptures and models bequeathed by the late Mr. Gibson would be exhibited at the Royal Academy in May next; and said he thought it extremely probable that the houses standing between Parliament street and the new Colonial and Home Offices would be taken down before the meeting of Parliament. Lord Otho Fitzgerald brought up the reply of the Queen to the address praying her Majesty to take steps with a view to the establishment of a system of international arbitration. In reply, her Majesty said:—"I am sensible of the philanthropic motives which have dictated your address. I have at all times sought to extend, both by advice and example, as occasion might offer, the practice of closing controversies between nations by submission to the impartial judgment of friends, and to encourage the adoption of international rules intended for the equal benefit of all. I shall continue to pursue a similar course, with due regard to time and opportunity, when it shall seem likely to be attended with advantage." The reading of this reply was received with cheers and laughter. Mr. W. E. Forster, in moving the second reading of the Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, explained the course which Ministers contemplated in the face of the objections raised in various quarters against some of its provisions, and particularly the third clause. The object of that clause was twofold—first, to secure the education of all the children of outdoor paupers; secondly, to transfer to the poor-law guardians, under certain conditions, the onus of paying wholly or in part the school fees for the children of indigent parents. It was also proposed to extend the provisions of Denison's Act in making education compulsory in the case of pauper children. He admitted that this must cause a temporary and inconsiderable increase in the rates; but he trusted that the struggle between conscience and pocket would not be allowed to keep children untaught. He also added that for every sixpence found by the local rates another sixpence would come from Imperial sources. And this, he held, was as good a bargain, so far as local rates were concerned, as could be expected. Mr. McCullagh Torrens moved the previous question, contending that the measure would overtax the poorest districts, would offer an inducement to pauperism and convert the maximum of rating into the minimum of charge. Sir Massey Lopes seconded the amendment. Mr. Trevelyan, Mr. Melly, Mr. C. Reed, Sir C. Adderley, and others supported the bill, which was warmly opposed by Mr. Newdegate and several other hon. members. After a long and animated debate the House divided, when the second reading of the bill was carried by 343 against 72. The bill was then read the second time.

LAW AND POLICE.

In consequence of the detention in town of Mr. Justice Lush, one of the presiding Judges at the Tickenhoe trial, Mr. Fitzjames Stephen, Q.C., acts as Judge upon the Western Circuit, with Chief Baron Kelly.

At the conclusion of the arguments in the appeal of "Gray v. Lewis," which lasted the whole of Thursday, the Lords Justices delivered judgment. Lord Justice James said that the defendants, Mr. Harvey Lewis, M.P., and Mr. F. B. Henshaw (who alone appealed), were entitled to be relieved from the consequences of the Vice-Chancellor's decree. If ever a bill was demurrable, this bill was so, having been instituted by the wrong plaintiff in the wrong form. The bill must, therefore, be dismissed. Lord Justice Mellish concurred.

At Durham Assizes, on Monday, the action brought against Mr. George Leeman, M.P. for York, by Mr. R. Ward Jackson, M.P. for Hartlepool, was concluded, a verdict being given for the plaintiff, with 40s. damages.

In the Court of Session, Edinburgh, on Tuesday, Mr. William Robert Bald, corn broker, Glasgow, was awarded £3500 as compensation for injuries received by him in October last at the Kirtlebridge accident on the Caledonian Railway.

Dr. Berrington, promoter of the "high-class college," has had a third charge of swindling entered against him at the Hampstead Police Court, and has been committed for trial.

John Wilson, a timman, of Leather-lane, but formerly of Colney-hatch, has been charged at Hampstead with attempting to upset a train on the Midland Railway by placing iron bars on the line. When he had finished the first part of his practical joke he stationed himself on a bridge and threw stones at the train. He was committed to the Central Criminal Court.

Joseph Head, of Bramley, and Samuel Harding, of Bruton, Somersetshire, have been fined at Guildhall for sending diseased meat to the Metropolitan Meat Market.

William Brown, a City merchant, charged at the Mansion House with forging and uttering bills of exchange, has been committed for trial.

Edward Sainger, Jane Savage, and Edmund Hacker were charged at Lambeth, on Saturday last, with being concerned in obtaining money by representing a painted sparrow to be a canary. The prisoners were in Albany-road, Camberwell, and two women, one of whom was the prisoner Savage, told Mrs. Felton that their "Missus" had given them a canary. Mrs. Felton was induced to give half a crown for the bird, which was in a bag. On getting home she found it was a painted sparrow. It was shown that many persons had been duped by the prisoners, and they were committed for trial.

Benjamin Hudson, the young collier who murdered his wife last April, was tried at the Derby Assizes, on Tuesday, and found guilty, but recommended to mercy on the ground of provocation. The Judge passed sentence of death.

On Monday, before Mr. Justice Grove, Charles Doran, a fireman, was indicted, at Glamorgan, for the wilful murder of James Maguor, at Dowlais, in April last. After the evidence connecting the prisoner with the crime had been given, it was contended that he received sufficient provocation to reduce the crime from murder to manslaughter, and he was therefore sentenced to twenty years' penal servitude.

At the Durham Assizes, on Saturday, sentence of death was passed upon a young man named Joseph Turnbull, coal-miner, for the murder of Martin Hagan, at Willington, on April 21 last. The crime arose out of a quarrel between English and Irish labourers.

At the Cowan Assizes, on Thursday, Lawrence Smith, a blind man, was tried for the murder of Patrick Lynch, a respectable farmer. He was found guilty, and sentenced to be hanged.

Her Majesty has commanded that the 79th Regiment shall be styled the "79th (Queen's Own) Cameron Highlanders."

Mr. Kettle, as arbitrator between the Cleveland ironstone miners and their employers, has decided that the position of the men and the prospects of the iron trade do not warrant any addition to the large increase of wages which they obtained.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

This week commenced with a performance of "Don Giovanni," for the last time this season; on Tuesday "Les Diamans de la Couronne" was given, also for the last time. On Wednesday "Der Freischütz" was performed, and for Friday "L'Etoile du Nord" was announced—each for the first time this season—the former being promised a second time to-night (Saturday). The cast of "Der Freischütz" was similar to that of last year, with the exception of the substitution of Mdlle. d'Angeri for Madame Lucca as Agata. The lady first named, who made her debut here on the opening night of the season, appeared to greater advantage in her recent performance than heretofore, particularly in the delivery of the great scena ("Softly sighs"), which was given with much feeling and dramatic power, and gained for her general applause. As already implied, other principal characters were as before—Annetta, Madame Sinico; Caspar, M. Faure; Max, Signor Bettini, &c. The overture and Caspar's drinking-song were encored. Signor Beviniani conducted on this occasion.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

There is little to record of this establishment beyond the fact of its close to-night (Saturday), somewhat sooner than was anticipated; another and greater surprise having been caused by the announcement that Balfe's unheard opera, "Il Talismano," will remain so until next season, its production having been postponed, as explained in recent advertisements.

Since our last notice "Le Nozze di Figaro" has been given (on Saturday), for the first time this season, with a cast similar in most respects to that of last year, including the important features of Mdlle. Titiens as the Countess and Signor Agnesi as Figaro, the principal change having been the appearance of Mdlle. Ostava Torriani as Susanna, in which character that lady appeared to more advantage than heretofore. Her fresh quality of voice and grace of style were advantageously displayed in various instances, particularly in the duet with the Count, "Crudel per ché;" in that with the Countess, "Sull' aria" (both encored); and, above all, in Susanna's important aria, "Deh vieni," in which latter the singer produced a highly favourable impression. In every respect Mdlle. Torriani's performance was characterised by much refinement. The Countess of Mdlle. Titiens has, for several seasons, been one of her favourite parts; and again her fine voice and earnest style were displayed in music worthy of them, her delivery of the cavatina "Porgi amor" and the aria "Love song" having been especially successful. Madame Trebelli-Bettini had not appeared in the character of Cherubino for three years previously. The music of the part suffers somewhat from the transposition of key necessary to bring it within the compass of this lady's voice. Notwithstanding this disadvantage, however, her fine singing gave great effect to the prominent passages for the Page—the aria "Non so più," and the canzone "Voi che sapete," which latter had to be repeated. Signor Rota, as the Count, sang well throughout. Signor Agnesi's Figaro was the same fine performance as heretofore, and the Bartolo of Signor Borella also presented all its former characteristics. Other parts were efficiently filled by Mdlle. Bauermeister and Signori Rinaldini, Casaboni, and Sinigaglia.

The performances for this, the closing, week announced were—"Semiramide" on Monday, "Faust" on Tuesday (for the benefit of Madame Nilsson), "Les Huguenots" on Thursday, "Marta" on Friday (for the benefit of Signor Campanini), and "Le Nozze di Figaro" on Saturday (for the benefit of Mdlle. Titiens).

The season of Her Majesty's Opera at Drury Lane Theatre commenced on April 15, and the proceedings throughout have offered nothing of positive novelty, with the exception of an unusually large number of first appearances. The names of several of the established favourites who reappeared this year are incidentally mentioned above. Others were Mdlles. Ilma de Murska and Marie Roze, and Signori Mongini, Fancelli, and Mendioroz. The new comers were Mdlle. Alwina Valleria, Torriani, and Macvitz, and Signori Aramburo, Cantini, Collini, Del Puente, Castelmarty, Campobello, and Pro.

As to works, there is scarcely anything to be said, as no novelty whatever has been produced, unless a rehearsing of "Mignon," with Madame Nilsson as the heroine, and the first performance under this management of "La Favorita," can be so considered—the unfulfilled promises being numerous, as is, more or less, the case with most operatic seasons, probably from causes which cannot be foreseen when the manager issues his prospectus.

Sir Michael Costa has continued his valuable aid as conductor and musical director; and here it may be proper to mention that an authoritative contradiction has been given to the rumour which was circulated as to Sir Michael's intended speedy retirement from professional duties.

NATIONAL MUSIC MEETINGS.

The second series of these annual competitions at the Crystal Palace closed on Saturday. The fourth and last of the trial performances took place on Thursday week, when the occasion possessed a special interest from the opposition offered to the South Wales Choral Union by the Tonic Sol-Fa Association.

Last year, it will be remembered, the first-named body gained the challenge prize cup (value £1000) unopposed, but fully justified by the exceptionally fine singing of the choristers. This year they were again awarded the prize (together with a purse of £100) under the more satisfactory condition of a powerful opposition. Both choirs sang Bach's motet, "I wrestle and pray," the "Hallelujah Chorus," from Beethoven's "Mount of Olives;" the chorus "See what love," from Mendelssohn's "St. Paul;" and the fine choral movement, "Come with torches," from the same composer's "Walpurgis Night" music. Without any disparagement of the meritorious performances of the defeated body, it cannot be denied that those of the Welsh choristers were in every way far superior. In richness of tone, power without coarseness, energy, precision, and truth of intonation, the Cambrian singers fully maintained the high impression produced by their last year's performances, and justified the verdict pronounced in their favour by the judges—Sir J. Benedict, Sir J. Goss, and Mr. Barnby—who awarded the second prize (a harmonium presented by Messrs. Alexandre, of Paris) to the Tonic Sol-Fa Association.

The other contest of the day was between three choirs of male singers—the Bristol Choral Union, the Liverpool Representative Choir, and Mr. Proudman's men's-voice choir. The judges in this case were Sir J. Benedict, Mr. Leslie, and Mr. Barnby; and they bestowed the first prize (a purse of £50) on the Liverpool choir, the second (a 10-guinea library of music, presented by Messrs. Chappell and Co.) on that of Bristol, and a certificate of merit to the other choir.

The proceedings closed on Saturday with the distribution of prizes, followed by a concert and other entertainments.

A new series of twelve performances of operas in English commenced at the Crystal Palace on Tuesday, when a version of Auber's "Le Domino Noir" was very effectively given, the principal characters represented by Madame Florence Lancia (Angela) and Mr. J. Maas (Horace), other parts having been filled by Misses A. Goodall, A. Thirlwall, Messrs. H. Corri, E. Cotte, &c. The co-operation of the company's fine orchestra, conducted by Mr. Manns, is an important aid to the general effect. "Le Domino Noir" was repeated on Thursday; other first performances announced as forthcoming being those of "Satanella" and "Norma." The fourth concert of the Welsh Choral Union took place on Monday. The sixth and last but one of the summer concerts is announced for to-day (Saturday).

At the matinée of Mr. Frits Hartvigson, on Monday, his own fine pianoforte-playing was the principal feature. This was displayed in several solo pieces by Bach, Von Bülow, Chopin, and Liszt; and (in association with Herr Daubert) in Beethoven's sonata, with violoncello, in A; and, with the co-operation of Mr. Walter Bache, in Raff's chaconne for two pianos.

A military concert will take place at the Royal Albert Hall this (Saturday) afternoon at three o'clock, at which Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Mdlle. Alwina Valleria, Mdlle. Marie Roze, and Signor Campanini will assist.

The annual public concert of the students of the Royal Academy of Music will be held at the Hanover-square Rooms on Saturday next.

Promenade concerts, under the experienced direction of M. Riviere, are to begin at Covent-Garden Theatre on Aug. 16.

THEATRES.

At the close of the season there is but little to record. It was not to be expected, however, that the visit of the Shah would be permitted to pass over without an attempt at its improvement. In addition to the slight piece at the Globe, called "Doing the Shah," a more important one, from the pen of Mr. Burnand, has been produced at the Opéra Comique. The latter is called "Kissi-Kissi; or, the Pa, the Ma, and the Padisha." This new Persian extravaganza is accompanied with Offenbach's music, and goes remarkably well. It has been splendidly got up as a spectacle, and altogether projected on a costly scale. Mr. Burnand has provided the dialogue with an abundance of puns, and the story, for a piece of this class, may be considered as really clever. The heroine, named Kissi-Kissi, is presented to us as the only daughter of the Grand Vizier Heerza Beg Phul (Mr. Perrini), whose boyish predilections are a great trouble to her parents. Besides this, the supposed hoyden is in love, Prince Kikki Wikki (Miss Almar Santon) being the object of her attachment, who waits, besides, to be first addressed. The mystery is ultimately explained. The girl has been brought up as a boy; the boy, as a girl. Such is the position of affairs when the Shah returns home from his travels and relates all he has seen in England. The portrait of this illustrious personage is a full-length, and the witty author has provided him with a series of humorous descriptions which are very amusing. Mr. Henry Corri makes up for the character in the most effective manner. He realises the man to the most minute details, not forgetting the spectacles. The Shah of the stage is deprived, however, of many of his gems, which have been pledged to his "uncle;" and in their stead wears round his neck the pawnbroker's tickets. We have next to speak of Miss Harriet Coveney, the Grand Vizier's only wife, named Ima Nussa, who suffers remorse for having disguised the sex of the children. The children themselves have by this time penetrated the secret. All that remains is to explain it to the Padisha; and here we think that the clever writer has shown some awkwardness. The revelation should come sooner than it does. Of the acting and the appointments we have only a good account to render. Seldom has an occasional piece been better performed on the first night or proved more successful.

On Saturday last Mr. Buckstone brought to its close the Haymarket season, rendered notable through the production of Mr. W. S. Gilbert's "Wicked World," by taking his annual benefit. The programme was various, two songs by Mr. Sims Reeves being added to the dramatic attractions. Mr. Buckstone's farewell speech, always regarded as one of the events of the theatrical year, was equal to the occasion.

The last of the Italian plays given by Madame Ristori at Drury Lane was represented on Friday week. The performance was diversified by the recitation in French of Joan of Arc's farewell apostrophe to her mother's cottage, and the social relations of life, when placing on her brow the typical helmet, thus showing her devotion to France. Full justice was done to the pathetic and spirit-stirring lines of M. Legouvé. The performance concluded with the famous scene from "Macbeth," which was rendered in the most impressive manner.

The favour with which the series of Opéras Bouffes, produced under the direction of M. Humbert at the St. James's, have been received by the London public is not in the least diminished. Last Saturday night "La Belle Hélène," with which everyone is familiar, was revived, and attracted a crowded and enthusiastic audience.

Madame Judic has appeared at the Princess's, and achieved an increasing popularity. The theme of most of her songs, however, is objectionable.

Mr. H. J. Irving's benefit will take place this evening at the Lyceum, when he will reappear in the part of Mathias in "The Bells," and in that of Charles I., he and Miss Isabel Bateman performing together in the last act.

The tenancy of Mr. and Mrs. German Reed is about to expire at the Gallery of Illustration, which, after the 31st inst., will cease to exist as a place of public entertainment. For many years Mr. and Mrs. German Reed, assisted by a small but talented company, have given "a local habitation and a name" to a class of entertainment distinguished by its refinement. Our readers will be glad to learn that they will not be permanently deprived of a favourite amusement, for Mrs. Reed will resume her entertainments next season. Meantime she will take a short tour in the provinces.

A public park, for the use of the inhabitants of Ashton-under-Lyne, Stalybridge, and neighbourhood, was opened, last Saturday, by the Earl of Stamford and Warrington. In the year 1858 the late Mr. S. Oldham left a bequest of £7000, the interest of which was to be appropriated for the purpose of keeping in repair and defraying the cost of management of a public park to be provided for the people. In June, 1871, the mansion and park, known as the Highfield estate, were sold, for a very low sum, to H. T. Darnton, Esq., who gave up his purchase to a committee. Lord Stamford, on the understanding that the people would subscribe £10,000, made a gift of thirty-five acres, valued at over £12,000, to the park committee, thus making a beautiful place of recreation for the people, occupying over fifty acres of ground. The park, with a splendid mansion for a museum and library, and containing gymnasiums, bowling-green, large lakes, and waterfalls, was opened on Saturday, which was observed as a holiday.

EAST AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

The interest just now felt in this subject, as shown by the public meeting last week in Exeter Hall, is heightened by the recent success of her Majesty's Government in negotiating with the Sultan of Zanzibar a treaty for the suppression of the horrid traffic in human beings, denounced by Dr. Livingstone from the far inland shores of Tanganyika, to which we called attention a twelvemonth ago. We gave last week some illustrations of the different classes and races of people concerned in the East African slave trade, from sketches made by Mr. B. C. Frere, son of the Special Envoy, Sir Bartle Frere, during his diplomatic cruise in H.M.S. Enchantress between Muscat, at the mouth of the Persian Gulf, Zanzibar, with the adjacent African mainland, the Comoro Isles, Madagascar, and the Portuguese settlement of Mozambique. Other gentlemen of the same expedition, Lieutenant A. M. R. Hamilton, R.N., and Captain Fairfax, naval attaché to the mission, have likewise furnished sketches, which will appear in this Journal. Meantime we have engraved for the present Number four views of Mozambique and the neighbouring territory, which were obligingly lent us by Sir William Parker, Bart., of Melford, Suffolk, having been drawn by him from slight sketches made on that coast a few years ago by his brother, the late Captain Hyde Parker, R.N. They represent—1. Part of the town and the fort of St. Sebastian, at Mozambique. 2. Mafamale Island, at the mouth of the river Angoxa, in the Mozambique Channel, about 150 miles south of Mozambique. (This sketch shows a slaver driven on shore by a man-of-war.) 3. The Lurio River, with the distant mountains of Picos Fragos, about one hundred miles north of Mozambique. 4. The Rovuma River, midway between Mozambique and Zanzibar. These little-known rivers are much frequented by the slavers. Sir William Parker writes the following more detailed account of the places shown in his drawings:—

"The town of Mozambique, which nearly covers the low sandy island of the same name, in lat. 15 deg. 3 min. S., long. 40 deg. 58 min. E., is the capital of the Portuguese possessions on the east coast of Africa, and the residence of the Governor. The island is a mile and three quarters long, and barely half a mile wide at the broadest part. The fine harbour to which this place owes all its importance is one of the few safe anchorages on the coast during all weathers. The building of the town was commenced shortly after Vasco de Gama touched here on his first voyage to India.

"The large fort of St. Sebastian, shown in the drawing, at the north-east end of the island, is a fine piece of old masonry, and was built at the commencement of the eighteenth century. Portuguese tradition says that it was completed within three years, but that its construction cost the lives of 60,000 negroes. It can mount eighty guns, and commands the bay and harbour; and, though now in a neglected state, like everything Portuguese on this coast, it is still a strong work. The town is irregular, with narrow streets; but the houses are generally well built, with tanks on the roofs for rain water, as all the well water on the island is brackish. It contains about 6000 inhabitants, of whom not 400 are free, and of these latter only some thirty are Portuguese; all the remaining free population being made up of half-castes, with Arabs and Banyans, who are the principal traders; and, though there is no actual slave trade here, the merchants are more or less interested in it. Some of the Portuguese have villas and gardens at Cabeceira Grande, on the mainland of the bay, while many of the Arabs and Mohammedans reside at Cabeceira Pequena. The climate is deadly, and the depravity of morals notorious; and Mozambique is now sinking rapidly into decay.

"About a hundred miles north of Mozambique are the bays of Almeida and Lurio, into the latter of which flows the river of the same name, a fine stream, which is in some places within the entrance two miles broad. Like most of the east-coast rivers, the Lurio has a bar across its mouth, with very little water on it in a dry season; but in the rains it pours down a great body of water of a reddish tint, which discolours the sea to a considerable distance. On the north bank, about three miles up, is a considerable village, with some large huts, which the natives say are stores for grain, beans, and other produce, sent to Mozambique for the food of the slaves there; but it is probable that they also serve the purpose, for which they are well adapted, of slave barracoons when so required. From Lurio Bay are visible the curious distant peaks, shown in the Engraving, which are called by the Portuguese Picos Fragos, and which are an excellent landmark for this part of the coast.

"To the north of Cape Delgado, in a bay about midway between Mozambique and Zanzibar, and within the territory claimed by the Imam of Muscat, is the river Rovooma (spelt on some maps Lovouma). Near its entrance there is good anchorage; and though the left side of the river is full of sandbanks, there is a channel three fathoms deep, close to the right bank. The stream is always very strong, and in the rainy season an immense body of water is discharged. The water at the surface of the bay, as far out as the anchorage, is frequently quite drinkable. The banks of the river are wooded with some very fine trees. A few miles up, the country becomes hilly. The anchorage is resorted to by slavers while waiting for their cargoes, being very convenient from its facilities for wooding and watering. Some coasting slave trade to Zanzibar is also carried on from this place and neighbourhood.

"Southward of Mozambique is the Angoxa river, which has a dangerous bar at its entrance, with a depth of from 2½ fathoms to 3 fathoms at high water, on which the sea breaks heavily with scutherly winds. It is, however, navigated by dhows, though not safe, except with a leading wind. The river banks are low and sandy, with some casuarina trees. The inhabitants are a mixture of Arabs, blacks, and outcasts of all sorts. Their territory is nominally within the Portuguese dominions; but they are, in fact, perfectly independent, and under the rule of a Sultan. The entrance to the river is, to a certain extent, sheltered by an extensive coral reef surrounding Mafamale Island, on which in the Engraving a slaver is represented driven on shore by a man-of-war cruiser. The island above water has diminished in size since many of its trees were cut down for firewood."

We may add that the newly-published book of Captain George Sullivan, R.N., entitled "Dhow-Chasing in Zanzibar Waters," to which we referred last week (published by Sampson Low, Marston, and Searle), contains much authentic information upon the facts of Portuguese connivance at the slave trade in the Mozambique Channel.

The appointment of the Duke of Roxburgh to be Lord Lieutenant of Berwickshire, vice Baron Marjoribanks, deceased, is officially announced in the Gazette.

An Art-Treasures and Industrial Exhibition was opened in the Mechanics' Institution, Bradford, on Wednesday, by Mr. Thompson, the Mayor; the object being to raise funds for liquidating the debt of £5000 upon the new building of the institute. The exhibition comprises a fine collection of paintings, mostly by modern British artists, machinery in motion, objects from the South Kensington and Indian Museums, and armour from the Tower.

MDLLE. ILMA DE MURSKA.

This admirable artist—a native of Hungary—first appeared in London at Her Majesty's Theatre, where she made her début in 1865, as Lucia, a character which is still one of the most attractive among her many and varied representations. There are, however, other parts requiring an exceptionally high range of voice, which is possessed by very few singers to such extent as by Mdlle. de Murska. She is one of the best representatives of such parts. The music for the Queen of Night, in Mozart's "Die Zauberflöte" ("Il Flauto Magico"), is an instance of this, having been written specially for a singer of the time who possessed a rare command of the highest soprano notes—the aria "Gl'angeli" extending to F in alt. Not only in this opera, but also in various others, has the exceptional value of Mdlle. de Murska been proved, here as well as abroad, and with a recent development of vocal and dramatic power that we have already commented on. The brilliancy of her voice and her facile execution of the most difficult bravura passages have been admirably displayed, not only in the characters already specified, but also as Dinorah, the Princess in "Roberto," the Queen in "Les Huguenots" and other parts.

Special mention is due to the performance by this accomplished artist of the character of Senta in "L'Olandese Dannato," (the Italian version of Wagner's "Der Fliegende Holländer"), which was brought out at the Drury Lane Opera during the temporary management of Mr. George Wood, in 1870. Those who had before only heard Mdlle. de Murska as a bravura singer in operas of a lighter class here found occasion to recognise the dramatic power of the singer in a remarkable work that should have received frequent repetition, whereas it was heard but twice. It is to be hoped that Mdlle. de Murska's return next season may be coupled with a revival of Wagner's opera, and a renewal of her admirable performance therein.

We have Engraved the Portrait of this lady from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, of Baker-street, Portman-square.

MDLLE. ILMA DE MURSKA.

SIGNOR AGNESI.

This eminent vocalist is a native of Belgium, and received his musical education at the Brussels Conservatoire, when under the direction of the late M. Fétis. Here Signor Agnesi acquired a thorough knowledge of his art, both practical and theoretical; having previously been, when a boy, a performer on the clarinet and bassoon. Soon after his entry at the Brussels institution he won the prizes for solfeggi, organ-playing, harmony, and composition. He shortly afterwards produced a grand opera in two acts entitled "Hermold le Normand," which met with considerable success at the Brussels Grand Opera. Subsequently the young composer put music to a comic opera by Scribe, the production of which was nearly prevented by the sudden illness of the baritone engaged. In this emergency Agnesi undertook the part, and was so successful in his double capacity of singer and composer that he was, it is said, called twenty-four times before the curtain. This event determined the career of Agnesi as an operatic singer. Rossini happened to be present on the occasion referred to, and by the influence of that great composer a Parisian career was opened to the artist. The counsels of the Italian maestro were of high benefit to Agnesi, who is now one of the best of the few thoroughly Rossinian singers of the day. Special proof of this has been afforded during the present season, as heretofore, by Signor Agnesi's fine performance as Assur, in "Semiramide," as given at the Drury-Lane Opera, with which establishment Signor Agnesi has been connected several years past. Not only by his stage performances, but as an oratorio and concert singer, has Signor Agnesi attained a high position in London. Besides his productions already referred to, he has, we believe, composed church music—motets, choruses, and orchestral symphonies. His portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. W. and D. Downey, of Newcastle and London.

M. FAURE.

Jean-Baptiste Faure was born at Moulins in January, 1830. He was educated at the Conservatoire from 1843 to 1852, and made his début at the Opéra Comique in the last-mentioned year. In 1857 he was appointed Professor of Singing at the Conservatoire. Thus it appears that, French by birth and Parisian by education, M. Faure early attained eminence in his own country. The thorough musical training given in the Paris Conservatoire has been exemplified by many great dramatic singers, but never more than in this instance. A vocalist trained for the stage in Paris is taught to act as well as to sing, and the result generally is that in either aspect the finished student may challenge severe criticism. M. Faure is a notable instance of this. The character in which he made the earliest impression in this country was Mephistopheles, in the production of Gounod's Faust at the Royal Italian Opera ten seasons ago. Merely as a piece of acting this was, and is, one of the most highly studied and perfectly executed representations ever seen, either on the opera stage or in performances of what is called the "regular drama." The minute care bestowed on every detail in action and gesture (modelled on the remarkable series of drawings illustrative of "Faust" made specially for the King of Bavaria) and the subtle by-play, sufficiently fiendish and malignant without ever approaching exaggeration, combine to make up a dramatic performance of sustained excellence. Added to this is a baritone voice of pure quality, used with all the skill and style of cultivated art and systematic study. Here we have a combination of merits such as has rarely been realised by a stage singer. Another fine performance of the same kind is one that was repeated this week, for the first time this season—that of Caspar in "Der Freischütz." Among the many high merits of M. Faure is undoubtedly that of versatility, both as a musical and a dramatic artist. In Italian opera, and in adaptations of that of Germany, he is equally admirable—for example, as Don Giovanni and Figaro. Perhaps the highest proof yet given by M. Faure of his histrionic power has been afforded by his fine performance as Hamlet in M. Thomas's opera. This and the Ophelia of Madame (then Mdle.) Nilsson chiefly gained acceptance of the work on its production in Paris in 1868. The portrait of M. Faure is from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, of Baker-street, Portman-square.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE.

PULVERMACH'S PATENT GALVANIC CHAIN BANDS, BELTS, BATTERIES, &c.

RECENTLY IMPROVED.

Approved by the Academy of Medicine at Paris and other Medical authorities in England and abroad.

This Self-Applicable Physical Curative is of an efficacy vastly superior to all other external remedies.

Owing to the physiological, physical, and chemical effects of the Electricity they gently and permanently impart into the system, these appliances exercise an internal action, promoting the digestion, circulation, and nutrition, thereby assisting Nature in her efforts to restore the normal balance of health and vigor in a debilitated constitution.

Hence the remarkable cures they daily effect in cases of—

after all other remedies have failed, and thus popularizing Electricity in accordance with the authentic conclusions in the medical and scientific press.

Recent improvements in these appliances by the inventor render their self-application extremely comfortable and effective, and thus remediate former inconveniences.

Medical and scientific extracts and a selection of the daily increasing number of Testimonials, together with Price-List, are embodied in pamphlet, "Nature's Chief Restorer of Impaired Vital Energy," sent post-free on application to the sole Importer and Patentee.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' COMPLETE TUTOR FOR THE PIANOFORTE. 4s.; post-free, 5s.
 This work contains the full instructions for the instrument, the scales, a complete series of Exercises, a variety of new and modern Preludes, and a very large selection of the best and newest music, expressly arranged for this work, and extending all the old and hackneyed airs so generally found in other tutors. The rudiments of music are simply and precisely treated, and nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely requisite for the pupil to learn at the commencement of his studies. The Publishers confidently invite public attention to this work, as at once the cheapest, the best, and most modern of all elementary works on the pianoforte. Although the price is so low, the work consists of sixty pages of the full music size, and the whole is engraved and printed in the best possible style. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

A NEW WORK FOR THE ORGAN OR HARMONIUM.
ORIGINAL VOLUNTARIES for the ORGAN or HARMONIUM composed in an easy form for the use of Amateurs by GEORGE FORSTER. Price 4s.; post-free, 5s. "This work will be found of immense value to all performers on either of the instruments for which it is written." CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO'S SCHOOL-ROOM PIANOFORTE. In Canadian Walnut or Mahogany Case. Price TWENTY GUINEAS. This instrument combines good quality of tone and excellence of workmanship. It has the merit of standing well in tune, and is capable of enduring hard school practice without going out of order. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO'S YACHT PLANING. With Folding Keyboard, Check Action, Trichord Treble, in Solid Mahogany or Black Canadian Walnut Case, THIRTY GUINEAS; or in Maple, THIRTY-FIVE GUINEAS. Constructed for Ships' Cabins, to occupy the smallest possible space, and to stand the damp of a voyage; the back is strengthened with iron bars and metallic plates, and the whole of the mechanism is of the best quality. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

DULCIANA ORGAN HARMONIUM, by Alexandra. This New Instrument is especially adapted to the Drawing-Room. It has the sweetest tone possible, resembling the soft dulciana stop of the best organs, and, by a new patent air chest, is free from the slightest harshness. Price, 3 stops, oak, 10 gu.; mahogany, 12 gu.; rosewood, 14 gu. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO'S ORGAN HARMONIUMS on the THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM. These instruments have the round tone of the organ without the disadvantage of requiring tuning, with much quicker articulation than the American Organ, and at half the cost. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case, Five Octaves, and Two Foot-Board. The over-riding musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured. The instruments now offered to the public will be found devoid of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and organ-like. Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows. The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect and without extra cost. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO'S CHURCH and DRAWING-ROOM ORGANS on the THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM of HIRE. From 16 gu. per year, at Chappell and Co.'s, 50, New Bond-street. Lists on application.

DURING the SIEGE of PARIS the difficulties experienced in England and elsewhere in procuring the noted CHARBON DE BELLOC (Belloc's Vegetable Charcoal Powder and Lozenges) have caused innumerable limitations of this old and valuable medicine, on account of its immense sale.

Having analysed most of these imitations, I hereby certify that all of them differ entirely from my own productions as much in quality as in the mode of preparation. BELLOC'S CHARCOAL (Charbon de Belloc) was approved by the Academy of Medicine of Paris in 1869, and its use recommended for the cure of gastralgia, dyspepsia, difficult digestion, and of all nervous and humoral diseases, and, according to the official report, are but too often the despair of both patients and physicians.

I cannot guarantee the value of any other preparation except the CHARBON DE BELLOC, which is prepared under my own supervision. To each Bottle of Powder and to each Box of Lozenges is added a Circular with full directions for use, and bearing the signature of "Dr. Belloc."

Powder, per Bottle, 2s. Lozenges, per Box, 1s. 6d. F. NEWBERRY and SONS, 27, Newgate-street, London; G. JONES, 48, Haymarket; Warwick Brothers, Old Swan, in the County of Middlesex, and all Chemists.

THE SHAH IN PARIS.

BY THE WAY.

"There is only one flag, now, from the Gambia to Lagos," were, if we remember aright, the words of a Minister about a year and a half back, when he announced the cession to us of certain Dutch possessions on the north-west coast of Africa. Liberia hastened to protest against the statement, as her flag covered some 600 miles in the middle of the region thus claimed, and of course her objection was recognised. But we had a right to speak of a thousand miles of African coast as our own. With possessions come troubles, and the Ashantees, in the south of whose district stands Cape Coast Castle, have become our enemies; why, is not yet made very clear. But they leave no room for mistake as to their hostility, and the latest news is that they have made war upon us in great force. It seems to be imputed that we have not hitherto shown sufficient energy in dealing with the foe, and this is usually said of England at the beginning of any war. But our commanders have made amends, have burned Elmina, formerly St. George del Mina, a city of some 8000 inhabitants, by way of punishing its disaffection (which was shown by the explosion, under our fire, of numerous powder stores); and when the Ashantees came on to an attack—it is said 3000 strong—a comparative handful of Englishmen, armed with the snider, repulsed them with great slaughter. It is to be hoped the brave defenders will be able to hold their own until reinforcements arrive. We rejoice to read that heavy rains had fallen, as the failure of a water supply appeared to be the chief dread of our men. Elmina was founded by the Portuguese in 1481, but taken by the Dutch in 1637. It should be understood that this war is as just as one as we ever waged, the old hatred of the Ashantees against us arising from our hostility to the slave trade, in which they were most active, and we had great difficulty in dealing with them, on the same quarrel, fifty years ago. We suppose that England must now read them a final lesson in the humanities, and it may require a good deal of explanatory gunpowder.

The Oriental nature, if sluggish, is fierce in action when roused. The way in which the Sovereign of Persia has been received here has evidently wrought upon one of his subjects and inspired him with the conviction that the sooner he made war upon Russia the more he should please his master and those who have shown him hospitality. Wiser than Don Juan, he did not declare that the entire Russian army should repent his animosity, but he applied himself to an attack on the sinews of war. In other words, a Persian Colonel, whose first name is Mirza, had a vision unlike that of his famous namesake. He imagined that he had only to lay hold of some clever English engraver, and that he could get Russian bank notes fabricated to any amount. But as we are not at present at war with Russia, but, on the contrary, are about to be connected with her in a very delightful manner, the zealous Persian, instead of finding allies, found himself in a trap set for him by the solicitors for the Russian Consulate. The case is not concluded; but there can be no dispute as to the facts, and we may, perhaps, do the accused good, by suggesting that his action was not prompted by ordinary and sordid motives, but by a desire to carry out the idea of an Anglo-Persian alliance against Russia.

During the recess it is forbidden to libel the French Assembly. This has been the outcome of the stormy debates of the week, and of the tremendous disturbances which all parties—especially the Left—have been making at Versailles. The question was made one of liberty; and, heartily as England is abused, as a rule, when her institutions and policy are discussed on the Continent, there is no denying that, by some means or other, the Briton has attained more real liberty than any other person in the world. Therefore, when there was talk of repressing speech and printing, England could be referred to with eulogy, and a French Republican of nearly the most advanced type actually complimented the wise and enlightened aristocracy of this country who encourage the freedom of speech, because it means a safe method of ascertaining public opinion. It is so pleasant to find that, amid our eternal gloom of fogs, through which the sun never penetrates, and with all our hard, narrow, coarse island nature, which is incapable of large ideas or of refinement, we have attained to one result which Frenchmen can applaud, that we gratefully record the civility, and humbly await the next castigation which is to compensate France for having allowed us a merit.

Whether a collier ought or ought not to drink what he supposes—poor fellow!—to be champagne (though he has probably seen, with an unconscious eye, the hairy grapes growing from which his superb draught was to be brewed in the publican's copper), is an open question. We do not see why he has not as much right to be foolishly extravagant as anybody who gives a Greenwich dinner while he owes a year's rent. But Mrs. Collier has various ways that might be improved. We read in the report of an inquiry into the conduct of the Vicar of Hindley that Mrs. Tinsley, wife of a collier there, went to be "churched;" and, as the weather was cold, she found her way into the vestry, and in the vestry she found a bottle of wine. This liquor the lady and her friends consumed; then they filled the bottle with water, and then the grateful mother proceeded into the church to offer her thanks. We fear that all this indicated a spirit out of harmony with the rite with which Mrs. Tinsley was about to be fortified, but we could forgive a poor cold nursing woman everything but the filling up the bottle with water. However, she was not so bad as a miscreant servant of an officer (the case occurred some time back, but its atrocity keeps it fresh in the memory), who sold his master's golden sherry and filled the bottles with marsala. Mrs. Tinsley says that she looked at her proceeding as a joke at the time, "but she does not think it one now." Certainly, it was not a good one; and we hope that, in future, she will keep to champagne, and leave ecclesiastical tent alone.

There is no need to speak here of the brilliancy of the Eton and Harrow match. The sight on Friday was somewhere about the best thing, all points considered, that can be seen in England. But we confess that the "row" that is said to have followed the match on Saturday is a feature with which we hope our young friends will dispense in the future. We do not care to read that in the presence of thousands of the kindest and fairest ladies in the kingdom there commenced "a free fight;" that Etonians flew at the throats—or shall we say the cravats?—of Harrovians, and that Harrovians clutched fiercely at the blue ties of Etonians, that "police helmets were belaboured with cowardly blows," and that "cads"—that is to say, those who were undecorated with either colour—"were hustled and pummelled by both sides." The reporter of the Telegraph says that the affair "ended in a vulgar fight and therefore in conduct that was neither seemly nor gentlemanly." Making all allowance for young blood, heated by an exciting contest, we represent to "Etona" and to the "Domus" that the first will flourish as proudly, and that the fortune of the second will be as stable, if both will remember that we are all so proud of our great old schools because they are emphatically training-grounds for gentlemen.

The Extra Supplement.

"THE SWOOPING TERROR OF THE DESERT."

The large drawing we have engraved is one of an extensive series of Oriental illustrations which Mr. Carl Haag has given to the art-world from his personal observation in the East, particularly from experience gained in a journey made about twelve years back, when he penetrated as far as Palmyra, the "Queen of the Desert." Many of the series have represented incidents of Arab life in the desert—incidents often graceful and tender, sometimes pathetic and terrible, but always picturesque and romantic. Several of such representations have, like the present work, worthily occupied places of honour in the Old Water-Colour Society's exhibitions.

We have heard much of the dangers of traversing the Asiatic and African deserts; and just now the subject is rendered prominent by the narratives of the sufferings of the Russian troops in crossing the steppes of Central Asia. But the particular danger indicated in this picture is probably less familiar, though it appears to be of not very unfrequent occurrence. In winging its flight over the arid waste of the desert, an eagle, pressed with hunger, will, without waiting for its rations from death, like the vulture or the carrion crow, sometimes attack living animals, and even man. Spying out its prey from an incredible distance, it will, like lightning, swoop down in ever-lessening circles, seize in its talons and carry far out of sight a good-sized sheep or goat; or, failing these, it will snatch away an infant or small child, if left for a moment unguarded. The appearance towards nightfall of such an enemy may well alarm these lonely travellers, unprovided, as they are, with any protection overhead. A single Bedawee usually travels without a tent, such shelter being generally provided by the Arabs only when they journey in company or encamp for a season. This poor Bedawee family are preparing to pass the night in mid-desert, near a kind of oasis. The sun's last ray is vanishing athwart the group; the moon has risen above the Eastern horizon. The man was about to draw from the saddle-bags the scanty provisions for their frugal meal; the wife had gone to some near pool or fountain for water, and is now returning with her antique-shaped jar balanced on her head after the fashion of her ancestresses of thousands of years ago; she has her children about her: a babe is on her arm, an elder boy toddles at her side. All around is silence and solitude—when suddenly is heard in the still air the clanging wings of the rightly-named "Swooping Terror of the Desert." Instantly, however, the father, ever ready as the champion of his wife and children against all comers, is on his knee by the side of his camel, so as to take steadier aim with his long gun at this aerial robber. Instinctively the mother pauses not to disturb his aim, and her babe clings closer to her neck; but the brave boy, confident in his father's prowess, is already elated in anticipation of seeing their dire enemy fall dead to the ground.

THE VIENNA EXHIBITION.

VIENNA, Monday, July 14.

The past week has been marked by a couple of incidents connected with the Vienna Exhibition which can scarcely be passed by unnoticed. On Tuesday last the members of the international jury were invited to Schönbrunn to be presented, in turn, to the Emperor, in the grand gallery of the historic Palace, the entire suite of state apartments of which were thrown open for their reception. The jury, some of whom came in military and official uniforms, and the majority decorated with crosses and orders, after being divided into their respective groups, awaited for some time the arrival of the Emperor. It was about nine o'clock when he entered the gallery, accompanied by several of the Archdukes and attended by a few Court officials, and passed from group to group, addressing a few words of congratulation and welcome to the presidents, vice-presidents, and more prominent members, who were formally introduced. To pass before the six-and-twenty groups, comprising several hundred jurymen, necessarily occupied a considerable time; still, the members of each group were dismissed from the Imperial presence after having been presented, and proceeded to stroll through the suite of elegantly-decorated rooms, more or less fraught with memories of the times of the Empress Maria Theresa. Eventually, the grand balcony became the central point of attraction; there they could listen to the strains of the military bands, grouped in circles in the garden beneath, brilliantly illuminated by means of the electric light, which revealed the rows of white marble statues along the side walks, and the grand central groups comprising the Neptune fountain. The classic temple of La Gloriette, which, with belts of trees, bounded the horizon on the hill beyond, was thrown into deep shadow by the rising moon. Here people lingered till the band ceased playing, refreshments being continually handed round by scores of Imperial lacqueys. At half-past eleven o'clock the last guests were taking their departure.

On Saturday the members of the international jury, with the wives of those who were present in Vienna, and the representatives of the Viennese and foreign press, to the number of about 400, repaired to the Sudbahn railway station, where two special trains were in waiting to convey them along the famous Sömmering line of railway to Mürzzuschlag, where they were to be entertained at dinner by Baron Schwarz-Senborn, the energetic and indefatigable director of the Exhibition. The excursion, which had been planned with the view of showing them the imposing Austrian Alpine railway, one of the finest of its kind in Europe, proved a remarkably pleasant one, and everybody thoroughly enjoyed themselves. The Sömmering line, which commences at Gloggnitz and extends as far as Mürzzuschlag, is twenty-five miles in length, and cost upwards of a million and a half sterling to complete. It is carried along the side of abrupt precipices for a long distance, the most grand and picturesque views being offered to the gaze of the spectators. Shortly after passing Gloggnitz the train begins to ascend to the old Schloss of Gloggnitz, perched on the summit of a wooded eminence, standing out boldly in the sunlight, with the limpid Schwarza flowing in the verdant valley beneath, past the extensive paper manufactory of Schleglmühl, giving a welcome look of freshness to the picture. On the left rises the Sömmering, with its three peaks. The train crosses the valley of Leichenau by an imposing viaduct, 900 ft. in length, and then commences to ascend the mountain, soon reaching an eminence 540 ft. above the level of the sea. Several tunnels are passed; and eventually the train arrives in front of Klaus, chiefly noteworthy for its ruined castle, built on a rocky pinnacle, the property of Prince Leichtenstein, and once the key of Styria. The train next traverses a long gallery provided with apertures for light and supported by arches and a rocky bridge, followed by numerous tunnels, after which the Sömmering station, the culminating point of the line, is reached. Leaving this station, the line avoids a further ascent of 300 ft. by means of a straight tunnel 1500 yards in length, which penetrates the highest ridge of the Sömmering, the boundary between Austria and Styria. Beyond the tunnel the train begins to descend, and, after passing through several peaceful green dales, soon reaches Mürzzuschlag, our destination. At every station where the trains halted troops of little children came running up with baskets of wood strawberries, bouquets of Alpine flowers, and jugs full of fresh, cool water from the mountain springs, which, owing to the excessive heat of the day, was generally found especially grateful.

As the trains steamed into the station rockets were fired off, and a military band, stationed in readiness, struck up a lively air of welcome. At the repast which followed the greatest conviviality prevailed. Baron Schwartz proposed the health of the Emperor, which was drunk amid great applause, after which several jurymen of various nations represented proposed that of the director of the Exhibition himself, each fresh toast being received with renewed expressions of enthusiasm. An Italian Count, forgetting former national differences, drank to the prosperity of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, and the health of the Empress Elizabeth was proposed by an American jurymen; one of the representatives of the Spanish Republic, finally, calling upon the assembly to drink to "Universal peace, and the regeneration of mankind by work." During an interval in the repast a local choral society made its appearance in the banquetting-hall and sang a song in honour of the international jury, which was received with marked applause. At half-past six the entertainments, admirable in every respect, came to an end; the trains set out again for Vienna; the military band which had enlivened the intervals between the courses with some beautiful music, playing, as they steamed out of the station, that popular German air, "Gute Nacht, du mein herziges Kind."

Scattered about the park which surrounds the Vienna Industrial Palace are a number of restaurants, cafés, beer and wine saloons, which are got up in styles and fashions professing to represent the majority of European nationalities. Unlike the establishments of a similar character at the Paris exhibition of 1867, they rarely seek to delude their guests with any so-called national dishes or condiments peculiar to the country to which they claim to be affiliated. To compensate in a measure for this shortcoming the proprietors of these establishments make a point of dressing up their servants in picturesque attire—for instance, as Russian moujiks, Hungarian Magyars, Styrian chamois hunters, or Alsatian demoiselles, though some of them are born Viennese. Singularly enough, the visitors are quite ready, in general, to enter into this deception, as they take especial delight in being served with the conventional "schnitzel," or the habitual glass of beer, by these buxom damsels, in gay-coloured, if rather short, petticoats, neatly-fitting boots, elaborate head-gear, and a liberal display of cheap jewellery, the majority of whom have, in all probability, never once set foot in the countries to which they are supposed to belong.

In the case of the occupants of the various strange-looking houses, cottages, and huts which have been constructed and furnished after precise models, and chiefly by the Imperial Government itself, the system is very different. The attendants in these all really belong to the districts they profess to have come from, and are delighted with any guests who are able to address them in their own rude patois. This is especially the case with the milkmaids attached to the Austrian dairy, and the old woman and her two daughters who occupy the Styrian Alpine hut. Their characteristic features and costume are well delineated by our Artist. The Swiss eating-house, or "conditorei," and the Carinthian Hall, which has been erected as a temple for the German worship of the beery Bacchus, are shown in two other sketches.

THE SHAH IN PARIS.

Our Paris correspondent's weekly letter gives some account of what has been done there to entertain his Majesty Nasr-ood-Deen since the grand review in the Bois de Boulogne on Thursday week. His arrival at Paris, on Sunday week, by railway from Cherbourg, where he had landed the day before, after crossing the Channel from Portsmouth, was described in our last. He was met at the Passy station by Marshal MacMahon, President of the French Republic, with General Ladmirault, and a large official and military staff. A Royal salute was fired by the batteries of Mont Valérien. The Shah and Marshal MacMahon, in an open carriage, with an escort of cavalry, followed by the attendants in other carriages, went on to the Arc de Triomphe, in the Champs Elysée. Here the Shah was met by the Prefect of the department of the Seine, with the Municipal Council of Paris, from whom he received an address of welcome. This scene is represented in our principal illustration of his visit to Paris. The series of minor Engravings, which occupy together one page of our Supplement, relate mostly to the superb entertainment given at Versailles, on Tuesday week, in honour of the Shah. The banquet in the Galerie des Glaces of the Versailles palace; the mingled exhibition of waterworks and fireworks in the Basin of Neptune, with a figure of the Persian Lion, radiant aloft in pyrotechnic brilliancy; and the torchlight carriage-procession along the road back to Paris, are shown in these illustrations.

It is stated by the Times of India that the Indian Government has issued a proclamation notifying that the regulations against keeping slaves will be strictly enforced.

Archbishop Manning has issued a Latin citation calling on the Roman Catholic clergy to meet in synod in the hall of St. Edmund's College, at Ware, Herts, on the 22nd inst. These synods, which are intended to promote virtue and piety in the Church, have not sat for the past fourteen years.

The folly of playing with firearms has received another lamentable illustration. At Monk's Farm, Essex, two sisters, named Kate and Mary Dennis, lived with their brother. On Saturday morning they got hold of a loaded gun, and Mary, raising the piece to her shoulder, and presenting it, cried to her sister, "I'll shoot you." This she too surely did, killing Kate.

The Committee of Public Accounts have issued a second report on Post Office irregularities, in which they say that further investigation has confirmed the opinion they expressed in March last, that the expenditure by the department out of the balances, in anticipation of Parliamentary authority, has been both irregular and objectionable. The use made of savings banks deposits, although in no way compromising the security of depositors, is regarded as a serious misappropriation; and the Committee think that the National Debt Office should have called attention to the growing irregularity with which payments connected with that branch of Post Office business have been made for some years. On the whole, the financial operations in connection with the carrying out of the Telegraph Acts are declared to be destructive to all control by Parliament over public expenditure; but the Committee are of opinion that certain proposals which have been made by the Government will secure the requisite checks for the future.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, with five codicils, of James Haycroft, of Highbury-place, Islington, and of St. Helen's-place, Bishopsgate-street, merchant, was proved, on the 2nd inst., by William Revell Spicer, Thomas Alexander Johns, William Gage Spicer, and Henry Spicer, jun., the executors—the personal estate being sworn under £160,000. The testator bequeaths to Mr. Johns £500; to his wife £500, a policy of assurance for £1000, his household furniture, and one fifth of the residue of his property; to his son Samuel and his (testator's) two daughters one fifth each of the said residue; and the remaining one fifth to the wife and children of his deceased son William.

The will of Mr. Charles Bowyer, formerly of No. 4, Cleveland-square, St. James's, but late of No. 2, Eaton-square, was proved, on the 27th ult., by George Sclater-Booth, M.P., the nephew, and Frederick Mowbray Berkeley Calcott, the surviving executors—the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. The testator gives to his executors £100 each, free of duty; to his servant, Elizabeth Page, £100; and legacies to his sisters, son-in-law, and other members of his family; the residue of his estate, real and personal, he leaves upon trust for his grandson, Charles Pleydell Calley.

The will of Mr. Frederick Ayrton, who died at his residence, No. 4, Arundel-gardens, Notting-hill, on the 20th ult., was proved, on the 4th inst., by the Rev. George Percy Badger, Anne Ayrton, the relict, and Edward Lambert, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator leaves to his daughter, Mrs. Hicks, £22,000; and among the other legacies one of £1000 to his brother Acton Smee Ayrton; the residue of his property he leaves to his widow. The testator bequeaths all his caligraphic writing, in Turkish, Arabic, and Persian, to the trustees of the British Museum (and he states that in his opinion they are worth £1200), conditionally on their setting apart a room for them, and appointing Assaad Effendi Mazher to prepare a catalogue, which would, he considers, take three or four years, and for which, he thinks, £100 per annum would not be too much to pay him.

The will of Jacob Waley, of Lincoln's Inn, barrister-at-law, and No. 20, Wimpole-street, was proved, on the 9th inst., by Matilda Waley, the relict, and Simon Waley Waley, the brother, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator bequeaths £100 to the United Synagogue, Great Portland-street; £50 to the Jews' Orphan Asylum; £50 to the Jewish board of guardians; and £100 to be distributed in charity (public or private), as his wife shall think fit. There are also many other legacies to members of his family, friends, and servants; the residue he gives to his wife for life, and at her death it is to go, as she shall appoint, among his issue. The testator, in giving directions to his executors as to dealing with his copyright in "Davidson's Precedents in Conveyancing," requests them to pay the utmost deference to Mr. Davidson's views, as he considers it has been both honourable and advantageous to him to have been associated with that work.

The will of Killingworth Hedges, formerly of Upper George-street, Bryanston-square, but late of Thames Villa, Sunbury, solicitor, was proved on the 25th ult., by Mary Hedges, the relict, Richard Hedges, the son, and the Rev. Richard Utten Todd, the nephew, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator leaves to his widow his household furniture and a legacy of £300 absolutely, and his residence at Sunbury and £600 per annum for life. Subject to a few legacies, testator leaves the residue of his real and personal property to his children.

The will of Mr. Michael James Whitty, of Windermere-terrace, Princes Park, Liverpool, was proved at the Liverpool district registry, on the 27th ult., by Richard Muspratt, William Hargreaves Manifold, and Miss Anna Whitty, the daughter, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £40,000. The provisions of the will are in favour of testator's children and two of his grand-daughters.

The confirmation, under seal of the Commissary Court of Berwick, of Major the Hon. Robert Baillie Hamilton and Captain the Hon. Henry Baillie Hamilton, R.N., as the executors of the trust disposition and settlement, with a codicil thereto, of Georgina Markham, Countess of Haddington, was sealed at the principal registry, London, on the 4th inst. The personal effects in Scotland and England are under £9000.

The City Press says that the salaries of the City Police have been revised by the police committee, the result being that a general increase has been decided upon, and special gratuities have also been voted to all the officers.

The judging of the cattle at the Royal Agricultural Show at Hull took place on Monday. The entries amounted to 1145; of these 281 represent horses, 308 cattle, 365 sheep, and 191 pigs. The shorthorn bulls above three years old are a capital class. When they were led out to be judged, the judges were an hour and a half coming to a decision. The difficulty lay between the Marquis of Exeter's Telemachus and Lord Linton's Lord Irwin. A veterinary surgeon was called in, and upon his report Telemachus received the first and Lord Irwin the second prize. The cows are probably the best collection ever brought together. For cows above three years old the first prize was taken by Mr. Outhwaite, of Catterick. A pretty little red heifer, the property of Mr. O. Viveash, of Swindon, received a first prize. The Herefords are not half so numerous as the shorthorns, but they are of the highest quality. The prize for aged bulls was taken by Mr. P. Turner, of Leominster. The Queen exhibited in the yearling-bull class two handsome animals. For a white-faced animal, named the Marquis of Lorne, her Majesty received a third prize; but his companion, Alexander, received no official notice. Both of the bulls were bred at the Flemish Farm, Windsor. There were five splendid Hereford cows, the first prize being taken by Mr. Peren, of South Petherton, Somerset. The Devons numbered 31—again a small number, but again of the best quality. Lord Falmonth's Jonquil received the first prize for aged bulls. The best young bull was adjudged to be that exhibited by the executrix of the late Mr. Davy, of North Molton. A Buckinghamshire exhibitor, Mr. Trevor Lee, took the first prize for cows above three years old. The Scotch cattle were few. Mr. John Graham, of Cumberland, was first, with his Galloway bull. Lord Sondes exhibited the only Norfolk polls in the show, and took two prizes with them. Sheep are a fair average as to quantity, and something more as to quality. Nothing could compete with Mr. Brown's Marham Hall Farm flock of fleecy Cotswolds. Nothing could have been better than the South-downs. Mr. Rigden's sheep took the best prizes.—At the annual meeting, on Tuesday, Mr. Holland was elected president of the society for the ensuing year, succeeding Earl Cathcart. The secretary read the awards for the farm prize. The judges allotted the prize of £100 to Mr. W. B. Wallgate, of West Hill, Aldborough, near Hull; and they highly commended for general good management, especially for excellence in gates and fences, Mr. Charles Lambert, of Sunk Island, Hull; Mr. Peter Dunn, of Siblethorpe, near Hull; and Mr. G. England, of Coniston, in Holderness. The Mayor of Hull entertained at luncheon on Tuesday about 300 gentlemen.

Why do not beginners buy a rudimentary treatise on the game and learn these matters, instead of writing to a newspaper?

Eda H., Walworth.—We believe there is a Mechanics' Chess Club on the Surrey side of the Thames, but cannot give you the address.

G. H. D. G.—The last games received we have not had time to consider. They shall not be forgotten. By-the-way, why do you not divide your games into slips of about twenty moves each, instead of sending long sheets of eighty or ninety moves? Moderate lengths of slips can be easily folded and inclosed; such slips as yours are very troublesome.

THE COUNTIES CHESS ASSOCIATION.

The meeting of this association for 1873 will be held at the Academy of Arts, Clifton, Bristol, during the week beginning Monday, Aug. 4, 1873, under the presidency of Lord Lyttelton. Prizes will be offered for competition as follows:—

Class 1.—Open to all provincial amateurs on becoming members of the association, by a subscription of at least £1 1s. The first prize will be of the value of £15; the second, £5, if not less than eight entries; the third, £2, if there are ten entries; the fourth, £1, if twelve entries or more.

Should the entries in any class be, in the opinion of the committee, too numerous, it will be divided into sections A and B. The players to be divided by lot; each player to play one game with everyone else in his own section, and afterwards the two winners of the two sections to contend together for the first and second prizes, and the two having the next highest score for the third and fourth. In such case it is hoped that there may be a fifth and sixth prize added.

A challenge prize will be given to the person who first wins, three times, the association's first prize in class 1. The present guaranteed value, £25, to be raised to £40 (funds permitting), the winner (if the prize is of full value) to give £10, the value of the annual class prize, towards the funds for a new challenge cup.

Classes 2 and 3.—Open to all provincial amateurs on becoming members of the association, by a subscription of at least 10s. 6d.

Class 2.—Open to members who are not strong enough for class 1. The first prize £5; the second, if eight entries, £2; the third, if ten entries, £1; the fourth 10s., if twelve entries.

Class 3.—Open to members not strong enough for class 2. First prize, £3; second, third, and fourth prizes, if there are a sufficient number of entries.

There will be a general handicap arranged during the early part of the meeting, of eight, sixteen, or thirty-two players. Two, four, or six prizes, according to number of entries. The first prize, £10, if thirty-two players. On Saturday, the 9th, it is hoped to have consultation games and a blind-fold performance. On Friday there will be a public luncheon.

The committee will not guarantee prizes for more than eight players in the handicap, unless the names have been entered by Monday, Aug. 4, before six o'clock p.m. No player can commence play in any of the classes after Tuesday morning. All provincial amateurs can become members of the association by an annual subscription of 10s. 6d. No prize will be given in any class in which there are not at least four entries. All disputed points to be settled by the committee, and its decision in all cases to be final. Play will commence at seven o'clock on the Monday evening, and be continued each day during the week from ten o'clock till three o'clock, and from seven p.m. till half-past eleven.

Tickets of admission for the week—to visitors 6s. each—may be obtained from the honorary secretaries. A ticket for one day, 2s. 6d. The honorary secretary will be happy to make special arrangements for families.

A vice-president subscribing £2 2s., or anyone subscribing £1 1s., may obtain free-admission tickets for the members of his family. After the meeting a printed statement of accounts will be sent to each subscriber of 6s. and upwards.

The local hon. secretary (T. Castle, Esq., Academy of Arts) will be happy to give any information respecting hotels and lodgings.

No entries in any of the three classes will be received after Aug. 2.

CANADIAN CHESS ASSOCIATION.—The second Chess Congress of Canadian players took place a few weeks ago at Toronto, and is said to have been completely successful. The meeting was opened by an address from the president, after which the officials for next year were chosen. Among other business transacted was the final adoption of the constitution provisionally set out at the first congress, in Hamilton, and a few alterations in the code of rules regulating telegraphic matches. Preliminaries were then entered into for organising the tournament. Twenty competitors presenting themselves were paired, as usual, by lot. The contest lasted above three days. At the termination the first prize was adjudged to Mr. Ensor, of Montreal; the second to Mr. Jackson, of Seaforth; and the third to Mr. White, of Montreal. The committee then sat to determine the place of meeting for the third congress, and they selected Montreal. We publish above one of the positions in the set which carried off the first prize in the Problem Tourney, and hope shortly to present some of the best games played on this interesting occasion.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

Views of Cape Coast Castle and the Castle of Elmina, on the west coast of Africa, were given in this Journal six weeks ago, with some account of the formidable invasion of the neighbouring Fantees' country, which is under a British protectorate, by the large army of Ashantee. It will be recollected that the native population of Elmina, while the European commercial factory and fortress there belonged to the Dutch, used to pay tribute to the King of Ashantee; but since the late transfer of Elmina Castle to the British Government this custom has been refused. The Ashantees, 40,000 or 50,000 in number, have therefore come down from the interior of the country and soon defeated the Fantees, the Braffos, the Inkoosookooms, the Abrahms, the Annamabos, the Denkiras and Assins, confederate tribes of the coast, in more than one great battle, taking possession of the native towns of Yankumassie, Quadagna, and Dunkwa, and driving the poor people into Cape Coast Castle. The enemy, hereupon, directly threatening an attack on the British settlement, approached within a few miles of Cape Coast Castle. The acting Governor, Colonel Harley, using the small force of different military corps at his disposal, with the aid of boats and men from the naval squadron, has caused a severe punishment to be inflicted not only upon the invading Ashantees, but also upon the disaffected people of Elmina, whose town has been utterly destroyed. It is situated but eight miles from the town of Cape Coast Castle. We are favoured by Sub-Lieutenant Archibald Clark Kennedy, of the Druid; Sub-Lieutenant Conyers Lang, of the Barracouta; and Mr. W. Read, engineer, of the Decoy, with sketches of this affair. The two engraved show the bombardment of the town, on the 13th ult., by the guns of Fort St. George and boats of the squadron, which had moved up the river; secondly, the fight which took place later in the same day, when the Ashantees, some three thousand strong, who attacked the British position at Elmina, were repulsed with heavy loss by our marines and sailors, West India negro troops, and Houssas, or African fighting men, employed as a local military police by the British Government.

The following narrative is supplied by another hand. It is confirmed by the official despatches published on Wednesday:—

"It having come to the knowledge of the British authorities that the people of Elmina had been harbouring Ashantees and supplying them with ammunition and provisions, while they were also suspected of having fought against the Fantees in the late encounters, it was decided that they should be disarmed, quietly if possible, but that in case of resistance the town should be destroyed. The plan of operations was this:—A detachment of marines, Houssas, West India troops, and volunteers, about 300 in number, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Festing, R.M.A., were to march to Elmina on the night of June 12, and surround the hostile portion of the town on the land side, while the boats of the fleet should occupy a river which divides that portion of the town from the friendly part, with the exception of two boats, which should guard the coast line and mouth of the river.

"At 2.30 a.m. on the 13th the gun-boat Decoy started for Elmina, having in tow nine boats from the ships Barracouta and Seagull, containing 120 officers and men, commanded by Lieutenants Wells and Marrack. On arriving at Elmina, at 4.15 a.m., the landing party was reinforced by the boats of the ships Druid and Argus, commanded by Lieutenants Bourke and Young, and those of the Decoy by Lieutenant Commander Hext—the whole body consisting of twenty-one boats, containing about 300 officers and men, being under the command of Captain Fremantle. Having formed in double line, the post of honour was given to Lieutenant Commander Hext, in consequence of his intimate knowledge of the intricate entrance to the river. By daybreak every one of the boats was moored in her proper station inside the bar without a mishap of any kind, except the accidental discharge of a revolver, which wounded a midshipman in the left shoulder and a man in the left thigh—neither seriously. Martial law was immediately proclaimed, and promise made that no harm should be done if the arms were yielded quietly, but to no purpose; and, having given a few hours for the women, children, and unarmed men to clear out in, at noon precisely a perfect hail of shot, shell, and rockets was poured into the town from the castle, boats' guns, and rocket-tubes. In ten minutes the town was on fire in as many places, and the enemy were obliged to evacuate it and take to the bush. A small party being left in charge of the boats, the main body of the forces, both naval and military, pursued the Elmina men, while Lieutenants Hext and Young, with a few men, having at great risk to themselves penetrated to the seashore, which was the windward side of the town, applied torches to the roofs of every house along the beach. A strong breeze favoured the conflagration, and in half an hour the whole town was in flames. In the mean time sharp skirmishing was going on outside the town, but there never was a doubt as to the result, the Elminas giving way as our men advanced, keeping up a hot but ill-directed fire as they retreated. Whenever they attempted a stand the rockets from the steam-pinnace of the Barracouta and those from the cutter of the Decoy speedily caused them to disperse again. After they had been driven some miles through the bush, and had disappeared, our men returned to their boats, and some had even come on board the ships, when a rumour spread that 600 Ashantees had attacked, and were about to burn, the friendly part of the town. The marines and Houssas promptly attacked them, while the Barracouta's contingent, hearing the firing, marched with all speed in that direction, and, getting on their flank under cover of a garden wall, poured in such a deadly fire at a very short range—some fifty yards—that the Ashantees had to retreat, and, after one more stand for a few minutes, fled into the thicker portion of the bush. It was now nearly six p.m., and the men, having been under arms since one o'clock in the morning, were much exhausted: the pursuit was given up, and the naval party returned to their respective ships. The casualties in this very decisive day's work were on our side few—one marine belonging to the Barracouta and two volunteers killed and seven or eight wounded, none very severely. This small loss is a good deal attributable to their custom of firing from the hip. The enemy's loss was very heavy, considering the nature of the ground—180 bodies have already been buried (16th), and many more are reported to be lying in the swamps. They carried their wounded off with them, and only half a dozen prisoners were made."

We shall give some more illustrations next week.

The state apartments of Windsor Castle are open.

The Orange demonstration in the north of Ireland passed off quietly on Saturday last. At Londonderry a few flags were hoisted on the cathedral and Walker's Pillar. At Belfast the authorities had concentrated a large force of military and police to prevent processions marching through the borough, and perfect order was maintained. The Orangemen formed a great procession at Holywood, marched to "Orange" tunes, and displayed party colours, but no collision between the rival factions occurred. In this country also the anniversary was celebrated by meetings and speeches.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1873.

On Saturday and Sunday last the country sustained a double loss by the hand of Death. Two men, each of them connected with the House of Lords, each, in his profession, above all rivals, each honoured and loved by a wide circle of friends, have passed away from earthly society to that "bourne from whence no traveller returns." Dr. Wilberforce, Bishop of Winchester, and Lord Westbury, ex-Chancellor of the Realm, are no more. In the case of the Bishop of Winchester, a fall from his horse, while riding with Lord Granville, unhappily resulted in instant death. In that of Lord Westbury, the end of his mortal career was clearly foreseen, and more gently approached. But both are gone from our midst, and each of them has left behind him a void, the full extent of which can only be appreciated after considerable lapse of time. They were men whom England reckoned among her foremost—men whose minds shed lustre upon every topic to which they chose to call public attention. The grave has seldom closed within so brief an intervening space of time over the remains of two more illustrious Englishmen.

The only point of view from which we shall contemplate these mournful events is that which may be occupied without prejudice by any of our fellow-countrymen. Of Bishop Wilberforce it will not be necessary to utter a single word that need occasion offence to either of those "schools of thought" into which the Church of England is divided, nor to any member of the various Churches which exist outside her pale. He was himself a many-sided man. His sympathies ranged freely over a wide area of opinion and action. Quite independently of that judgment which might be pronounced on the substantial soundness of what he thought or did, it is possible to estimate the eminent qualities he displayed by the highest standard. A son of the late William Wilberforce, the gifted chieftain of that noble band of men to whom England, and, we may say, the world, are indebted for the abolition of the slave trade, and slavery, he inherited not a few of those intellectual powers and social graces which commended his father to the intimate friendship of William Pitt. These he cultivated, not in early life only, but during the whole of his busy career, with conscientious assiduity. In whatever sphere he moved the impression he made upon those with whom he was brought into contact was always pleasing, sometimes deep and permanent. No man more thoroughly enjoyed or more felicitously adorned social life. Genial in his disposition, almost fastidious in his tastes, a brilliant wit, copious and precise in his information, of the stores of which he was always ready to impart to others, and a perfect gentleman in his manner, it is not surprising that he easily won, and retained to the end, a first place in society. This, however, was not the highest mark of his ambition. He could discharge the onerous duties of his office with a masterly ability, a skill, and a success even more than equal with the ease with which he was able to charm the social circles of the high born, the erudite, and the cultured. Whether as a village curate or as a prelate, he threw his whole soul into the work he undertook. His eloquence, whether in pulpit or platform oratory, whether in Convocation or in Parliament, was of a high order, and was singularly persuasive. As an administrator of the ecclesiastical affairs of his diocese, he showed the best qualities of a man of business. Altogether, he has left his mark upon the Church and upon the world. He inherited a great name, which he has further illustrated by his personal career. The country regarded him while living with pride, and now that he is dead it will cherish his memory with affectionate veneration.

The late Lord Westbury was a man of a somewhat different stamp. His course through life took a different turn to that of Dr. Wilberforce. By the sheer force of his abilities he achieved the highest distinction in an arena where competition is most severe. He combined indefatigable diligence with singular breadth of view and with complete mastery of the minute and conflicting details. His was the eloquence of exposition. No one, perhaps, ever excelled him in marshalling reasons and arguments, or in leading them, without a single check or trip, over the most rugged ground, to a triumphant conclusion. As an equity lawyer and Judge he may fairly be said to have been peerless. There was no intricacy which he could not unravel. There was no main principle of law bearing upon the case he might have in hand, the application of which he could not luminously exhibit. His judgments have borne the most searching tests unshaken. He, too, was a man of wit, sometimes exquisitely keen and biting; but those who knew him best have testified that it was not used as a weapon of malice. His services as arbitrator in the affairs of the European Assurance Society and its numerous affiliated companies brought out into high relief some of the best characteristics of his mind. To borrow the language of Mr. Montague Cookson, "The strong impression of extraordinary judicial aptitude that he created during his recent labours was due to his possessing four characteristics in a high degree—rapidity of apprehension, logical acumen, lucidity of exposition, and (last but not least) uniform courtesy of manner."

The loss of these great men brings vividly before the mind the high privilege enjoyed by this country in the general character and qualifications of those whom it employs in the management of its public affairs. Of course, it is not to be expected that all who devote themselves to a professional career in the service, whether of the Church or of the State, should rise to equal eminence. But the consolatory reflection may be permitted us that there yet remains to us, and that there are rising up amongst us, not a few whose names have already cast lustre upon our national reputation, or promise to do so in due course of events. We are, perhaps, too apt to take for granted that as our great men, one after another, die off, they leave behind them no successors worthy of their fame. Nevertheless, every generation produces its intellectual heroes; and it is certainly not at this time (and the day, we trust, is yet far distant) that we can rightly complain of having lost by death all possibility of witnessing among our living fellow-countrymen worthy competitors of those who have gone before.

THE COURT.

The Queen, with Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, continues at Osborne House. The Queen held a Council on Thursday week, to signify her Majesty's assent to the contract of marriage between the Duke of Edinburgh and the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia. Earl Granville, Viscount Sydney, Viscount Halifax, and the Right Hon. H. A. Bruce were present at the Council. Sir Arthur Helps was Clerk of the Council. Earl Granville had an audience of the Queen. Lord Odo Russell, Ambassador at Berlin; the Hon. Sir Charles Murray, K.C.B., Minister at Lisbon; and the Right Hon. A. H. Layard, Minister at Madrid, arrived at Osborne and had audiences of her Majesty. After the Queen had declared the betrothal of the Duke of Edinburgh and the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia, the ships at Cowes and Spithead fired salutes, and in the evening the Royal yachts and her Majesty's ship Ariadne, guard-ship at Cowes, were illuminated and discharged rockets in honour of the happy event. Earl Granville dined with her Majesty, and left Osborne on the following day. On Saturday last the Duchess of Sutherland arrived on a visit to the Queen. On Sunday her Majesty, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service at Whippingham church. The Rev. George Prothero and the Rev. T. Macnamara officiated. On Monday Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne arrived at Osborne. Prince Leopold met the Princess and the Marquis at Southampton, and accompanied them to Osborne in her Majesty's yacht Alberta. The Queen, with the members of the Royal family, has driven to Ryde and to other places in the Isle of Wight.

Her Majesty, on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, has granted a pension of £100 per annum to Professor Long, one of the founders of the London University, and for many years Professor of Latin at University College, in consideration of his eminent services to learning and literature.
Mr. W. B. Thelwall has had the honour of submitting to the Queen's inspection his drawings and sketches in Norway.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna visited Lady Holland on Thursday week, at Holland House, Kensington. On the following day their Royal and Imperial Highnesses were present at a ball given by the Earl and Countess of Ellesmere at Bridgewater House. On Saturday last the Prince and Princess and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna visited the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, at St. James's Palace. The Grand Duke Cesarevitch returned to Marlborough House from Darmstadt. On Sunday their Royal and Imperial Highnesses attended Divine service. On Monday the Prince presided at Marlborough House, at a conference for the purpose of furthering the cause of technical education. The Princess and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna visited the Newport Market Refuge and Industrial School; the House of Charity, Greek-street; the Mission House and Orphanage, Rose-street, Soho; and All Saints' Home, Margaret-street. The Prince and the Grand Duke Cesarevitch were present at the debate in the House of Lords. In the evening their Royal and Imperial Highnesses were present at a ball given in honour of the Grand Duke Cesarevitch and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna, at the conservatory of the Horticultural Gardens. Prince Christian, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz were also present. The approaches to the quadrant leading to the conservatory were carpeted with scarlet baize, and there were some thousands of flowering plants arranged on each side, in addition to the usual exotics which adorn the entrance to the Horticultural Gardens. The conservatory had been prepared for the ball-room, the floor being covered with canvas. The terrace and gardens were beautifully illuminated. In the colonnades of the conservatory supper-tables were provided for the Royal party, and in the quadrant there was a buffet. The ball-room was lighted by jets of gas from the roof. The company were about a thousand in number. On Tuesday the Grand Duke Cesarevitch visited the museum of the Hunterian Society, Finsbury-circus, the International Exhibition, and the South Kensington Museum. The Prince and Princess and the Grand Duke Cesarevitch and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna dined with the Duke of Cambridge at Gloucester House, Park-lane. The Princess and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna have driven out daily.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

The Duke of Edinburgh is sojourning at a villa which his Royal Highness has hired in Darmstadt. The residence is decorated with flags and festoons of evergreens. The Russian Imperial family remain at the castle of Jugenheim, near Darmstadt. It is contemplated that the marriage of the Duke and the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia will take place in March next, at St. Petersburg.

PRINCE ARTHUR.

Prince Arthur is about to make a prolonged visit to the King and Queen of Denmark at Copenhagen. Great preparations are in progress for the reception of his Royal Highness, and Court festivities will be given in his honour.

Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein will leave Frogmore for the Hague, on Aug. 2, on a visit to the Queen of Holland.

The Bishop of Salisbury began the visitation of his diocese on Tuesday.

Another City church is doomed. The condemnation of St. Martin's, Outwich, is to be carried into effect at once.

The Duke of Bedford has expressed his intention of restoring the parish church of North Petherin, near Launceston.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has approved the nomination of the Venerable Archdeacon Lean, D.D., to the Bishopric of Saskatchewan.

Cholesbury parish church, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, has been restored, and was reopened, on Thursday week, by the Bishop of Oxford.

The Duke of Devonshire, as the surviving trustee of the will of the Hon. Robert Boyle, has, upon the recommendation of the Bishop of London, appointed the Rev. Henry Wace, M.A., Assistant Preacher at Lincoln's Inn, to be "Boyle Lecturer," in succession to the Rev. Dr. Hessey.

At a recent church anniversary in the parish of Northfleet the Vicar (the Rev. F. Southgate) was presented with an address of sympathy and confidence, together with a purse of £150, towards defraying the costs of an action brought against him by a late churchwarden for church expenses. The address was signed by the present churchwardens and between 200 and 300 parishioners and friends.

The Old Testament Company for the Revision of the Authorized Version of the Bible finished their eighteenth session yesterday week. The revision of the Psalms was continued as far as the end of Psalm 59.

In consideration of the former connection of the Bishop of Winchester with the abbey, and in conformity with a generally expressed wish, the offer was made to the family that he should be buried in the grave of his illustrious father in Westminster Abbey. The family declined the offer, on the ground that the Bishop had always expressed a wish to be buried by the side of his wife at Lavington.

Last Sunday Archdeacon Groome preached in the parish church of St. Mary, Bedmfield, on the occasion of its being reopened after undergoing a careful restoration. The chancel has been also restored by the Rector. In it are three painted windows, the subjects of which are St. John and St. James, the Raising of the Daughter of Jairus, and the Good Centurion, erected to the memory of the family of Bedmfield.

A magnificent piece of massive gold plate, studded with jewels, resembling a gigantic covered cup, twenty-two inches high, of the time of Henry VII., has been presented to the Venerable Edward Trollope, Archdeacon of Stow, for his extraordinary liberality, his constant courtesy, and labour in assisting the counsels of the laity, 1873. To this vase was added a superb ring of plain solid gold, set with a lovely pointed oval amethyst, surrounded by brilliants, as a mark of the donors' personal regard.

In the Upper House of Convocation, on Wednesday, tributes to the memory of the late Bishop of Winchester were expressed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of London, Oxford, Bath and Wells, and Gloucester and Bristol. In the Upper House the report of the committee on confession was presented; and in the Lower House the lengthy and exhaustive debates in committee on the rubrics were closed. The Rev. H. Rudge Hayward has been elected Proctor to represent the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol in the Lower House of Convocation, in the room of Archdeacon Randall.

The Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels held its last meeting for the present session on Monday, at the society's house, Whitehall, the Bishop of Chichester in the chair. The following resolution was passed at the commencement of the meeting:—"That the Incorporated Society, gratefully remembering the long and valuable services which the Bishop of Winchester rendered to the society, wishes to express its deep regret at the irreparable loss which, in common with the Church at large, it has sustained in his sudden and lamented death." Grants of money amounting to £2140 were made in aid of the following objects, viz.:—Building new churches at Ashley-green, in the parish of Chesham, Bucks; Burton, in the parish of Christ Church, Hants; Dudley, St. Luke's, East Stonehouse, near Plymouth; Ford St. Mark, near Devonport; and Sandal Magna, St. Catherine, near Wakefield. Rebuilding the churches at Swinfleet, near Goole; Temple Sowerby, near Penrith; and Topsham, Devon. The Lord Chancellor has signified his intention of appointing the Rev. Arthur Forster Rutty, Second Master of Reading Grammar School, to the Chaplaincy of the Holy Ghost Chapel and Head Mastership of Basingstoke School, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Wilson.

Mr. H. P. Owen Smith, of All Saints' School, Bloxham, has been selected for a vacant mastership at Rossall.

The annual commemoration was held at Trinity College, Glenalmond, on Wednesday, the 16th inst. In the Theological Department the Licence in Theology was given to Mr. Matheson, M.A., the Jamison Scholarship was awarded to Mr. Morison, and the Bell prize to Mr. Low, M.A. In the school department the Examiner, the Rev. E. Hatch, spoke favourably of the teaching of the school and the results of the examination. The Buccleuch Medal for Classics was awarded to Blatch, the Trower Medal for Mathematics to Farquhar, jun.; and many other prizes for various subjects were given, a large share of which were gained by Penney, Robertson, and Scott, jun. The school meets again on Sept. 9.

The election to school scholarships in the Upper School at Dulwich College has terminated in favour of H. A. Watson, W. H. Fricker, R. D. Hodgson, E. J. Martin, R. H. Fawcett, F. E. Nichol, G. B. Doughty, A. F. Steinberg, and W. P. Phillips. Proxime accesserunt—Lingeman, Eales, and Robinson. There were fifty-seven candidates.

The Archbishop of Canterbury was present, yesterday week, at the Lambeth Schools, on the occasion of the presentation of several testimonials to Mr. Heller, the master, who is leaving the school in order to accept the appointment of secretary to the Schoolmasters' Union of England.

The Manchester Grammar School has received in the past few years a great development. There are 250 boys on the foundation, but now the school numbers over 600 in all, owing to the successful working of the new scheme obtained some years ago by the trustees. The school has achieved a very high reputation, under Mr. F. W. Walker, M.A., the present High Master, and its University honours have been equal to those of the chief public schools of the kingdom. The honours of the last year include seven open scholarships and a sizarship, two first classes and seven seconds at Oxford, two proxime accesserunt for University scholarships, one cadetship at Woolwich, 150 prizes and 560 certificates in the Government science examination, sixty-seven prizes and 289 certificates in the second and higher grades in the Government art examinations.

The interment of Lord Westbury took place on Thursday, at the Great Northern Cemetery, Colney-hatch.

The next annual meeting of the British Association will be held at Bradford in the week beginning Sept. 17.

The resolution agreed to by the Select Committee on the Zanzibar Mail Contract recommends that the contract of May 5 be not confirmed, but that the Union Steam Company be allowed the opportunity of retaining the service on fair and reasonable terms.

At a large meeting held recently at Cramond, near Edinburgh—Mr. C. Halkett Inglis presiding—Miss Colvin, a daughter of Dr. Colvin, was presented with a beautiful gold watch, chain, brooch, and silver card-case, in acknowledgment of the musical taste and talent which she had displayed as organist in the church.

At a quarterly court of governors of the Marine Society held recently at the offices in Bishopsgate-street, the report of the committee, read by Mr. S. W. Sadler, Paymaster-in-Chief, R.N., stated that during the last three months twenty-one boys had been sent from the Warspite into the Royal Navy and fifty to the merchant service. It was with deep satisfaction that returns had been received through the kindness of commanding officers of her Majesty's ships, showing that out of 141 Warspite boys serving under their command 131 were marked as to character "Very good," the remaining ten as "Good." The fifty boys sent into the merchant service had obtained first-class ships on foreign voyages.

A meeting was held, on Thursday week, at the residence of the Marquis of Westminster, for the purpose of establishing a National Training-School of Cookery. Many ladies were present, including Princess Louise, the Marchioness of Westminster, Lady Franklin, and Mrs. Gladstone. The Marquis of Westminster presided, and resolutions were passed to the effect that a National Training-School of Cookery should be established in alliance with the school boards and training-schools throughout the country; that the object of the school should be to teach the best methods of cooking articles of food in general consumption amongst all classes; that an association should be formed, with the view of making the school supporting; that a capital, say, of £5000 should be raised by donations or by a guarantee fund, it being estimated that £1000 would be required to fit up suitable premises. A committee was appointed to carry out the resolutions.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, July 24.

The Shah has left us, and by this time is completely forgotten by all, save the few fortunate recipients of the order of the Lion and the Sun. After his visit to the Assembly on Thursday last, he returned to Paris, and was present in the evening at a fête given in his honour at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. He was received on his arrival by Marshal MacMahon and the Duc de Broglie, and was by them conducted through several richly-ornamented saloons to the gardens, which had been lit up in the most dazzling manner, and where a display of fireworks took place. The company—which, of course, included all the leading members of the Corps Diplomatique—was numerous and brilliant in the extreme, and presented a coup-d'œil recalling the festivities of the Empire. Indeed, this gathering added its unit of testimony to a fact that is now becoming patent to all—viz., that the Spartan severity which prevailed at the social réunions presided over by M. Thiers has become a thing of the past, and that extravagance and profusion are once more the order of the day. The Shah on leaving, shortly before midnight, expressed himself highly pleased with the entertainments provided, amongst which figured a performance of military music, executed by an amalgamation of regimental bands, in front of the Ministry. But, however well pleased he may have been with this entertainment, there is no doubt but that he enjoyed himself infinitely more on his second visit to the Circus in the Champs Elysees, which took place the following evening. By all accounts, nothing he has yet beheld seemed to excite in him half the interest he displayed on this occasion. Saturday was the day finally fixed, after several postponements, for his departure, which took place, at one in the afternoon, from the Lyons Railway station, whither he proceeded, by way of the Boulevards, in an open carriage shared by Marshal MacMahon and the Duc de Broglie. The behaviour of the crowd that lined the route was orderly in the extreme, but exceedingly apathetic. The Municipality of Paris were in attendance at the station, which was elegantly decorated with flowers, flags, and evergreens; and, after taking leave of these gentlemen with an expression of the gratification he had experienced during his visit, the Shah was shown to his carriage by the President of the Republic and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and in a few minutes was en route for Switzerland.

A cloud has disappeared from the Ministerial horizon in the shape of the long-projected interpellation of M. Jules Favre on the home policy of the Government. Great agitation was caused when this interpellation was first announced, and people looked forward to one of the most striking contests of oratory that have as yet taken place in the arena of the Versailles theatre. The mountain, however, as is generally the case, merely produced a mouse. After having been successively abandoned, and then again taken up by the Left, the interpellation was at length brought forward by M. Favre on Monday, and, as already mentioned, the debate fell far short of prevailing anticipation. The orator was received at first with an attentive silence quite unusual in the Assembly, which lasted till he began to attack the Penapartists, whom he described as being under the protection of a Government that was only nominally Republican, and even then the scene that followed was of a comparatively mild character when contrasted with many that have taken place. He wound up by calling upon the Government to state whether it would disavow its protection of the three Monarchical parties existing in France. M. de Broglie, who rose to reply, was brief and to the point. He flatly refused to answer M. Favre's questions; but declared that what the Government meant to do was to check Communist principles and ideas. He snubbed the Left severely, and wound up with the somewhat hackneyed remark that the great object of those at present in power was to maintain social order. After a few words from M. Louis Blanc, who had to submit to incessant interruptions, the voting took place, and resulted in a large majority for the Government. Yesterday they were equally fortunate with M. Ernoul's bill for enabling the Permanent Committee to authorise prosecutions for attacks upon the dignity of the Assembly during the recess, which on Saturday it was decided should last from the 27th inst. to Nov. 5.

The evacuation of French territory by the Germans is rapidly progressing. They still, however, occupy Nancy, where a grand banquet is to be given on the occasion of the departure, to which M. Thiers has been specially invited. The veteran statesman has, however, been compelled to decline the proffered hospitality of the Mayor of Nancy on the plea of ill-health. At Valenciennes, last week, he was very warmly received by the populace.

ITALY.

A commission which has been appointed by the Italian Government for the liquidation of the ecclesiastical property in Rome held its first sitting in that city on Wednesday.

The Pope gave an audience on Monday to the Rev. Karl Janin, Rector of the German College in Rome, who presented an address to his Holiness, signed by 200 German artists, thanking him for his patronage of the fine arts.

SPAIN.

The Ministerial crisis is over. Pi y Margall, to whom the Cortes have given a vote of thanks, has been succeeded by Senor Salmeron, who presented his new Cabinet to the Cortes on Saturday. The new Ministry, composed of members of the Right, has been well received by the populace of Madrid. Senor Salmeron was elected President of the Council by 119 votes against 93 votes given for Senor Pi y Margall. General Gonzalez, the new War Minister, received the congratulations of the officers and men of the garrison of the capital last Saturday evening, and was waited upon by several members of the Cortes and several Generals.

Energetic measures are promised by the new Government, as by that which preceded it. At a Council of Ministers held on Saturday night it was resolved to raise the strength of the Civic Guard to 40,000.

In the Cortes on Monday a motion that the decree declaring rebel vessels pirates should be abrogated was rejected by 110 votes against 90.

There has been a severe engagement between the Carlists under General Saballs and the troops at Igualada. The garrison resisted bravely for thirty-six hours, but was ultimately compelled to yield to the Carlists, who sacked and burned the town. In consequence of this event the authorities at Barcelona have constituted a committee of public safety, and decreed compulsory military service on the whole male population between twenty and forty years of age.

According to Carlist advices, the insurgents at Carthagena have seized the squadrons at anchor in the port, and given the command of it to one of their leaders. The squadron was composed of four frigates, three of which were ironclads and three steamers. Meanwhile a regiment dispatched against Carthagena has maintained and joined the insurgents.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

On Tuesday the British section of the Vienna Exhibition was visited by the Emperor. His Majesty was received by the British Ambassador as Royal Commissioner, and by the secretary and the British jurors, at eleven o'clock. Having concluded his visit by an examination of the Indian and Colonial Department, the Emperor invited the British Ambassador and the Secretary to lunch, and expressed to them the great satisfaction he had experienced.

The Archduke Albrecht has left for Warsaw to greet the Czar in that city on his return from Ems.

The Presse announces that the Emperor Francis Joseph will undertake a journey to St. Petersburg in the autumn—namely, at the end of September or the beginning of October.

A letter from Vienna states that the health of that city is now in a satisfactory state. From the 4th to the 9th inst. the cases of summer cholera amounted to sixty-six, the population being 801,000. Since then the heat had diminished, and there had been a falling off in the number of cases. Meanwhile every attention was being paid to the sanitary condition of the city.

GERMANY.

The medical advisers of the Emperor William report that his Majesty has derived great benefit from his stay at Ems. The Emperor has given as his motive for his visit to Jugenheim a wish to congratulate the two illustrious betrothed, the Duke of Edinburgh and the Grand Duchess Marie.

The Emperor has granted 25,000 thalers to the German Society for the Exploration of Africa.

The suit which the Bishop of Ermeland brought against the German Government for the payment of the temporalities which had been retained since October, 1872, in consequence of his contumacy, has been dismissed by the superior tribunal.

The Prussian Minister of Education, Dr. Falk, has summoned a conference of educational men of note to meet at Berlin, in October next, in order to assist him in draughting an education bill, to be laid before Parliament next Session.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

King Oscar and Queen Sophia were crowned yesterday week, by the Bishop of Drontheim, as King and Queen of Norway. A brilliant procession walked to the cathedral, including Prince Arthur of England and Prince Waldemar of Denmark. The ceremony was favoured by splendid weather. Salutes were fired by the German and British fleets in the roads. An immense crowd thronged the streets, and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed.

RUSSIA.

Prince Baratinsky has been appointed successor of the late Count Schouvaloff, as Chief Court Marshal. The Governor-General of Moscow, Prince Dolgorouky, has been appointed Lord Chamberlain, and will be succeeded in his former post by Prince Galitzin.

General Kaufmann's despatches, giving details of the march on Khiva, the fall of the town, and the triumphal entry of the Russian troops, have reached St. Petersburg. The capitulation took place on May 29, or, according to our calendar, on June 10. General Werewkin was wounded in the head by a ball. Apart from this casualty, the Russians had only two soldiers killed, and five officers and forty-five soldiers wounded.

Private advices received at St. Petersburg from Tashkend state that the Orenburg and Mangischlak detachments will remain in Khiva as an army of occupation until the first conditions of peace proposed by Russia have been fulfilled. The Turkestan detachment returns to Tashkend.

AMERICA.

Jesse R. Grant, the father of President Grant, died at Covington, Kentucky, on the evening of June 29, aged seventy-nine. On the afternoon of the 28th President Grant, then at Long Branch, on the New Jersey coast, near New York, received a telegram announcing his father's rapid decline. A special train was at once engaged, and the President was taken at high speed through New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, to Cincinnati, and across the Ohio River to Covington, but he did not arrive until after his father's death.

The female-suffrage advocates have succeeded in getting an amendment engrafted upon the new State Constitution for Ohio, providing that women may hold all "appointive" offices—that is, they may be Government clerks, &c.; and they may also be school commissioners, superintendents, trustees, and directors of charitable institutions, &c. The Convention has been overwhelmed with petitions asking for female suffrage, and that important question has been referred to a special committee.

On June 30 the franking privilege ceased, and henceforth postage has to be paid upon all matter carried by the United States mails. The privilege of franking was enjoyed by members of Congress, the clerks of the Houses, the President and Cabinet Ministers, by the widows of ex-Presidents, by postmasters, and by a considerable number of other officials.

The boat-race between the American Universities was rowed at Springfield last week. Yale College came in first, the Wesleyan College second, and Harvard College third.

Mr. Watson has been re-elected chairman of the Erie Railway Company.

It is stated in a New York telegram that cholera is raging in Northern Missouri, and the disease is reported to be virulent in South Indiana.

CANADA.

Sir George Cartier, Minister of Militia and Defence, having died in England during his tenure of office, and being a prominent Canadian statesman, it was proposed in the Dominion Parliament, and decided—not without some difference of opinion—to award him the honour of a burial at the public expense. His remains arrived out on Sunday, June 8, by the steamer Prussia. That vessel, on approaching Quebec, was met by the Government steamer Druid, which had been specially prepared for the reception of the body by the erection on the after-deck of a small chapel draped in black and silver, containing the catafalque and altar. Two priests were in attendance, and remained all night in the chapel, which was brilliantly lighted up. Early in the morning mass was said there, and during the day several thousand persons came on board to visit the remains. In the evening the body was conveyed in procession to the cathedral, where a solemn service was held. All shops were closed and business suspended in the streets as the cortege passed by. Guns were fired from the citadel, bells tolled from the church steeples, and colours displayed at half-mast from all the vessels in the harbour. After the ceremony in the cathedral the coffin was replaced on its car and carried again to the chapel on the deck of the Druid.

The steamer then left Quebec en route for Montreal. As she passed up the river she was saluted at the various villages on the banks by people desirous of testifying their respect for the deceased, and on arrival at Three Rivers another procession was formed; the body was landed again, and, having been conveyed to the church, a service was held similar to that which had been performed at Quebec. Afterwards the Druid, with the body on board, left for Montreal. Here there was a final ceremony.

A correspondent of the Post says:—"The funeral cortege passed through the principal streets at a slow pace until it reached the French cathedral of Notre Dame, which was draped in mourning, the escutcheon of the deceased hanging over the chief entrance. The corpse was met at the entrance of the church by Father Bayle, superior of the seminary, by whom the solemn service of the Requiem was performed, and when it had been deposited in the catafalque mass was celebrated by Monsignor Fabre, coadjutor Bishop, assisted by two deacons of the cathedral. As the choir joined in singing the 'Requiem' and the 'Dies Irae,' the scene was most impressive. The galleries were one sea of heads, while below the plain dresses of the civilians contrasted with the rich uniforms of the military. In front of the congregation, before the altar and to the right, were the mourners; the Premier and the members of Government were accommodated on the left. The corporation, civic officials, and military officers, of whom there was a brilliant assemblage, filled the front range of pews, while all the available space in the body of the church was filled with the rest of the procession. In the central aisle the catafalque was all a glow with blazing candles, while each one of the choir before the altar, numbering some 250 priests and acolytes, held in his hand a lighted taper. The organ was used and supplemented by a full orchestra and chorus of 200 trained voices from the Jesuits' and central seminaries. At the close of the service the funeral procession re-formed and slowly marched off, traversing the principal streets on its way to the cemetery, witnessed by thousands of spectators who came from far and near to pay a last tribute of respect to the memory of the great statesman."

AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND.

Telegrams of Tuesday's date are published from Adelaide and Melbourne. At Adelaide a new Ministry has been formed, with Mr. Blyth as Premier. The New Zealand Parliament has been opened, and the measures announced include an Education Bill and a bill for the creation of a silver and copper mint.

CHINA.

It was recently announced from China that the "audience question" in that country had been settled by the Emperor consenting to receive the representatives of the Powers in the ordinary European manner. We now learn from Peking that the Ministers of Great Britain, Russia, the United States, France, and the Netherlands were thus received by his Majesty on the 29th ult. The Japanese Ambassador was received first, and separately. At the more general reception M. de Vlangali, the Minister of Russia, read an address in French, which was translated into Chinese by Herr Bismarck, the interpreter of the German Legation. Each Minister then deposited his credentials on a table in front of the Emperor, who replied in the Manchu language to the address read by M. de Vlangali, Prince Kung, on his knees, interpreting his Majesty's answer into Chinese. Eight hundred mandarins, including the Princes, were present at the audience. The members of the Tsung-Li-Yamen (Foreign Board) escorted the Ministers to their chairs. The streets were crowded. There has been no notice of the ceremony in the Peking Gazette. Great dissatisfaction has been expressed by Europeans at the wording of the edict granting the audience. M. de Geoffroy, the French Minister, at a subsequent interview with the Emperor on the same day, presented a letter on the subject of the Tien-Tsin massacre.

St. Petersburg advices state that China is preparing an expedition for the recovery of Kashgar. This may make it unpleasant for Mr. Forsyth's mission.

Mr. Gladstone has, by letter, thanked the Hungarian Academy of Science, at Pesh, for electing him a member.

The Daily Telegraph announces that Mr. George Smith has returned from his successful labours in Assyria in good health.

From Calcutta we learn that a telegraph line has been opened to Native Burmah.

The court of inquiry at New York into the cause of the loss of the City of Washington steamer has suspended the captain's certificate for one year.

An international corn and seed market is to be held at Vienna, on Aug. 5 and 6, under the management of the board of directors of the Vienna Corn Exchange.

In the neighbourhood of Brussels intense alarm has been occasioned by the escape of four lions from a menagerie. The beasts were eventually captured by some infantry troops who were sent in pursuit.

A Constantinople despatch says it is stated that the Latin and Greek priests who originated the late disturbances at the holy places have removed from Jerusalem, and that the whole question has in this manner been finally settled.

A hundred and sixty-three Russian female students are pursuing their studies at Strasburg. Till now they have not visited the public University lectures, but take private instruction from the professors.

M. Philarte Charles, the well-known professor at the College of France, died recently, at Venice, in his seventy-fifth year.—The death of the celebrated geologist and mineralogist, Professor Gustav Rose, of the University of Berlin, is also announced. He was seventy-five years of age.

A violent storm passed over Geneva last week, lasting several hours. At times the rain fell in such torrents as to transform the streets into rivers. The thunder and lightning which accompanied the rain were very severe, and continued through the greater portion of the night. In the village of Aarwangen, Canton Berne, the lightning entered a house and killed four persons.

At Munich, Fraulein Adele Spitzeder, one of the most notable pseudo-pious swindlers of the day, has been sentenced to three years' imprisonment for fraudulent bankruptcy, in connection with the so-called Dachau Bank started by her in Munich. Rosa Ehinger, her friend and confederate, described as a remarkably beautiful young girl, has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

The Shah, who left Paris on Saturday afternoon, slept at Dijon on Saturday night, and left next morning for Geneva, where he arrived soon after seven o'clock in the evening, and was received by the President of the Republic and the Swiss Minister in France. A very large concourse cheered him on his way to the Hotel de Bergues, where he appeared on the balcony and saluted the crowd. His Majesty has been making excursions to places of note.

A correspondence between the Foreign Secretary and Baron de Reuter, on the subject of the concession recently made to this enterprising gentleman by the Shah of Persia, has been published. Disclaiming the desire to ask for a subsidy, or any material support, the Baron asks that, in the event of any difference arising between the Persian Government and himself, he may be assured of recognition in England for the validity of his scheme, and protection of his rights as a British subject. In reply, Earl Granville says that her Majesty's Government will view with satisfaction all efforts to increase the resources of Persia; but cannot bind themselves officially to protect Baron de Reuter's interests in carrying out his engagements.

The Extra Supplement.

"OUR FATHER WHICH ART IN HEAVEN."

We do not claim any startling originality for the subject of the picture by Mr. Holyoake, which we have engraved from the Exhibition of the Royal Academy; but we trust that its familiar, simple pathos will not be deemed less acceptable on that account. It is the privilege of the painter to engage our sympathies, more directly, perhaps, than the author, for the lowly and helpless. There are countless human waifs and strays among our teeming population, whose mere existence cannot be brought under our notice, without at the same time addressing a forcible, if mute, appeal to our compassion. And how much more are we moved to pity when one such is placed so vividly before us as here! We see by her costume that this little maiden is being reared by charity. The dress, we understand, is that of the "Bloomsbury Charity." The medal she wears suspended round her neck has a portrait on the obverse with the inscription, "Miles Coverdale, Bishop of Exeter," and upon the reverse side the following inscription:—"To commemorate that Glorious Event the publication of the First English Bible of Miles Coverdale, 1535; and the third century of the Protestant Reformation." By-the-way, the antiquated, and therefore now ridiculous, costumes retained in charity schools generally strikes us always as a cruel anachronism. If charity is deserved at all, it surely should not be proclaimed to all the world by a habit which seems to mark at once the ostentation of the giver and the slavish obligation of the receiver. The custom can hardly be reconciled with the injunction that in giving alms we should not let our left hand know what our right hand doeth. It can scarcely have been the intention of the founders, nor can it be the wish of many of the supporters of charity schools. We have, then (returning from this digression), before us a poor girl who is possibly in reality, or, what is still more painful to conceive, virtually, an orphan. She may never have known a father to guide and protect, or a mother to teach her to bend the knee and hush the Lord's Prayer. A parental institution has, however, done much to compensate for the loss of these inestimable advantages. As a child she is trained up in the way she should go; and she is now praying to Him, in His own appointed words, who has promised to be a Father to the fatherless.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Major Dugald Campbell, late Madras Staff Corps, has been unanimously elected for the office of City Marshal, vacant by the death of Mr. F. Browne.

Lord and Lady Elcho distributed prizes last week to the successful competitors in a flower-show and industrial exhibition held in the inclosure of Myddelton-square, Clerkenwell.

A fete on behalf of the funds of the Royal Dramatic College took place, yesterday week, at the Crystal Palace. The entertainments were of a varied and attractive character.

The annual meeting of the London and Middlesex Archaeological Society was held on Monday evening at University College—Mr. J. Hall, honorary treasurer, in the chair.

The postmen and their supporters in a movement for increase of pay met, on Wednesday, in the Great Hall of the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, when resolutions were passed in accordance with the objects of the meeting.

A meeting of shareholders in various submarine telegraph companies, held on Monday at the City Terminus Hotel, passed resolutions in favour of the scheme of the Globe Telegraph and Trust Company.

The friends and admirers of Sir William Fergusson, Bart., F.R.S., have opened a subscription, with a view of having his portrait painted by an artist of eminence. The work, when completed, will be offered to the Council of the College of Surgeons.

At a recent meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works attention was drawn to the fact that several lives had been lost through the unprotected state of Whitehall stairs, on the Victoria Embankment, and it was resolved that railings should be placed round them.

Out of 400 candidates for the office of assistant secretary to the new Council of the Royal Horticultural Society, Colonel J. S. Davenport, formerly of the Commissariat Department, a brother-in-law of Lord Bury, the president of the society, has been elected.

The remains of Sir David Salomons, Bart., were on Wednesday interred in the family vault at West Ham, in Essex; and, in addition to the relatives and friends of the deceased, the group of mourners included the Lord Mayor, the Aldermen and civic officials, and several members of Parliament.

At Wednesday's meeting of the London School Board a recommendation of the finance committee to ask the Public Works Loan Commissioners for a second quarter of a million to provide accommodation for 102,600 more children was agreed to. The actual margin to be provided for was stated in another report to be 97,803 children.

There is no foundation for a paragraph, which has appeared in some of our contemporaries, to the effect that when the pictures and objects of art exhibited by Sir Richard Wallace at Bethnal-green were removed to Hertford House Manchester-square, the public would be admitted to see them on Sundays. No such intention was ever entertained.

Newport Market Refuge was on Monday visited by the Princess of Wales and her sister, the Grand Duchess Cesarevna. More than an hour was passed by the Princesses in the school, and they afterwards inspected the workshops and dormitories. On leaving, both ladies expressed their unqualified gratification with the cleanliness and order apparent throughout.

Tricks of the bird trade have been disclosed in the evidence of an old bird-catcher, before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the protection of wild fowl. Hen birds are painted up as cocks, and sold in the street to lovers of bargains. Greenfinches are constantly sold as linnets. The same witness bore testimony to the great diminution in the number of goldfinches and linnets within the last twelve years.

For the purpose of discussing the subject of technical education, a conference was held on Monday at Marlborough House—the Prince of Wales presiding. His Royal Highness, having received the representatives of different City companies, opened the proceedings with a few words. In addition to his Royal Highness, the speakers were the Earl of Carnarvon, the Lord Mayor, Alderman Stone, and Mr. Henry Cole. A resolution, cordially sympathizing with the objects for which the conference had been called, and promising the support and co-operation of the City companies, was carried.

The bank rate has been reduced from $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, to which it was lowered on the 17th inst., to 4 per cent.

The Zoological Society has received a valuable present from his Excellency Sir Henry Ord, Governor of the Straits Settlements, in the shape of two hens of the Argus pheasant (Argus gigantis). Two cocks of the same bird having been previously received from Mr. J. G. Fanshawe, the society have now two pairs of this magnificent bird in their aviaries. The only other pair of Argus pheasants in Europe is believed to be that in the gardens of the Zoological Society of Antwerp.

Baroness Burdett-Coutts and Mr. Coulthurst (senior partner in Coutts's bank) have, says the Hour, each contributed the munificent sum of £15,000 towards the formation of a widows' and orphans' fund for the benefit of the employees of that establishment.—The Baroness has presented to the Forest Fund a further donation of £50, to assist the work of preserving Epping Forest as an open space for the recreation and enjoyment of the people of London.

The City Press states that there will be a grand gathering at the Mansion House on Tuesday, the 5th proximo, when the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress will receive the members of the British Medical Association. The reception will take place in the saloon, and in the Egyptian Hall there will be an exhibition of works of art, scientific instruments, &c., the drawing-rooms being reserved for such objects as are likely to interest ladies. There will also be a concert.

The total number of paupers last week in the metropolitan district was 98,672, of whom 32,955 were in work-houses, and 65,717 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1872, 1871, and 1870, these figures show a decrease of 3661, 21,706, and 28,642 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 483, of whom 292 were men, 149 women, and 42 children under sixteen.

An inquest was held on Tuesday night on the body of Mrs. Jane White, aged fifty, of Earl's-court-road, Kensington. The deceased trod upon and ignited a match which by some mischance had been left on the floor of her drawing-room. Directly afterwards her clothes were in a blaze. A gentleman extinguished the flames by wrapping bed-clothes round her, but she died in a short time. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

Important changes have been made in the Westminster Hospital Medical School to meet the present requirements for clinical and scientific training. Special lectureships on clinical medicine and surgery have been established, and have been filled by the appointment of Dr. Basham and Mr. Holthouse. Mr. Pearce and Mr. Cowell have been appointed to the chair of surgery, and Mr. Davy has succeeded to that of anatomy. Mr. Cowell is the new dean of the school, and will deliver the introductory address on Oct. 1.

Mr. Miall, M.P., was, yesterday week, entertained at luncheon by a party of gentlemen, at the Crystal Palace, and was presented with a purse of 10,000 gs., as a practical expression of regard and gratitude on the part of some of those who appreciate his labours as editor of the Nonconformist, and as representing in Parliament the principle of religious equality. Mr. H. Lee, J.P., of Manchester, presided, and speeches were delivered by Mr. Richard, M.P., Mr. P. A. Taylor, M.P., Mr. B. Armitage, Mr. Isaac Holden, Mr. W. Baines, Mr. Illingworth, M.P., and Mr. J. Cook.

On Tuesday the annual fete in connection with the National Temperance League took place at the Crystal Palace, and, as the official returns show, more than 53,000 persons were present. At eleven o'clock there was a conference in the opera theatre, under the presidency of Mr. Samuel Bowley, when papers were read by Major-General F. Eardley-Wilmot, R.A., F.R.S.; Mr. William Hoyle, the Rev. G. W. Oliver, and others. At one o'clock a great meeting was held in the central transept, Mr. Tweedie presiding. A variety of amusements was provided, and the day passed most pleasantly.

The eighth parochial flower show of window-grown plants, in St. Andrew's, Wells-street, was held on Tuesday, in the garden of the Adult Orphan Institution in St. Andrew's-place, Regent's Park. The prizes were given away by the Marchioness of Waterford, one of the lady patronesses. The band of the E division of police attended, and the exhibitors, about 500 in number, many of them being children, escaped for the afternoon from the crowded alleys and courts in which they live, amused themselves with dances and games under the welcome shade of the pretty garden, placed so kindly at the vicar's disposal. To each prize-winner Mr. J. T. Peacock, a parishioner, gave a cactus, to be reared through the coming winter, and to be exhibited next year.

Lord Bury presided on Monday at a dinner given at the new Queen's Hotel, Richmond, by members of the Royal Colonial Institute and others, to the team of riflemen from Canada who came over to compete at Wimbledon. The Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P., and Sir Richard Graves M'Donnell occupied vice-chairmen's seats, and there were also present, among others, Mr. Otway, M.P., Major Arbuthnot, M.P., Mr. Macfie, M.P., Captain Bedford Pim, together with the Canadian team, and their officers, Colonel Peters and Major Otter. Colonel Peters, in returning thanks for a toast, said that the Queen had not in any part of her great empire more loyal subjects than the inhabitants of Canada. The Rifle Association in the Dominion of Canada was formed on the model of that of England, and the officers of the association and the riflemen of Canada esteemed it the highest prize which they could bestow upon marksmen to send them to England. He was happy to say that the representatives of the Dominion that year had done themselves and the colony credit, and one of them was among the first sixty for the Queen's prize.

During the week ending last Saturday 2242 births and 1381 deaths were registered in London, the former having been 31 above and the latter 269 below the average. One person died from smallpox, 31 from measles, 11 from scarlet fever, 1 from diphtheria, 64 from whooping-cough, 21 from different forms of fever, and 205 from diarrhoea. Thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 334 deaths were referred, against numbers increasing steadily from 129 to 194 in the four preceding weeks. To different forms of violence 56 deaths were referred; 44 were the result of negligence or accident, including 25 from fractures and contusions, 2 from burns and scalds, 8 from drowning, and 6 from suffocation. Eleven cases of suicide and one of murder were registered during the week. Four of the deaths from fractures and contusions, resulting from negligence or accident, were caused by horses or vehicles in the streets. The mean temperature at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, was 59.4 deg. and 2.8 deg. below the average for the corresponding week in fifty years. Nearly an inch and a quarter of rain fell during the week. Attention is directed by the Registrar-General to the fact that the fatality from diarrhoea continues to increase rapidly.—Last week 4576 births and 3142 deaths were registered in London and twenty other large cities and towns of the United Kingdom. The natural increase of population was 1934. The mortality from all causes in these towns was at the rate of 22 deaths annually to every 1000 persons estimated to be living.

A meeting of the council of the Metropolitan Hospital-Sunday Fund was held, on Wednesday, at the Mansion House—the Lord Mayor presiding. The total result of the collections made on Sunday, June 15, was £27,403; of which £24,571 had been allotted to hospitals, £967 to dispensaries, and £881 to convalescent homes and kindred institutions. A small balance was thus left in hand for any incidental expenses connected with the distribution of the fund. The report was adopted, and it was left for the council which is to be elected in October to select a day for the Hospital Sunday of 1874. The report of the sub-committee stated that of the total amount received £25,511 was collected in 1060 places of worship; the remaining £1859 odd being composed of subscriptions among workmen, at schools, and of donations paid direct to the fund at the Mansion House. The congregational collections were as follow:—532 Church of England, £17,837; sixty-six Baptist, £924; 105 Congregationalists, £2011; two Free Christians, £45; twelve Friends, £213; six German Lutheran, £84; one Greek Church, £198; two Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion, £25; twenty-one Jews, £1324; one Latter-Day Saints, 8s.; fifty-eight Methodist, £131; ten Mission Churches, £19; one Moravian, £20; twenty-five Presbyterian, £634; sixty-six Roman Catholic, £593; five Swedenborgian, £55; eleven Unitarian, £188; six unsectarian, £188; sixty-five Wesleyans, £349; and sixteen other denominations, £334. A conversation followed, in which the Rev. Mr. Humphrey, Dr. Glover, the Rev. Canon Miller, Dr. Allon, Dr. Jabez Hogg, Mr. Few, Sir A. de Rothschild, the Rev. Mr. Kitto, Baroness Burdett-Coutts, and the Lord Mayor took part, chiefly relating to the difference in the amounts awarded to hospitals as compared with dispensaries.

BREAKING IN POINTERS AND SETTERS.

Next to this month of July comes August, and the next month to that is September; at least, it used to be so, and we may presume that it will yet be so, although, as a poet remarks, "the old order changeth, giving place to new." Sporting chroniclers begin already to tell us of the grouse prospects on the Scottish moors, the stock of young partridges in English stubbles, and the disease which has made sad havoc in some pheasant preserves. It is not, therefore, too early for us to think of the gunwork to be done in September and October with the aid of these well-bred pointers and setters, whose field-training is the subject of Mr. Goddard's drawing engraved this week. There is a chapter in that comprehensive treatise on "The Dog, in Health and Disease," by "Stonehenge," which is specially devoted to the art of "breaking and entering," that useful animal for the sportsman's autumnal service. Puppies, we are told, must be taught first instant obedience to every order, and to put a restraint on their appetites when so commanded. They must learn to come to their master's heel and to keep there, but to run forward at his bidding, or to lie down and keep down. "Ware fence!" should be understood to forbid their breaking bounds, and "Ware chase!" to stop their pursuit of cats, poultry, sheep, or hares. "Soho!" is what they must take as a prohibition to touch food placed near them, or to run in upon birds. They are to mind what is said to them, be it the word "Heel!" or "Down!" or "Hold up!" and we can only say that, if they do all this, we know very few children of the human race half so well taught. When so far morally instructed, they are to be taken a daily walk in the fields, and sometimes to hear the noise of a gun or pistol. Then comes the most difficult part, says "Stonehenge," that of teaching the dogs to range. A brace of dogs should be accustomed to cover a space of ground by diagonal advancing movements, crossing from side to side, and intersecting each other's path in the middle several times before they reach the end. In the process of training for this manoeuvre, the puppy or young one is accompanied by an old and experienced dog. The young one may recklessly put up the birds he finds, and chase the game without any notion of standing and pointing; but this is a fault to be forgiven while he learns to range or hunt.

This lesson requires great nicety of adaptation to the ground, and to the direction from which the wind conveys the "body-scent," so as to avoid driving all the birds too soon off the allotted beat, and to avoid puzzling the dog with useless movements. "A good dog who has a master as good as himself," says our judicious author, "should always wait for orders; but there is some excuse for very clever dogs becoming headstrong when they are constantly misdirected." Does not this remark, too, apply with equal truth to the discipline of human services? We might quote, in like manner, what is said in the same book of the correction of various faults; hunting too low, or too wide; "pottering," or dwelling on the foot-scent; and "blinking," or leaving the game as soon as found, which are practices analogous to the faults we observe in many politicians, official or professional men, and in the social business of our world. Some people, we know, of a prying or groping habit of mind, who should be fitted with a "puzzle-peg" to hold their noses well above the tainted ground. There are vices and crimes among ourselves, it must be owned, to our shame and sorrow, which have seldom been cured on earth but by the use of "sixpennyworth of cord" round the neck, if not by making "a hole in the water;" that is when the monitory whip has been tried in vain. "Is thy servant a dog?" may be asked in reply to this severe sentence; but it is uttered in no cynical spirit. After the instruction of pointers and setters in beating their ground, they have to learn how to point, or to set, or to stand; how to back another dog when he is standing, and, in some cases, how to retrieve or fetch the game. All this should be a very interesting occupation to one who is fond of "teaching the young idea how to shoot," or how to attend upon shooters.

"A KNIGHT ARMING."

This drawing is one of the minor, but not the least characteristic, of the works which Sir John Gilbert, A.R.A., has contributed to the current exhibition of the Water-Colour Society, of which he is President. Sir John is never more at home than in depicting the medieval warrior in his harness of mail or plate. For the handsome and stalwart figure before us he has chosen the period when plate armour had almost entirely superseded chain-mail. The young page is buckling on the last vestige of what once (as the hauberk) was a complete body-covering of chain-mail. This office being performed, the knight has only to replace his barbet-cap with the helmet and to draw on his gauntlets to be armed cap-a-pie. Is it for friendly turnney or combat à outrance—is it against Christian foe or heathen paynim—that the good knight is arming? The question is not easy to determine: the scut round the knight's left arm was, however, doubtless given by fair hands, and as a lady's champion the knight is about to enter the lists, or maybe to engage in a more serious contest.

endeavour to point out that the sums in the defendant's pocket-book were worked out in the same way. The learned counsel next occupied the Court a considerable time in going over the instances of Roger's bad spelling. He quoted extensively from the memorandum-book of Roger, and submitted it showed that he was a wild, reckless, harum-scarum sort of fellow, with vicious and depraved tastes. Alluding to the Jesuit system of Stonyhurst, he asserted, advisedly, that it was calculated to corrupt and pollute the mind of every young lad who came under it. This assertion called forth a rebuke from the Lord Chief Justice. Dr. Kenaly was about to quote passages from Paul de Kock and other works, when, on the suggestion of the Lord Chief Justice, it was arranged that this part of the speech should be delayed until the following morning, when women and children might be excluded. Then he passed to the correspondence with Gosford, to show Roger's coarse mind, and said he should demonstrate, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that Roger had no more love for Miss Doughty than he (Dr. Kenaly) had for the desk on which his hand rested.

The hearing of the Gloucester election petition terminated yesterday week, when Mr. Wait, the sitting member, was declared duly elected, and the petitioners were ordered to pay the costs.

Lord Mackenzie on Monday issued his judgment in the action at the instance of Mr. Padwick against Sir Archibald Douglas Stuart to have it declared that the minute of sale to him by the late Sir William Stuart of the estates of Grandtully, Murthly, and Strathbraan, for the sum of £350,000, was a valid and effectual contract of sale, on the ground that the entail of the estates was a bad one. His Lordship finds that the entail is a good entail, and he therefore in effect decides against the claim of Mr. Padwick, and in favour of Sir Archibald Douglas Stuart.

At Lambeth, Robert Bush has been prosecuted under the Betting Act, and fined £20 and costs.

Yesterday week, at the Aylesbury Assizes, Henry Evans, thirty-two years of age, was convicted of the wilful murder of his wife, Annie Seabrook Evans, and was sentenced to death.

We regret to announce the death of George Carr Glyn, Lord Wolverton, which occurred on Thursday morning, at his residence in Upper Eccleston-street. His Lordship was in his seventy-seventh year.

The Dutch squadron for blockading Acheen is to be composed of ten vessels, with sixty-four cannon, and to be increased afterwards by five more vessels. Six battalions, of 1250 men each, are to undertake the new expedition to Acheen.

Tuesday's Gazette contains the appointment of Mr. H. C. Rothery, Registrar of the High Court of Admiralty, to be her Majesty's agent to attend the Commission appointed to meet at Halifax, under articles 22 and 23 of the Treaty of Washington.

Admiral Milne distributed some prizes to the boys in Greenwich Royal Hospital School on Tuesday. The proceedings began at noon with the manning of the new ship, to be known henceforth as "The Fame."

Mr. G. G. Adams, the sculptor, who it may be remembered had the honour of a sitting from the Shah, has since produced a bust of his Majesty, which is about to be executed in marble for dispatch to Persia. The cast may for a short time be seen at Mr. Adams's studio, in Sloane-street.

The Listok, a St. Petersburg journal, says that the English custom of bringing actions for "break of promise" is being introduced into Russia. A young woman has sued a young man for breach, claiming 300 roubles, and has obtained a decree for a somewhat less amount. The defendant has appealed to a higher tribunal.

By the mail steamer which has arrived at Southampton, we have advices from the Cape to the 25th ult. The bill for the Reform of the Legislative Council, which passed the Assembly by a large majority, was rejected in the House to be reformed by the casting vote of the President. Diamonds are still being found at the diggings, but many of the miners have been tempted away to the Transvaal gold-fields.

The annual exhibition of the Lincolnshire Agricultural Society was opened at Gainsborough on Wednesday. The society was formed in 1869 by the union of the North and South Agricultural Associations, which had previously enjoyed a long and successful career. Later in the day, a regatta took place on the River Trent, the prizes at the close being distributed by Miss Clements. A military concert was held in the evening.

Thunderstorms are reported from various parts of the country. In several cases the storms have caused fatal accidents and much destruction of property. A party of children was struck at Bolton, and two of them were killed. A young woman walking on the banks of the Ribble, near Preston, was blinded by the lightning for a short time. A man and two horses were killed by lightning at a stable-door in Hutton, near Preston; and in Grimsargh, a neighbouring township, three men were struck dead as they were returning from a hay-field in a cart. The same fate befell a man in Fullwood, who was walking on the highway. In Leeds a servant-girl was struck dead on the stair of a house; and in the same town an old man died, it is believed, from fright excited by the storm. A fishing coble belonging to Buckhaven, Scotland, was struck by lightning when off the Tyne, and one of the crew, named John Thompson, was killed, and others were severely injured. In Glasgow a house in Canning-place was set on fire by the lightning and damaged to the extent of £300. A monument at Coldstream, erected to the memory of Charles Marjoribanks, M.P., a brother of the late Lord Marjoribanks, has been shattered to pieces by lightning. A two-story villa at Blantyre was burned to the ground. Five milch cows were killed in a byre near Lenzie, and two cattle in a field at Cadder. Oswald school spire, Kirkintilloch, was also struck. At Gilmoor near Liverpool, a barn on the farm of Mr. Wright, on the Croxeth estate, was struck by a thunderbolt and burned out, though the roof was of slate. At Bath there was a thunder-storm of unusual violence. Rain fell in torrents, sand and stones being washed into the city in large quantities from the surrounding hills. The lightning was exceedingly vivid, and almost unintermittent. The hills around the city were visible for several miles. Trees were smashed and several houses injured by the lightning. Deaths from sunstroke are reported from Shrewsbury, Blackburn, Grimsargh, Denton, and Fifehire, and serious injuries have been inflicted on persons in other districts throughout the kingdom from the same cause.—A thunderstorm of great severity passed over the Shetland Islands last week, and much damage was done. Rain fell in torrents, and large quantities of soil were washed from the steep sides of the islands. At one point in the parish of Dingwall, not far from Lerwick, a waterspout burst on the top of a hill, and carried before it an immense mass of stones, earth, and turf into the sea.

SKETCHES IN SPAIN.

The renewed atrocities of the Spanish war of factions has recalled the news-reading public mind to the distracted state of that country. But in the city of Granada, which yields two subjects for our Special Artist's sketches, furnishing the illustrations of "The Gipsies' Quarter" and "The Fish-market," misery is the chronic condition of the Spanish populace. Mr. J. B. Stone, author of the last-published book of Peninsular travel, called "A Tour with Cook through Spain" (Sampson Low and Co.), declares that Granada is the most poverty-stricken of all the poor Spanish cities; but that the colony of gitanos, or gipsies, there dwelling, far exceeds in wretchedness the lowest of the Spaniards. The number of this degraded race in Granada is reckoned at 5000, living all the year round in deep caverns, forming chambers and galleries cut out in the rocks, on the side of a steep hill overlooking the city, or in some of the most squalid and ruinous houses. They are a people of nasty and dirty habits, but the women are said to be chaste, though nobody suspects the men of being honest. They are considered to belong to the Roman Catholic religion; they keep the crucifix, and a picture of the Virgin Mary, in every dwelling; and many of them attend the mass and confess to the priest; but they nevertheless profess the gainful arts of sorcery and soothsaying. Mr. Stone describes a gipsy dance at Granada, like that shown in our illustration; the fandango, the bolero, and the romalis, or proper gipsy dance, being severally performed to the music of a guitar, for the amusement of Cook's party of tourists. Four such travelling Englishmen seem about to give money, in payment for the exertions of the dancers, in the scene which our Artist has drawn. The other view in Granada is that of the Fishmarket, where such kinds of food are sold and bought with a money of reals (a real is a groat, worth twopence-halfpenny) and smaller coins of copper, both circular and square; there is also a silver piece, the peseta, between a franc and a shilling, and there is the well-known Spanish dollar.

THE LATE BISHOP WILBERFORCE.

The death of this eminent Prelate of the Church of England, who was killed, on Saturday evening, by a fall from his horse while riding, with Earl Granville, over the Surrey Downs, between Leatherhead and Holmby, near Dorking, is a subject of general condolence. His Lordship, as Bishop of Oxford from 1845 to 1869, and during the last four years as Bishop of Winchester, was one of the most active and influential members of the highest ecclesiastical order in this kingdom. The dates of some chief events in his private and public life are recorded in our column of obituary notices for this week. He was endowed by nature, above most other men of his age and country, with the great social talent of persuasive talking, whether in the pulpit, on the platform, in the House of Lords, or in ordinary conversation. As a courtier and diplomatist, in the fair and good sense of those names, it is scarcely too much to say that Dr. Samuel Wilberforce was among the ablest of his time; while his efforts as a preacher and a Parliamentary orator were nearly equal to those of his highest renown. He was also distinguished by skill, tact, and diligence in administrative business, which added much to the usefulness of his clerical and episcopal labours, during a career of forty-five years since he took orders and office in the Established Church. This is not the place to describe or to discuss his part in theological and ecclesiastical controversies of his day, even with a view to their political relations. Those who could not upon every occasion agree with him now bear witness to the valuable qualities of his character, the amiable generosity of his temper, and the charming grace of his manners, which often won the esteem of his political opponents. These merits are not always found in persons animated with a more romantic or evangelical ardour for the cause of truth and the welfare of souls. Whatever Bishop Wilberforce was, he was not a "graceless zealot," or a bitter bigot, like too many famous Churchmen; and his example rather tended to conciliate, than to alarm and overawe, the enemies of the Christian faith.

A portrait of the lamented Bishop, which was engraved and published in this Journal at the beginning of the year 1870 (about the time of his translation from the see of Oxford to the see of Winchester), is now reprinted for the present occasion. It is copied from the photograph by Mr. John Watkin.

DERBY FREE SWIMMING-BATHS.

By the gift of Mr. Michael Bass, M.P., the town of Derby now enjoys the comfort of free public baths, which were opened on the 14th ult., with a ceremony of presentation and of acceptance by the Mayor on behalf of the town. There are two baths, which are both swimming-baths—one for men and the other for boys. They are constructed in the Recreation Ground, at the south-east point of the Holmes, at the junction of the Mill Fleam and the river Derwent. The baths are each 100 ft. long and 50 ft. wide, the depth of the men's bath being 4 ft. at the shallow end, and graduating to 5 ft. 6 in. at its deepest end; the boys' bath being 3 ft. at the shallow end, and graduating to 4 ft. 6 in. at the deepest end. Attached to the men's bath are fifty-seven covered dressing-boxes, made partly to close, and other offices and conveniences, each box being fitted with seats and peg-rails. The boys' bath has covered bathing-sheds to accommodate seventy-two boys, fitted with seats and peg-rails, and the customary offices. The whole of the bathing-sheds and dressing-boxes are of cast iron, panelled, with the monogram M.T.B. (the initials of Mr. Bass's names) on each panel. The baths are entirely separated from each other. The attendant's office is at the north-west end, and commands a view of both baths from windows looking on to each. The building and the entrances and walls in the front are constructed of coloured bricks in an ornamental manner. There will be two mural drinking-fountains at the entrance to each bath, and a clock with two dials (one facing the playground and the other the new baths) will be fixed in the attendant's office. The swimming-baths are each lined with white glazed bricks set in Portland cement, and the bottoms are laid with Seyssel asphalt. A foundation of concrete is laid under the whole of the baths and buildings. The margins round the baths are 8 ft. 6 in. wide, and are laid with toolled York stone. The original scheme for water supply was to take the water from the "basin" at the Long Bridge by a 9-in. conduit through a filter into the baths, which are built at such a level that the water would run in at one end at the bottom and out of the opposite end at the top, thus ensuring a constant supply and change of water; but, owing to the intervention of the Canal Company, who considered their interests would be affected, the scheme was abandoned, and each bath is now filled once a week with clean filtered water, which the Derby Waterworks Company, owing to the extension of their works at Little Eaton, are enabled to do at a mere nominal rate. The two baths hold, together, about 250,000 gallons. The works have been designed by Mr. George Thompson, the borough engineer and surveyor, and carried out under his superintendence, the entire cost being about £2500. Mr. Robert Bridgart, of Derby, was contractor for the whole, except the ironwork, which was done by Messrs. Stacey, Davis, and Co., of the Phoenix Foundry, Derby. Will the Corporation of London give us those promised Floating Baths on the Thames?

NATIONAL SPORTS.

It is a melancholy coincidence that within two days of the sale of all Sir Joseph Hawley's horses John Wells, the great jockey, who was so inseparably connected with the "cherry, black cap," should have died quite suddenly. Wells was born on a Christmas Day, we believe, in the year 1834, and at a very early age was apprenticed to Mr. Flintoff, at Hodnesford, who gave him his first mount in public at Northampton, in 1848, when he finished second for the Trial Stakes on Ribaldry. At this time he was always known as "Tiny" Wells, a nickname which must have appeared very inapt to those who only saw him after he had developed into one of the biggest and most powerful jockeys on the turf. In the autumn of 1848 he scored his first win, in the Birmingham Stakes, on Ribaldry; but the "tide" which "led on to fortune" did not reach its "flood" till 1852, when he carried off the Goodwood Stakes and Cesarewitch on Weathergage. He was out of his indentures in the following year, and shortly afterwards accepted a retainer from old John Day, and became first jockey to Mr. Howard. Some of his greatest successes were achieved in 1854, when he and that wonderful mare Virago swept off the City and Suburban and the Great Metropolitan—which at that time were run on the same afternoon—the Great Northern and Dutchman's Handicap, the One Thousand, and Goodwood and Doncaster Cups. Next year he won the St. Leger on Saucebox; and in '58 came the first of his great successes in Sir Joseph Hawley's colours, for he secured both Guineas and Derby on Fitz Roland and Beadsman respectively, following this up with another Derby victory on Masjid in the succeeding year. We have not space to go into details of his numerous successes in his beloved "cherry and black," as, between 1858 and 1870, nearly every great stake in the calendar fell to him; but we must record his Derby victory on Blue Gown in 1868, and his St. Leger triumph on Pero Gomez in the following year. With the "double-first" which he took with Rosierucian in the Ascot Stakes and Alexandra Plate in 1871, he may be said to have closed his career on the Turf, which extended over about twenty-three years, during which time he maintained an unblemished character for integrity and uprightness. Wells was more remarkable for his wonderfully resolute style of riding than for any great elegance or finish, and he was never quite the same man after his terrible fall in the Dee Stakes at Chester in 1859. He was buried at Kingsclere on Wednesday.

The melancholy death of Mr. Gallon, who was drowned, last week, in the river Lugg, while hunting his otter-hounds, will be much regretted by northern sporting men, with whom he was very popular.

Middle Park was once more the scene of a great sale on Saturday afternoon last, when, in addition to the dispersal of Sir Joseph Hawley's stud, there were Mr. William Blenkiron's thirty-one yearlings to attract purchasers. The latter gentleman is treading in the footsteps of his father; and as there are now upwards of seventy brood mares in the new Eltham stud, it is easy to see that the glories of Middle Park will not be allowed to fade. The yearlings sold on Saturday were rather a scratch lot, many having been purchased, and not bred, by Mr. Blenkiron; so that the average of about 127 gs. was not a bad one. Far different were Sir Joseph Hawley's eleven, which were all of the choicest blood, and made 5330 gs., or an average of 484 gs. Three of them were bought by "Mr. Elliott," on behalf of a new stud company which has been formed; and his purchases included the beautiful own sister to Rosierucian (1760 gs.), who was prima donna of the company. Mr. Houldsworth took the own brother to Pero Gomez (1300 gs.); and Mr. André, who, it will be remembered, bought Blue Gown from Sir Joseph for 5000 gs., now gave 1200 gs. for his own brother. Four horses in training only realised low prices; but there was very strong competition for the brood mares, which were a most magnificent lot, the sixteen averaging 682 gs. "Mr. Elliott" was again the chief buyer, and secured six, among which were Salamanca, (dam of Pero Gomez), 700 gs., and Mrs. Quickly (dam of Green Sleeve), 620 gs. The Cobham Stud Company purchased Madame Legentine (dam of Rosierucian, The Palmer, &c.), for 1000 gs.; while Mr. Blenkiron obtained Bas Bleu (dam of Blue Gown), and M. Lefevre took Green Sleeve, at exactly the same price. The greatest competition of all was for Morna (1750 gs.), who was eventually knocked down to Mr. Oldaker. It was said that the foreigners meant to have Rosierucian at any cost; but they did not bid for him at all, and he fell to Mr. Chaplin's net for 6200 gs., which seems a very long price for an untried sire.

Quite when the Gentlemen have met the Players at cricket, they have almost invariably proved successful, and last week's match at Prince's proved no exception to the rule, for the professionals were beaten in a single innings with 54 runs to spare. This hollow result was due to the fine play of Messrs. W. G. and C. E. Grace and Hornby. Mr. W. G. Grace made 70 runs and took five wickets, his brother scored 63 runs and bowled six of the Players, and Mr. Hornby put together 104 in fine style. Poor Surrey has suffered many reverses of late, and in her last match has had to succumb to Notts by 119 runs. Martin McIntyre's bowling was the great feature of the play, as in the second innings of Surrey he took eight wickets at the trivial expense of 55 runs. Sussex made a capital fight with Yorkshire, the "big county" only winning by three wickets. Mr. Sharp (42), Fillery (53), and Mr. C. H. Smith (35) did best for Sussex; while, on the other side, Greenwood made 36 and (not out) 43, and Rowbotham played a fine not-out innings of 50. The Canadian Eleven v. Fifteen of the M.C.C. was a very curious game. The Canadians ran up the gigantic score of 331, to which result Mr. W. G. Grace (152), Mr. C. J. Ottaway (52), and Mr. C. K. Francis (53) were the chief contributors. This was well answered by a total of 339, made principally by Mr. G. Bird (not out, 116), and Mr. F. Tildard (52). The second innings of each side was comparatively short, and the Canadians finally won by 24 runs, thanks chiefly to the fine bowling of Mr. A. Appleby, which secured sixteen wickets. A match between the gentlemen of Staffordshire and Warwickshire was won by the latter in a single innings.

Owing to the fine weather, harvest operations have commenced in the home counties.

By the death of Lord Westbury the number of ex-Chancellors is reduced to four—viz., Lords St. Leonards, Chelmsford, Cairns, and Hatherley.

A little girl has died from hydrophobia at Stockton, in consequence of being bitten by a rabid dog, the same animal having also caused the death of two horses. A veterinary surgeon, likewise injured, cauterised the wounds, and has not suffered from them.

CHAPPELL and CO'S SCHOOL-ROOM

PIANOFORTE, in Canadian Walnut or Mahogany Case. Price TWENTY GUINEAS. This instrument combines good quality of tone and excellence of workmanship. It has the merit of standing well in tune, and is capable of sustaining hard school practice without going out of order.—ChapPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO'S YACHT

PIANINO, with Folding Keyboard, Check Action, Trichord Touch, in Solid Mahogany or Black Canadian Walnut Case. THIRTY GUINEAS; or in Maple, THIRTY-FIVE GUINEAS. Constructed for Ships' Cabins, to occupy the smallest possible space, and to stand the damp of a sea voyage; the back is strengthened with iron bars and metallic plates, and the whole of the mechanism is of the best quality.—ChapPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

DULCIANA ORGAN HARMONIUM, by

Alexandre.—This New Instrument is especially adapted to the Drawing-Room. It has the sweetest tone possible, resembling the soft dulciana of the best organs, and, by a new patent air chest, is free from the slightest harshness. Price, 3 stops, oak, 12 gu.; mahogany, 12 gu.; rosewood, 14s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO'S ORGAN

HARMONIUM, on the THREE-YEAR SYSTEM.—These instruments have the round tone of the organ without the disadvantages of requiring tuning, with much quicker articulation than the American Organs, and at half the cost, at
ChapPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-

GUINIA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case, Five Octaves, and Two Foot-Boards.
The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured.
The Instruments now offered to the public will be found devoid of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This and has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and organ-like.
Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.
The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect and without extra cost.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

MR. MENZIES,

THE WINNER OF THE QUEEN'S PRIZE AT WIMBLEDON.

Sergeant Robert Menzies, of the Queen's Edinburgh, is a student in the office of his brother, a solicitor in the Supreme Court of Scotland. We learn from the Scotsman that Sergeant Menzies is a Strath Rannoch man, and that the Queen's prize has thus for the third time gone to a Highland strath. Like his compatriot, Angus Cameron, when he shot in the second stage of the Queen's prize for the first time and won the coveted honour, Sergeant Menzies never before Tuesday fired with a small-bore rifle, and the credit of securing the highest marksman's distinction is consequently all the greater to the young man. Sergeant Menzies never before attended the Wimbledon gathering, and on the present occasion he had not intended to join in the national competitions. It is understood that he had not even entered for the various matches, but that, having registered both at the West of Scotland and Edinburgh meetings excellent scores, he was induced to take his brother's place in the contests at Wimbledon.

Tuesday week, when the final stage of the Queen's Prize was decided, was St. Swithin's Day, and the alternations of sunshine and rain throughout the morning made the shooting very anxious work. The sudden changes from bright sunlight to deep gloom, combined with a constantly-shifting wind, were extremely perplexing, and it required the greatest possible watchfulness to prevent mistakes. The close of the contest for the Queen's Prize was most exciting. Three men stood well for the gold medal. Corporal Pullman, South Middlesex, had made 24 at 800 yards and 23 at 900 yards, and he began at 1000 yards as the best man. Private Baker, of Bristol, a well-known small-bore shot, made 25 at the first and 20 at the second range, while Sergeant Menzies, of the 1st Edinburgh, had made 24 and 19. The shooting got so close towards the finish of the contest that Pullman only wanted to get one of his last two shots on the target to be declared the winner, being at this stage 59 to Mr. Menzies' full score of 60. But, to the surprise of everybody, and, to the great disappointment of Middlesex, both these shots missed the target. Sergeant Menzies was carried to the council tent, where the badge of the winner was pinned upon his arm, and thence to the camp of the London Scottish. Here the three pipers received him with musical honours.

Sergeant Menzies received a great ovation on his arrival in Edinburgh on Monday night. He was met at the Waverly station by the Highland companies of the Queen's Edinburgh Brigade, and was carried by them shoulder high to the drill-hall, where congratulatory speeches were delivered by Lieutenant-Colonel Davidson, Lieutenant-Colonel Macdonald, and others; and Sergeant Menzies' health was pledged in a flowing bumper.

Our portrait of Sergeant Menzies is from a photograph by Messrs. Herbert Watkins and Haigh, 213, Regent-street. Mr. Herbert Watkins has photographed all the Queen's Prize winners of fourteen years in succession, ever since this yearly competition began.

TUSKS OF THE MAMMOTH.

In a remote period of geological history, termed the Post-Pliocene Age of the Neozoic or Tertiary Epoch of creation for this earth we inhabit, there still lived many huge mammals, the offspring of those still more gigantic and terrible beasts which had thriven in the warm climate of the Miocene Age. But the conditions of animal life were greatly altered, in the latitudes of the best known countries in Europe and Asia, by a visitation of extremely cold and long winters, alternating with fiercely hot summers, which continued several thousand years in succession, and which was probably due to astronomical variations in the declination of the earth's polar axis from the axis of the ecliptic or apparent circle of the sun's oblique path round the earth. Whatever may have been the cause of this amazing series of events, usually called the Glacial Epoch, which covered our part of the world, as we can see by the plainest marks, with sliding glaciers and floating icebergs, big enough to remove mountains and to scoop out basins for lakes, or valleys for the flow of rivers, cutting and grinding the hardest primeval rocks, there is reason to believe that a few species of the larger beasts survived the stern ordeal, fitting themselves with a good thick hairy or woolly coat to endure the more than Arctic rigours of its awful climate.

"Immense numbers of teeth and tusks of the mammoth," says Jukes's Manual of Geology, "are found in Siberia, and complete beds of them in Escholtz Bay, on the north coast of America. The whole carcass of the animal has actually been recovered from a frozen cliff in Siberia, and was found to be coated with long coarse hair, forming a shaggy mane about the neck, underneath which was a woolly coat, evidently a defence against the severity of a cold climate, and showing that, unlike our modern elephants, the animal was not tropical, but Arctic. Its tusks are largely exported from Siberia to be used as ivory, and some found in England have been thus used. They were longer and more incurved than those of either of the existing elephants, some of the tusks measuring ten feet in length; while the transverse plates of the teeth were closer and narrower than in the Asiatic elephant, and very different, therefore, from the African, in which the plates of enamel form lozenges on the upper surface. At Escholtz Bay the cliffs are said to be either ice, or coated with ice; and on the top of them, embedded in, and partly covered by, the boggy or sandy soil, are numberless bones that have lost but little of their animal matter, hair being dug up with them, and the whole island having a charnel-house smell. It is said that in Siberia, not many years ago, the partly-decomposed flesh of a mammoth, which had lain many thousands of years imbedded in the ice, supplied a dinner to some half-starved and half-savage men of that forlorn country; but we doubt the truth of this story.

A quantity of Siberian mammoth tusks, imported by the ship Durham, from Revel, in the Baltic, has been on view during the last fortnight, upon the floor of the ivory storehouse at the London Docks; and we have thought this curiosity worthy of a sketch, and of the illustration here engraved. The largest tusk weighs 201 lb., its length being 10 ft. 6 in.; but it has evidently been longer. The diameter of the tusks at their base is 6 in. to 8 in. on the average. Their ivory is not equal in quality to that of the elephant, and some of it is much decayed by time. The best tusks, however, should be worth £60 or £70 per cwt., and the whole lot is valued at £50,000 to £60,000. There was a sale of seventeen tons of it on Tuesday, by public auction.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN AUGUST.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The Moon is near Mars on the 1st; she is to the right of Saturn during the night of the 6th, and to the left on the night of the 7th. She is near Venus during the morning hours of the 19th, and near Mercury on the 21st; in the vicinity of Jupiter on the 23rd; and on the 30th in the evening the Moon follows and is situated to the left of Mars. Her phases or times of change are:—

First Quarter on the	1st at 29 minutes after 2h. in the afternoon.
Full Moon	8th " 52 " 1 " afternoon.
Last Quarter	15th " 41 " 4 " morning.
New Moon	23rd " 30 " 1 " morning.
First Quarter	31st " 48 " 3 " morning.

She is nearest to the Earth on the morning of the 9th, and most distant from it on the morning of the 24th.

MERCURY at the beginning of the month sets a little after the Sun, and then in daylight till the end of the month. He rises after the Sun at the beginning of the month, and before him from about the middle of the month. On the morning of the 18th he rises at 4h. 18m., or little more than 30m. before the Sun; on the 23rd at 3h. 46m., or nearly 1h. 15m. preceding the Sun; and on the 28th at 3h. 29m., or 1h. 38m. before sunrise. The planet is therefore favourably situated for observation before sunrise towards the end of the month. He is in inferior conjunction with the Sun on the 13th, in conjunction with the Moon on the 21st, stationary among the stars on the 22nd, at his greatest western elongation (18 deg. 8 min.) on the same day, and in his ascending node on the 31st.

VENUS is a morning star, rising on the 1st at about 1h. a.m.; on the 17th at 1h. 6m., or 3h. 43m. before the Sun; and on the last day at 1h. 27m. She is in conjunction with the Moon on the morning of the 19th.

MARS is an evening star, setting on the 5th at 10h. 20m. p.m., or 2h. 40m. after sunset; this interval decreases day by day; on the 20th he sets at 9h. 41m. p.m., or 2h. 30m. after the Sun; and on the 30th at 9h. 16m. p.m., or 2h. 25m. after the Sun. He is in conjunction with the Moon on the 1st and 30th. He is due south on the 15th at 5h. 38m. p.m.

JUPITER sets on the 2nd at 8h. 42m. p.m.; on the 17th at 7h. 49m. p.m.; on the 27th at 7h. 13m. p.m., or 16m. after sunset; and on the last day at 6h. 59m. p.m., or 11m. after the Sun. He is therefore badly situated for observation. He is due south at 1h. 37m. p.m. on the 15th, and at 0h. 13m. p.m. on the last day. He is in conjunction with the Moon on the 23rd.

SATURN sets on the 1st day at 3h. 35m. a.m.; on the 11th at 2h. 52m. a.m., or 1h. 49m. before the Sun rises, which interval rapidly increases to 2h. 45m. by the 21st, and to 3h. 50m. by the last day, the planet rising on this day at 1h. 27m. a.m.; and the planet is visible throughout the night till these times; and passes the meridian, or is due south, at 10h. 43m. p.m. on the 10th, at 10h. 1m. p.m. on the 20th, and at 9h. 15m. p.m. on the last day. He is in conjunction with the Moon on the 7th.

On Sunday the Rev. Dr. Power was consecrated Roman Catholic Bishop of Waterford, in succession to the late Dr. O'Brien.

The annual report of the receipts and expenditure of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, from Midsummer Day, 1872, to Midsummer Day, 1873, has been issued, from which it appears that the income of the college from all sources during the year was £13,311; the disbursements over the same period was £12,276.

The thirty-ninth annual report of the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland has been issued. From this it appears that, on Dec. 31, 1871, there were 6914 schools in operation, which had on their rolls, for the year then ended, 1,021,700 children, with an average daily attendance, for the same period, of 363,850. At the close of the year 1872, the number of schools in operation was 7050. The total number of children on the rolls within the year was 1,010,148, and the average daily attendance of children for the year was 355,821. There has been, therefore, a decrease of 11,552 on the rolls, and of 8029 in the average daily attendance. There were forty vested schools opened during the year, towards the erection of which grants have been made. There was also one suspended school reopened, and three struck-off schools were restored to our roll. These are included in the 7050 schools in operation on Dec. 31, 1872. The number of applications for grants to new schools in the year 1871 was 264. To 182 of these was promised the required assistance, either for building or for salaries and requisites. At the termination of the year 1872 the Commissioners had on their list, vested either in trustees or in the board or secured by bond, 1344 school-houses, containing 2044 rooms, accommodating distinct schools. The number of these schools vested in trustees was 1145, the number vested in the board in its corporate capacity (including 146 assigned) was 804, the number for which they held bonds for the observance of rules was ninety-five.

THE VIENNA EXHIBITION.

Vienna, Monday, July 21.

The Indian Gallery ranks deservedly as one of the principal curiosities of the Vienna Exhibition. Many of the objects displayed may be familiar to those who have visited our London Indian Museum; but, as they form only an insignificant proportion of the thousands who daily frequent the Palace in the Prater, to the great majority the sight is both novel and strange. Right at the end of the British department, and separating it from its neighbour, France, stands a cunningly-devised trophy, formed of tall masts tipped with gold, from which hang Indian carpets of wonderful harmony of colour and design. Within several glass cases are disposed, in the centre one of which (somewhat inappropriately ornamented with slender Grecian columns) is the figure of a rajah belonging to one of the North-West Provinces, clad in cloth of gold, and seated, cross-legged, on a magnificent green velvet gold-embroidered carpet, with the mouthpiece of a superb hookah between his lips. Behind him are a couple of elaborate fans, made of peacocks' feathers, and arranged around are some quaint-looking chairs and a wonderful couch, the elaborate carved woodwork of the back of which is most delicately executed. On surrounding glass stands, the numerous boxes, writing-desks, and caskets of ivory and sandal-wood, and rare articles of virtu from our great Asiatic empire are displayed. At each corner of this central case, around which gaping Bohemian and Hungarian peasants continually crowd, are small glass kiosks ornamented in the Indian style, two of which contain specimens of textile fabrics—cotton, woollen, and silk; the others being reserved for a splendid show of ancient Indian weapons of almost every description. Here are swords, daggers, and shields from the Punjab, scimitars from Kutch, battle-axes from Dharwar and Khond, Moplah knives from Calicut, spearheads from Arnachellam, bows and arrows, such as are used by the Bheels, from Indore; together with a suite of chain-armour such as the warlike followers of the Great Moguls were accustomed to wear in days of old. In another glass case, half hidden by the drooping carpets, which throw a pleasant and not inappropriate shadow over all these varied curiosities, the antiquary will find an interesting collection of primitive stone implements, found in the valley of the Malpata, in the South Mahratta country. Right round this trophy outside hang photographs of the antiquities and scenery of India, exhibited by Captain Ross Thomson; and on the left-hand side are ranged various Græco-Buddhist, Indo-Scythic, and ancient Hindoo statues and fragments, contributed by Dr. Leitner, and including a very fine bronze statue of Buddha.

One of the most curious and novel displays in the adjoining transverse gallery is that of Colonel Michael, who exhibits a collection of hunting trophies accumulated by him during many years' residence in India, and including a gigantic elephant's tusk, a footstool formed of an elephant's foot, the splendid skin of a ferocious "man-eater" killed by the Colonel as long ago as 1856, and a letter-box made of the skull of the same animal, who is condemned henceforth to limit his appetite to note-paper and envelopes. There are, besides, a tiger-skull in-stand, various skulls and horns mounted on shields, and some very pretty jungle-fowl hand-screens.

Scattered around are cases containing specimens of the textile fabrics of India, including silken turban cloths from Madura and Benares, saris and cholis from Tanjore, kummerbunds and goolbaddans from Azingurb, with various silk scarfs and handkerchiefs from Central Asia, of which Dr. Leitner, of Lahore, is the exhibitor. Then there are shawls and rare cloths of pashm and woollen thread from the half-mythical land of Cashmere, hearth-rugs from Lahore, chintz from Nynsook, and dhotis, packadis, and muslin from Coimbatore and Madura. Next come mats, baskets, punkahs, and cheap fans of palm-leaf, straw, and reed, from Ganjam, Palghaut, and Midnapore; and then one arrives in front of the cases where the gold and silver cloths and embroideries are displayed. Some of the articles of apparel exhibited here are of the most fantastical shapes, and all of them—saltees, mushroos, kemroos, khuns, veils, and caps alike—are most profusely ornamented. As for the tablecloths and cushion-covers exhibited by the Rao of Kutch and other potentates, the original material is scarcely discernible beneath the mass of silk and gold and silver embroidery. The Thakoor of Bhowuggur exhibits some native saddles ornamented in admirable taste, the shapes of which remind one of those used by Arab horsemen. Embroidered girdles, head-dresses, sandals, and shoes, moreover abound.

The jewellery and general gold and silver smith's work are remarkably fine. In these, as in embroidery, the Indian craftsmen invariably excel. Nothing, for instance, could be more delicate and at the same time more rich than the steel card-trays, jewel caskets, candlesticks, and paper-knives, inlaid with gold, which are exhibited by several towns of the Punjab. This inlaying, known as koft-gari work, has also been applied to weapons, such as swords, daggers, scimitars, and shields, and, although exceedingly difficult, is most successfully executed by the Indian workmen. Among the articles of jewellery exhibited are a superb gold armlet set with diamonds, some beautiful head ornaments from Dharwar, a very fine sathlasa formed of pearls and brilliants, and a Urupsee necklet composed of sixty-eight very large pear-shaped pearls of the most exquisite colour. Then there is a most beautiful necklace of diamonds, pearls, and rubies, formerly the property of the celebrated Runjeet Singh, and a crystal looking-glass, the gold frame and back of which are set with jade and rubies, also the property of that prince, to whom it was presented by one of the Ameeris of Cabul. Next there are several sets of ornaments such as are worn by the natives of Bengal, and contributed to the Vienna Exhibition by the late Baron Dowleas; also numerous earrings, and forehead and nose ornaments, from different parts of our Indian empire. Dr. Leitner, too, shows some splendid hookahs of gold and silver, beautifully chased, and sometimes adorned with precious stones. The few articles of cutlery that are exhibited are of a very low order of merit; but some of the brass drinking and cooking vessels have a very original appearance. As for the various carved and inlaid articles of ivory, horn, and sandal-wood, they have reached the highest possible point of perfection. The designs are, at the same time, of the most tasteful and most elaborate description, and the execution is surpassingly delicate. The European workman could with difficulty attain to such a high standard of excellence. The great majority of these articles—which comprise desks, paper-knives and weights, card-cases and workboxes of buffalo-horn, ivory, and sandal-wood, from Vizagapatam, Travancore, Shemoga, and Canara—have been sold. There are also some charming inlaid rosewood caskets from Mysore, a curious sandal-wood necklet from Madras, an elaborate pipe-stem of Yarkandi jade, and a chousar or diceboard made of beads, with the nineteen fantastical pieces used in playing the popular Hindoo game of Pasa.

Turning away from subjects of this class to examine the toys and models, one is agreeably surprised at the skilfully and minutely executed figures of natives at work, animals, bullock-carriages, and palanquins sent from Nursapore, Belgaum, Poonah, &c. The different castes and races are represented in miniature, it is true, but with striking fidelity, enabling the visitor to form a correct idea of the personal appearance of our Asiatic brethren. Some of the most curious of these little manikins are from Baroda, and are ingeniously made of glazed horn. The Chennapatam toys are primitive and fantastical, as are the playing-cards exhibited from Kurnool and Sawuntwaree. The Prince of Travancore has an interesting show of ancient surgical instruments, which, it is said, throw considerable light upon the history of surgery in India; and he also displays some curious musical instruments from his own province. Then there are Cashmere guitars, Yarkandi flutes, Mysore "vinés," and various instruments used by the Bheels at their grand religious festivals. Dr. Leitner, of Lahore, who is a very extensive exhibitor, displays close at hand a superb and instructive collection of ancient Hindoo coins, which comprises not less than a thousand specimens.

Ranged against the wall, on the left-hand side, will be found all manner of raw produce, mineral ores and metals, salt, sulphur, and chalk, flax, hemp, and various native fibres, raw silk and cocoons, hides, feathers, and wool. Then there are samples of tea, coffee, and rice, spices, condiments, dried fruits, &c., from almost every province. The Government of Bombay contributes the valuable collection relating to the production and manufacture of cotton in India which figured in the London Exhibition of 1872, and which has been sent to Vienna at the request of the Austrian Government, preferred through Baron Max Kubeck. Chemical and pharmaceutical products follow, and then come samples of flour, sugar, spirits, vinegars, preserves, extracts, and tobacco.

Round the gallery and over some of the lower stalls will be found a series of sketches of the craftsmen of North-Western India, and of cotton cultivation in Western India, executed by J. S. Kipling, and belonging to the India Museum. The same establishment contributes a selection of 132 photographs from the work entitled "The People of India," prepared by Dr. Forbes Watson and Sir John Kaye, and some primitive paintings in oil and water colours, illustrating certain of the native festivals, and depicting different trades and conveyances. A large number of photographs of Indian scenery are hung in various parts of the gallery.

SKETCHES IN VIENNA.

A topographical description of the city and suburbs was given with our panoramic view, which appeared at the time of opening the Universal Exhibition there in May; and it has been followed by one or two illustrations of street scenes and public buildings. We now present one of the Aspernbrücke, the bridge named after the battle-field of Aspern, not far from Wagram in the Marzfeld, on the other side of the Danube, where a conflict took place, in the wars of the first Napoleon, between the French and Austrian armies. This bridge stands over the Danube canal, an artificial arm of the Danube, which separates the inner or central town of Vienna from the suburb of Leopoldstadt; at the inner city end it abuts on the Franz Josef's Quay, at the extremity of the Stuben-Ring, one of the series of Boulevards which form, with the Quay above-named, a complete belt, two or three miles in circumference, around the inner city. There are statues on the bridge, of no great merit, by the sculptor Melnitzky. We must here commend to English tourists, who may intend to visit the Austrian capital during the Exhibition of this year, a little "Handy-book to Vienna," by Bucher and Weiss, which Mr. Griffin has translated from the German; it is published at Vienna by Messrs. Faesy and Frick, and by Messrs. Longman and Co. in London. The English is rather queer, but the information seems to be correct and well arranged.

A variety of types of the Viennese population and social life is represented in the sketches on another page. From its proximity to the East, Vienna, perhaps, offers to the gaze of a stranger a greater variety of singular costumes than any of the more western European capitals. Of these, one of the most picturesque is unquestionably that of the Bohemian nursemaid, who, short of stature and of full figure, invariably exhibits herself in high riding-boots, and displays a strong partiality for gay colours in her attire. Her long clean white apron is generally bordered with lace, and one end of the gorgeous kerchief that is wound round her head, turban fashion, hangs in a point half way down her back. Other strange-looking individuals are the Slovaks, hulking fellows in coarse white flannel overcoats with large capes, usually with wallets slung at their backs, and some bit of cheap finery commonly entwined round their billycock hats. These, with the women, appear to do most of the rough work of the city. One specialty of theirs is the cleaning of the streets, a task which they accomplish, like all the rest of their work, in a provoking leisurely fashion, each appearing to vie with the other as to who shall perform the least amount of labour in the longest space of time.

Vienna is overrun with an army of commissionaires, expressmen, Stadt-couriers, and Dienstmann-tragers, groups of whom, stylishly attired in buff or gray, with bright scarlet or orange collars, shoulder-straps, and cuffs, and with bright metal bands, buttons, and badges, are to be encountered at every street corner, usually loitering against the wall, smoking, and discussing the news of the day, as though their lives were passed in enforced idleness. These men carry burdens, run on errands, and deliver letters for a fee of from 10 to 50 kreutzers, according to weight and distance. On being engaged they are bound to furnish their employer with a ticket bearing the same number as their badge, together with the amount received for the job they have been hired to perform. The Vienna policeman, with his cutlass swinging at his side, has quite a soldierly air, and looks uncommonly smart in his green and claret coloured uniform, with his number on a bright brass crescent-shaped badge, which he wears, like some heraldic collar, round his neck. On gala days and other important occasions he exchanges the kepi he commonly wears for a low Alpine hat, ornamented with a gold cord and tassel, which gives him a still more magnificent appearance, and it would excite the envy of Policeman X to contemplate his Vienna confrère on such occasions.

On these same gala days, which are somewhat numerous in the Austrian capital, the number of private coachmen which one observes decked out in the gayest of liveries, heavily weighted with gold lace, is really quite remarkable. It is not the same, however, with the Fiacker-kutscher, whose personal appearance is ordinarily about on a par with that of our own cabmen. There are, however, degrees among them, and the better class dress quite as well as the drivers of hired London broughams. Their vehicles are the best of their kind in Europe—light and clean, provided with indiarubber whistles, with which to signal to the driver, and with tiny mirrors, enabling the Viennese belles to arrange their accreche-coeurs and the beaux to give the requisite killing twirl to their moustaches; added to which the pair-horse vehicles go at a pace that the most reckless hansom-cab driver rarely exceeds. The Viennatramways are a distinctive feature of the Austrian capital, and, encircling the inner city as they do, form a convenient means of communication between one suburb and another. There is no limit, however, to overcrowding, and when the seats are all occupied people stand wherever they can find a few inches' space or secure a footing, and pack themselves as closely as sardines in a box. The street in Vienna is always either mud or dust—there is no medium—so that when the weather is dry the tramway-driver is constrained to protect his eyes, when driving in face of a strong wind, with goggles, which, however advantageous they may be, scarcely improve his personal appearance. A distinctive Viennese type is the small waiter, usually an urchin of ten or twelve, in a long-tail coat, who exhibits an amount of proficiency in balancing many mugs of beer, and managing to entwine his fingers round all the handles, that would do credit to a professional juggler.

The universal style of head-dress prevalent among the poorer class of women in Vienna is either a handkerchief or else a shawl, the snow-white cap which the poorest Parisienne prides herself upon being never by any chance seen; besides which, bare legs and feet are by no means rare among the softer sex in the Austrian capital. Monks and friars, not scantily clad and barefooted, as of old, but comfortably shod, well-covered, and provided with warm capes and umbrellas, are by no means rare in the streets of Vienna. Like the majority of Austrian officials, the letter-carrier has a marked military look about him; while, as for the drivers of the mail-carts, they recall in a measure the postilion of the last century, which the melodrama and comic opera of the French stage have rendered familiar to mind. The Hausmeister, or porter, who lets you in when you return to roost after St. Stephen's has tolled ten, at which hour all the doors of private houses are double-locked, exacts from you a fee varying from 10 to 15 kreutzers, according to the hour at which you have broken his rest and the nature of your own disposition.

The Viennese shop-girl is generally piquantly, if not stylishly, attired, and commonly wears a pretty scalloped apron, with a chignon surpassing in size any ever seen either in Paris or London. Dealers in false hair drive a prosperous trade in Vienna, where the commonest servant-girl would not think of putting her head out of window unless she could display an abundant chignon with curls and ringlets en suite to the passers-by. On the other hand, she thinks nothing of walking about without stockings, and not unfrequently with perfectly bare feet. The Jewish lady with the bandeau is an exception to this rule. She has just arrived from Galicia, and wears the coiffure generally adopted by the Jewesses of that province. By the side of the important-looking tall Suisse who is to be found in full livery standing of an afternoon and evening under the portecochères of the great mansions on the Ring, there is one of her compatriots, with his long coat and corkscrew ringlets, the like of whom is frequently to be met hovering round the Bourse. Within a month after his first appearance in Vienna he will have cut his beard, combed out his ringlets, and put on civilised attire; and in another six weeks will most likely be driving down the Haupt-allée in his carriage and pair, director of a new bubble company. The young lady at the Trinkhalle affords another striking instance of the great development of the trade in false hair in Vienna. That chignon, mein Fraulein, has, undoubtedly, been brought of the Haarkräuser round the corner, who announces Friseur und Rasir für Damen und Herren in large gold letters. Observe, too, the coquettish way in which the front hair is cut and allowed to droop over the forehead, and the piquant manner in which the dainty fichu is arranged. These Trinkhalles are almost all situated on the Ring, and in this hot summer weather are, doubtless, a great boon to promenaders, who object to be perpetually imbibing Pilsner or lager beer, and resort to the refreshing syrups which this young lady dispenses. In the group above we have specimens of the Viennese carter and his steed, the latter wearing a picturesque but weighty leather collar, bedecked with brass ornaments with Oriental profusion. Then there is the cavalry officer in spectacles, with protruding under lip and moustache, and whiskers à la Franz Joseph—a type of the Austrian military man, although just now the mutton-chop shaped cheek appendage is in some degree superseded in the service by a short beard, cut so as not to hide the gold or silver stars worked in the collar, which indicate the military rank.

But few dogs are to be seen running about in the Vienna streets, for, like the pig once observed on the banks of the Danube, they are kept in harness all day long, being employed in drawing about little, but often very heavily-laden, carts. It is a common thing to see one of these large, sturdy animals harnessed on one side of the shaft, while on the other is a lad, and not unfrequently a woman—the pair toiling along with a load quite as heavy as many a Viennese horse has to draw. The subject of the little children going to school speaks for itself; so we will pass at once to the dandy, who is to be met in perfection, unless he has gone for carriage exercise to the Prater, sauntering up and down the Graben or the Kärnthner Ring, while many a smart uniform and many a jaunty little bonnet pass to and fro. He fondly imagines himself to be dressed out in the "Englische mode," and, escorted by his dog, whom he shears in the fashionable style, with a gigantic meerscham pipe between his lips, and with a cane, which he carries handle downwards in his yellow-gloved hand, passes along with as conceited an air as if he were the Lord of Creation.

The ambulating Jewish hawkers constitute one of the greatest nuisances of Vienna. They principally frequent the hotels, cafés, and restaurants of the Praterstrasse and Taborstrasse, but do not at times disdain those of the Ring. These descendants of Abraham offer cheap jewellery, purses, knives, pipes, and cigar-holders to the customers thronging these establishments, and pester them to purchase one or another of their wares. They generally have a bland but cunning smile upon their features, and pay but little attention to the epithets to which bothered customers give vent when, one after another, they exhibit them their wares and importune them to buy such "a nice black necktie" or such "charming sleeve-links" for the trifle of fifty kreutzers.

A movement has been set on foot among the mayors of England for entertaining the Lord Mayor of London in the Guildhall at York, as a recognition of his Lordship's hospitality and generally high character.

The Scotch Fishery Board has issued its report for 1872. The number of boats employed during the year is stated to have been 15,232, manned by 46,178 fishermen, and the value of the total catch £997,293. The east-coast fisheries generally show expansion and development, while there was a falling off in those of the west coast in 1872.

The regulation respecting letters containing coin is extended by an order of the Postmaster-General—which will take effect on Aug. 1—to all inland letters and packets, not duly tendered for registration, which unquestionably contain bank-notes, postage stamps, jewellery, or watches. Any such letters will therefore be subject to a double registration-fee of 8d.

Numerous candidates aspire to the representation of Greenwich. Sir John Bennett has issued his address as an Independent Liberal. A meeting was held at Lichfield, yesterday week, at which Mr. S. C. Allsopp, of Burton-on-Trent, was selected as the Conservative candidate for East Staffordshire. Mr. Jaffray, the Liberal candidate, has issued his address.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The first performance this season of "L'Etoile du Nord," yesterday (Friday) week, occurred too late for notice until now. The cast was, in all essential respects, the same as that of last year, including the all-important features of Madame Patti's Caterina and M. Faure's Pietro, each of which was characterised by all the excellence of past occasions. Again the prima donna was seen and heard in one of her best characters. The charm and brilliancy of her singing have probably never been more admirably manifested than on this occasion; among the many instances of which may be cited her exquisite delivery of the quaint couplets "Il Cappel" and the characteristic gipsy rondo, the pathos with which the prayer at the close of the first act was given, the alternate vivacity and despair in the music of the camp-scene, and the dazzling climax afforded by the wondrous execution of the final bravura with two flutes obbligati. M. Faure's Peter was another repetition of an excellent performance, both in singing and acting, particularly in the tent-scene, in which the drinking-song was a special feature, another having been the delivery of the romance "O lieti di" in the last act. The cast was almost identical in other respects with that of former occasions—having included Madame Sinico as Prascovia, Signor Bettini as Danilowitz, Signor Ciampi as Gritzenko; other parts having been filled by Mdle. Sassi, Madame Démerie-Lablache, and Signori Edardi, Capponi, Tagliafico, Raguer, Manfredi, and Rossi.

The scenic and stage arrangements, especially in the camp-scene, were again characterised by that elaborate splendour which is peculiar to this theatre; and the performance throughout was one of the most complete and satisfactory of the season.

The performances of this week, with which the season terminates, have consisted of "Les Huguenots," on Monday; "Un Ballo in Maschera," on Tuesday; a miscellaneous evening concert, on Wednesday; "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," on Thursday; "Lucia di Lammermoor" having been announced for last night, and "L'Etoile du Nord" for to-night (Saturday).

The opera of Tuesday brought forward another of the new singers promised in Mr. Gye's prospectus, Mdle. Pezzotta, whose performance as Amelia displayed considerable musical intelligence and dramatic perception, especially in the scene at the commencement of the third act, in which the lady was much and deservedly applauded. Some excess of tremolo was doubtless owing to the nervousness of a first appearance. The cast of the opera in other respects was the same as that of a recent occasion.

It was on April 1 that Mr. Gye commenced his season of 1873, which has not been a very eventful one as regards the production of works, and is chiefly remarkable for having brought forward a larger number of new singers than usual. Of these, several will doubtless be heard here again, with a renewal of the success which they deservedly obtained, Signor Pavanini and M. Maurel being among the most important of recent acquisitions. Others, of more or less merit, who joined the company this year, whose names are not incidentally mentioned above, were Madame Paoli, Mdles. D'Angeri, Fossa, and Trisolini, and Signori Montanaro and Nannetti.

Most of the established favourites of past seasons have reappeared. Some are named in the preceding portion of this notice; others are Mdles. Albani and Scacchi, Madame Monbelli, and Signori Nicolini, Cotogni, Graziani, and Bagagiolo. The débutantes of last year, Mesdames Saar and Smeroschi, were also heard again, as were (in subordinate characters) several who have been longer associated with the establishment—Mdle. Corsi, Madame Dell' Anese, and Signori Marino and Fallar.

One great artist and popular favourite, however—Madame Lucca—whose name appears in the prospectus, did not return, and her absence was occasionally felt as a loss in romantic and tragic opera.

As at the Drury-Lane establishment, several works promised have not been produced, owing, doubtless, here, as there, to contingencies which were not evident when the prospectus was issued. Neither the production of Puccini's new opera, "I Promessi Sposi," nor the revival of Verdi's "Louisa Miller" and Rossini's "Mosè" has taken place. Against this, however, we have to set the facts of the fulfilment of the promised performances of Verdi's "Ernani," and of a version of Auber's "Les Diamans de la Couronne," both for the first time in the Royal Italian opera-house.

Signor Vianesi has fulfilled the larger share of the duties of conductor and musical director, Signor Beviniani having occasionally officiated in those capacities. The scenic and stage arrangements have continued to display that exceptional splendour and completeness which were owing to the long supervision of the late Mr. Augustus Harris, whose death, a few weeks after the opening night, attaches a melancholy remembrance to the season of 1873.

Italian opera at both our London establishments is now over for a while; and the next prominent musical event will be the commencement of promenade concerts at Covent Garden Theatre, on Aug. 16, under the direction of M. Rivière.

This year's summer concerts at the Crystal Palace—suspended during the continuance of the national music meetings there—were resumed on Saturday last, when the sixth of the series took place, and included various interesting, although familiar, performances by some of the principal artists of her Majesty's Opera and the Crystal Palace band and choir, conducted by Mr. Manns.

Of the annual concert of the students of the Royal Academy of Music—held to-day (Saturday)—we must speak next week.

The detailed programme of the Hereford festival (just issued) shows that the performances will commence on Sept. 9, with "Elijah"; the next morning's performance being devoted to Handel's "Jephthah" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater," also to be given in the cathedral; where, on the same evening, "St. Paul" is to be performed. On Thursday morning Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley's new oratorio, "Hagar," is to be produced, followed by a portion of Spohr's symphony, "Die Weihe der Töne," the same composer's cantata, "The Christian's Prayer," and Handel's Chandos Anthem, "O praise the Lord with one consent." Friday morning will be, as usual, devoted to a performance of "The Messiah." Miscellaneous evening concerts, with orchestra, will be given in the Shirehall on Tuesday and Thursday, and a supplemental chamber concert on Friday evening. The principal singers engaged are Mdles. Titiens and Bartkowska, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Misses E. Wynne and Enriquez, Mr. Cummings, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. M. Smith, Mr. Santley, and Signor Agnesi. Mr. Townshend Smith, organist of Hereford Cathedral, will conduct, as usual.

At a meeting of the committee of the Birmingham Triennial Musical Festival, held at the Midland Institute, on Tuesday, a report of the Orchestral Committee was presented, in which it was stated that the arrangements for the forthcoming festival were progressing favourably, and that the following artists had been engaged:—Soprani, Mdle. Titiens, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, and Mdle. Albani; contralti, Madame Patey and Madame Trebelli-Bettini; tenori, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. W. H. Cummings; bassi, Mr. Santley and Signor Foli.

THEATRES.

The benefit on Saturday at the Lyceum of Mr. Henry Irving was such as to show the estimation in which that gentleman is held by the theatrical public. The house was a bumper, and his reappearance as Mathias in "The Bells" was hailed with acclamation. Nor was his reception as Charles I. less demonstrative. Such, indeed, was the enthusiasm that the favourite actor was summoned seven times before the curtain. At last, he had to address the audience, which he did in a brief and appropriate speech. We may now regard the reputation of Mr. Irving as fixed, and we hope that it may be used for the elevation of the drama as well as for his own profit.

Having entered upon a second lease of Drury-lane Theatre, Mr. F. B. Chatterton has resolved to open the season on Sept. 20, when "Antony and Cleopatra" will be produced, in an abridged form, as a grand spectacular play. The magnificent scenes with which it is his purpose to illustrate the play will employ the pencil of that eminent artist Mr. William Beverley, and will comprise a View of Ancient Rome, with a grand celebration in honour of Antony and Octavia; the Naval Battle of Actium, between the Roman and Egyptian Gallies; the Temple of Isis; and a realisation of the gorgeous spectacle of Cleopatra in her Barge.

The annual general meeting of the proprietors of the Theatre Royal, Drury-lane, was held, last Saturday, in the saloon of the theatre—Mr. Arden in the chair. Mr. Fladgate, the secretary, read the report of the committee, which stated that, the old lease granted to Mr. Chatterton having expired, the covenants in the lease had been revised, and a new lease had been granted to him for a period of five years, at an annual rental of £6500. The total income for the past year, including the balance of £1170 and £5000 for rent, had been £8583 2s.; and the total expenditure, including the payment of £2600 to the trustees of the new renters and £1366 for four quarters' rent to the Duke of Bedford, amounted to £7055. Mr. Marsh Nelson, architect of the theatre, then read his report, which, having reference to the generally satisfactory condition of the building, detailed at some length the precautions which had been taken against fire. Sir George Armytage moved the adoption of the reports, and Captain Thorpe seconded the resolution, which, after some remarks in support from Sir Mordaunt Wells, was unanimously adopted. Sir G. Armytage, Mr. Lawrie, Sir E. Taylor, Mr. Pyefinch, Sir Mordaunt Wells, and Mr. Hicks were then elected as members of the general committee.

Mr. Tom Taylor has constructed a new play on the story of Arkwright, the inventor of the spinning-jenny, which has been acted at Leeds and Manchester with success. The accounts which have reached us of its merits are highly favourable.

We can speak well of "the great American lecturer," as Mr. Hardy Gillard delights to call himself, who is now exhibiting a remarkable panorama at the St. James's Great Hall, representing the Great Pacific Railway from New York to California. These three greatnesses have each specialties which might furnish our readers with an extra column, had we space to dilate on their characteristics and their history. The railway, we may mention, is a really wonderful work, and one which will exercise much influence on the traffic with China and Japan. It takes the traveller through an immense variety of regions, and surmounts innumerable perils; through places where there are eternal snows, exceeding high mountains, terrible precipices, and extinct volcanoes; including colossal tunnels and the Falls of Niagara, together with an enormous suspension bridge, where the trains are only permitted to travel at the rate of two miles an hour. The grandeur of the scenes passes description. It starts from New York and reaches beyond the gold districts of the Sierra Nevada. The railway has been the product of two companies, and owes much of its success to the late President Lincoln. The lecturer is an able expositor of the mighty work which he exhibits and of the route through which it leads. Both are astounding, and calculated to enlarge the ideas of the spectator.

The Philharmonic is, it appears, to be placed under the direction of Mr. Shepherd, late of the Surrey. It will be reopened at the latter end of September, previous to which it will be redecorated and the arrangements for the convenience of the public improved.

The Moore and Burgess Minstrels are doing well at the Standard, where early in August Miss Bancroft and her company commence a short engagement.

The foundation-stone of an archaeological hall for Alloa, Scotland, was laid on Thursday week.

The Right Hon. G. W. Hunt, M.P., on Thursday week, took part in the ceremony of opening a new cattle market and leather exhibition at Northampton.

The Select Committee on locomotives on roads has reported generally in favour of allowing locomotives to be used on roads, and of relaxing the existing restrictions upon their employment.

Mr. W. S. Allen, M.P. for Newcastle-under-Lyme, preached twice on Sunday at the opening of a new Wesleyan chapel at Devonshire Park, Buxton.

A supplementary Civil Service Estimate for £386,000 has been issued. Amongst the items is a sum of £7000 which is required to meet a portion of the expenses incurred in connection with the visit of the Shah of Persia.

Yesterday week the troops at Aldershot paraded for a sham fight. The attacking force was under the command of Sir Hope Grant, while the defending force was commanded by Major-General Herbert.

The Gazette notifies the approval of M. Lenglet as French Consul-General in London; M. Bellaigue de Burgas as French Consul at Newcastle; and Mr. William H. Shortt as American Consul at Cardiff.

At a meeting, on Thursday week, of the committee of the Yorkshire College of Science, it was resolved to appoint a committee to prepare a provisional scheme for establishing a professorship of textile fabrics, in accordance with the proposal of the Clothworkers' Company.

The inquest on the late Bishop of Winchester was held on Monday, at Abinger Hall, to which the body had been removed after the accident. Lord Granville and his groom, George Sheard, the only eye-witnesses of the unhappy occurrence, stated that the horse was going at a very slow canter—six or seven miles an hour—and that he had never stumbled before. Mr. Furnivall, the surgeon who had been called in on Saturday night, deposed that the cause of death was dislocation of the neck. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

THE KING OF ASHANTEE AND HIS EXECUTORS.

BY THE WAY.

Summer has come upon us with a panther bound, and it is difficult to say whether those who are prostrated are more to be envied than those who are irritated. Happiest is the man who owes no duties to anybody but himself, and discharges his single obligation sub tegmine fagi with a book dull enough to allow him to take study mildly, and, it may be, with some cooled creature-comfort within reach. But such ease is allotted to but few. London, as yet, is by no means "a place where it is always afternoon" for the Lotophagi. Society sternly summons its votaries to the hot dinner and the crowded "evening." But the end is at hand, Mr. Gladstone permits us to count the remaining days of the Session, and to-night is the last opera performance. Visions of weed-hung rocks come upon the mind, and the sea-splash is heard in dreams. The weather is too hot for any particular display of gushing philanthropy, but in a general way we all feel good-naturedly towards one another, except when any sort of exertion is required; and we are ready to hope, without taking much pains to express our hope, that the season has been reasonably satisfactory to everybody in whom we profess any interest. Government have not done anything exciting, for which we tender them sincere thanks. Politics have been very gentle, like Horace Walpole's earthquake, that was so tame it might be stroked. Theologians have been uncomfortable, and must be dealt with when the weather permits. The Fine Arts have been stagnant, and we have had no pictures and no music to make talk; and the single great statue of the year is going to India. As for poetry, it is not made now, and no book has come out since "Middlemarch." But the world has gone on very well, and the lists of marriages suggest an enormous quantity of possible domestic happiness. But whether people have succeeded or failed in their social campaign, it is over. "To-morrow to fresh fields and pastures new."

Monsignor Capel is one of the ablest of Catholic divines; and therefore, when he addresses to his hearers an argument which can be called so only by an extraordinary stretch of courtesy, we may assume that he knows his audience, and remembers a text about pearls. In advocating Confession, the other day, he urged that it was practised in England by men of whom we were proud, and that confession had been in use when the Great Charter was extorted from King John. No doubt; and when a good many other things were done which Monsignor Capel would not so highly approve. For instance, it was in use when certain knights were performing a sacrifice in Canterbury Cathedral, one about which Mr. Whalley desires to lecture. It was in use when we lost Normandy, and when we were defeated at Bannockburn, and when we were deprived of all our French conquests, and all through the wars of the Roses, and when a King, who had, no doubt, confessed the same day, sold the sovereignty of France. So that the "noble rite" by no means kept us out of crimes or disgraces. In fact, confession implies that there has been something wrong, for people who are what Donna Julia asserted herself to Don Alfonso to be have small need of confession. There may be arguments in its favour, but we do not think that such an argument as that of Monsignor Capel will add many to the friends of the 480 of Lord Shaftesbury's "priests of Baal" who have asked the Primates to introduce the rite into the Protestant Church.

The Ashantee question may remind "readers of books"—of whom there are, perhaps, fewer than is supposed—that in 1819 Sydney Smith contributed to the Edinburgh Review an interesting, and of course a witty, article on the mission to Ashantee. The paper contains a great deal of information about the country and its inhabitants. The superstition and cruelty of the latter are revolting, and an account which the reviewer extracts of a great funeral at which human sacrifices were offered would be considered almost sensational in an American paper. On the death of the then King's mother he butchered not fewer than 3000 victims, and on his own death the number would be doubled. The funeral rites of a great captain were repeated weekly for three months, and 200 persons were slain each time, or 2400 in all. The mode in which death is inflicted is ghastly, but somewhat more merciful than could be expected. The King was a great fighter, and the clergyman characteristically sums up to this effect:—"Nothing in this world is created in vain. Lions, tigers, conquerors, have their use. A common interest must be created among tribes, and this can only be the result of order, which must be accomplished by a conqueror. We sympathise, therefore, with the victims of the King of Ashantee, and feel ourselves, for the first time, in love with military glory. The ex-Emperor of the French (Napoleon I.) would in Ashantee be an eminent benefactor to the human race."

While we are thinking of our own holidays, we may afford to spare a minute, and perhaps something else, towards the holidays of those whose few enjoyments depend solely on the will and the good nature of others—we mean the poor children of the low neighbourhoods. We believe that there has been a good deal of doubt on the part of the charitable as to whether the right sort of little persons benefit by the subscriptions given for children's holidays. We have reason to assert that such doubt is needless, and that the "day in the fields" is in almost every case afforded to those who would have no earthly chance of breathing fresh air but for their benefactors. We believe, also, that the work is done as frugally as possible, and that thus the greatest number of poor children get their "out." Without urging that any more good is done in this way than the giving extraordinary, almost superhuman, delight to masses of children, we may submit that in a utilitarian age this negation should be a sort of recommendation to folk who desire that children should be children as long as possible. The moral is that a score of appeals are in every day's newspaper, and nobody can go wrong, let him send his sovereign to whichever fund he happens to notice first.

The inferior classes of Dundee seem objectionable. It was only the other day that the servant-girls there were on strike, or something like it, because Scottish mistresses' ideas as to their domestics' duty are a little more rigid than the latter like. Later, we heard that there was a cab strike at Dundee because the authorities insisted on the vehicles bearing a number. That English cab-folk have submitted to this frightful and feudal tyranny without a murmur shows the inferiority of our race and its fitness to be vassals and serfs; but perhaps the Scotch lesson will shame our cabmen into resistance. We own that we do not in the least comprehend the Dundee objection to the numbering, which is the only chance a "fare" has of identifying a carriage whose driver has insulted or cheated him. We cannot suppose that it is desired to remove such a remedy; nor can we suppose that a Scotch cabowner has such a delicate taste in aesthetics that his refined eye revolts against the imaginary spectacle of a number-plate on the back of his cab. In fact, we are wholly in the dark as to the real cause of the revolt; and we are not greatly concerned on the subject. Let Scotland mind her own cabs, which are for the most part far superior to our own. We have plenty to do to keep our London drivers in any sort of order; nor do we wholly succeed. The other night a hansom cab drew up at a club-door, and a gentleman got in. Another hansom-driver fancied that the call had been to him, and he cut across in front of the first, hurting the horse and using foul language. But the traveller was in haste, and drove on. The ruffian followed the first vehicle up Regent-street, still using bad words and occasionally slashing at his rival's horse. Then, when the enraged "fare" suddenly caused a stoppage, and sprang out to take the enemy's number, he lashed his own horse violently and escaped. Had there been largely-painted figures on his cab, he would now be in prison. But perhaps all the drivers in Dundee are virtuous, self-restraining, pious men.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

Our last week's Paper contained two Illustrations, from sketches by naval officers on the spot, of the smart action at Elmina, near Cape Coast Castle, on the 13th ult., when the hostile portion of the town, being in league with the invading Ashantee army, was bombarded and destroyed by the British forces, and the attack of the Ashantees on a position held by some of our Royal Marines, sailors, and negro troops or armed police, was repelled with severe loss to the assailants. We now present an Illustration, from a sketch by Mr. W. Read, engineer of the gun-boat Decoy, showing the boats of the combined squadron off Elmina starting to go up the river Beyah to the town, at half-past four in the morning, under the command of Captain Freemantle, of H.M.S. Barracouta, who shared with Lieutenant-Colonel Festing, of the Royal Marine Artillery, the conduct of this action. The boat flotilla was piloted through the surf of the shore and up the river by an officer who has an accurate knowledge of this coast, Lieutenant-Commander Hext, of the Decoy. It consisted of four paddle-box boats, armed with 20-pounder breech-loading guns on swivels; eight cutters with rocket apparatus, and one cutter with a 7-pounder gun; two pinnaces, with rocket apparatus; five whale-boats, to serve as despatch-boats; and one jolly-boat. The starting signal was given by firing a rocket from the Decoy, as represented in the sketch engraved.

Another Illustration now put before our readers affords a general view of the entire locality, from the sea outside the mouth of the Beyah, up that river beyond the disloyal "King's Quarter" of the town, to the mangrove swamps into which the fugitives escaped, with the boats in the river, opposite the town, throwing in plenty of shot, shell, and rockets. The three vessels anchored outside, which appear behind and to the left hand in this view, are the gun-boat Decoy, the Argus, and the Druid. The Castle of St. George of Elmina, an old Dutch fortress lately ceded to Great Britain, is seen with the Union Jack on its lofty tower flagstaff, upon the shore between the town and the open sea. A few fishermen's huts and canoes lie upon the beach, under the walls of the castle. In the foreground, on a small piece of land joined to the castle and main town of Elmina by a causeway, are the houses of the commercial and friendly part of Elmina, which, of course, did not suffer by the bombardment. The so-called "King's Quarter," or rebellious native town, whose chiefs, it was thought, had traitorously seceded to the King of Ashantee, covers the long strip of ground that extends across the middle of this view, as far as the small redoubt shown behind to the right hand. In the front foreground, on the near side of the water, are the tops of some trees belonging to a sacred fetish-grove. We have to thank Commander Luxmoore, of H.M.S. Argus, for the sketch he has sent us. It shows the commencement of the brief bombardment, at half-past twelve at noon.

The native population of Elmina, the Fantees, and others dwelling on this part of the Gold Coast, are of kindred race with the Ashantee nation, whose formidable kingdom is situated forty or fifty miles inland. Dahomey is the bordering kingdom westward. Some types of this negro race are represented in the two groups of figures drawn from photographs by Mr. J. P. Decker, with which we have been furnished by Mr. J. A. Sketchny, of Whydah. The King of Ashantee sits with the headman at his right hand and the official poisoner at his left; the former has his face whitened to look terrible; the latter bears a bag of deadly drugs. Whether the Fantees and neighbouring tribes should be reckoned as belonging to Ashantee is precisely the question at issue in the present war. The Dutch, till very recently possessing the Castle of Elmina, compromised this question by paying a yearly tribute of £50 to the Ashantee King, as suzerain of that territory, which the British Government has refused to continue; hence the Ashantee invasion of the seaward country, supposed to be more or less under British protection. It is not the first or the second time that a similar conflict has broken out, as it did in 1807, at Annamaboe; again, repeatedly, from 1819 to 1826, including a severe defeat of the British forces under Sir Charles McCarthy, in 1824; and latterly, in 1863, when our troops, sent into the interior by Governor Richard Pine, were forced by the climate and disease to retreat. The kingdom of Ashantee is, perhaps, nearly as large as England and Wales, but much of it is a thick forest, and the eastern part is hilly. Its capital city, the large town of Coomassie, with a population of 60,000, is built on a rocky hill, surrounded by a marsh, or half-stagnant stream, fifty or a hundred yards wide, so that it must be a place of some natural strength. The native houses in this part of Africa have their walls formed of stakes and wattles filled up with clay, and their roofs thatched with palm-leaves; but they are neatly ornamented with carved woodwork and painted plaster. Mohammedan artisans have brought among the Ashantee people a knowledge of many useful practices—weaving cloth, working in gold, iron, and other metals, and making pottery. The Moslem faith, introduced from the northern countries of Africa, seems also to be making progress amidst the heathen of this sequestered land.

The Countess of Loudoun has purchased the estates of the Earl of Stamford and Warrington, offered for sale last week, and comprising the lordships of Breckon, Wilton, and Tonge, with the manorial rights, advowsons, &c. The purchase-money was £167,000, exclusive of timber covering about 300 acres, which her Ladyship takes by valuation. These estates adjoin those of the late Marquis of Hastings, at Donnington, to which the Countess succeeded on his death, in 1868.

The annual regatta of the Royal Ulster Yacht Club opened in Belfast Lough, on Friday, the 18th. In the race for the Bangor Challenge Cup, value 100 gs., presented by the Earl of Dufferin, Lord Bangor, and R. E. Ward, of Bangor Castle, the Iona cutter, 62 tons, Mr. James Ashbury, H. Y. C., took first place, and accordingly won the cup, together with a purse of 50 sovs. added. The cup is to become the property of any vessel winning it twice in succession; and last year it was carried off by the Vanguard cutter, 60 tons, Mr. W. P. Mullar. In the race for yachts exceeding 20 and not exceeding 40 tons, the Myosotis cutter, 39 tons, T. G. Erke, carried off the first prize; and the Britannia cutter, 40 tons, Captain Hartwell, the second. A 20-ton race was won by the Lizzie cutter, Mr. E. Stokes; and a 10-ton race by the Naiad cutter, Mr. T. Littledale.

NEW BOOKS.

AMONG THE NOVELISTS.

The quiet and steady progress of Miss Thackeray's "Old Kensington" story, in the Cornhill Magazine, was frequently noticed with repeated acknowledgments of the pleasure it was giving to many readers of that periodical. Its republication in one volume (by Smith, Elder, and Co.) is welcome to all readers of pure taste who like a novel that is true to the ends and aims as well as to the ordinary ways of sober English domestic life, cheered and hallowed by the spirit of womanly kindness, but lighted up by such fine broad gleams of humorous sagacity, that we are constantly reminded of Miss Thackeray's father. Indeed, we shall never think of Kensington, "the Old Court Suburb," as it was some twenty or thirty years ago, without being reminded of him; so that, in common with thousands who cherish equally the creations of his genius and the influence of his frank manliness upon this generation, we are gratified by his daughter's graceful token of filial regard, in choosing for the title of her last story the name of that place where he loved to dwell. Change has latterly been too busy with the old familiar features of Kensington, as with other suburbs of London; and we should look in vain for the Church House, in which Lady Sarah Francis received her little niece, Dolly Vanborough, on her arrival from India; but we could still find the house of Mr. Morgan, the curate, if not in Old-street, at least in Young-street, where the authoress herself lived as a child. But the persons are far more interesting than the places of this story; and Dolly Vanborough, a perfect study of feminine character, is one whose acquaintance it is worth while to make. Her good aunt, Lady Sarah, deserves the next place in our regard; but all the female parts are skilfully and truthfully presented. Rhoda is naturally selfish and shy; Mrs. Palmer, the mother of George and Dolly Vanborough, usurping the rights of her sister-in-law, and tyrannising over those who pity her affected sorrows, is just such a woman as we have all known. The men of the story, Frank Raban, George Vanborough, and Robert Henley, are not so altogether real and substantial; and Raban, who is meant to be the strongest and deepest character, is the least impressive. But there is enough merit in "Old Kensington" to sustain Miss Thackeray's high reputation.

A curious picture of life is exhibited in He Cometh Not She Said, by Annie Thomas (Mrs. Pender Cupdill), published by Chapman and Hall. How a woman's head may be completely turned by the attention of a handsome scamp has, through the assistance of the novelists, long been known; but hitherto it had probably never occurred to any novelist to illustrate the fact by so wholesale a collection of infatuated women. For nearly every woman, no matter what her age may be, who comes near the contemptible Adonis is represented as acknowledging his influence, melting in his presence as wax before the fire, and being quite ready, if she be unmarried, to place herself and her fortune at his disposal. The general run of novels, if they contain a handsome scamp and an infatuated woman at all, are usually so arranged that the infatuation is confined to one victim, who has gone so far that retreat, before her eyes are opened, is impossible, and who, consequently, arouses the commiseration both of the reader and of such characters in the novel as have discovered the beautiful demon's cloven hoof; but in the story under consideration there is absolutely no excuse, except a want of common-sense and a moth-like helplessness, for the chief victim, whilst the other subordinate and temporary victims are apparently considered to have done only what was to be expected of them, both when they succumb to the conquering hero's physical charms, and when they express the mildest possible disapprobation of such a handsome darling's dishonourable practices. One would say that the novel is a satire upon women; and that the satire is the more severe because it is so subtly concealed that a simple soul might not suspect any snake in the grass, but read on in the ingenuous belief of reading what is a true, or is intended by the writer to be a true, reproduction upon paper of living, moving, ordinary society. The plot is of the simplest kind: there are two Philips, cousins, one good and the other evil; the evil personates the good, for the sake of winning a very nice girl with two thousand a year, and succeeds to a certain extent; but, before things have gone too far, in comes poetical justice and prevents irreparable mischief; the good Philip is rewarded with the hand of the wealthy maiden, and the evil one marries a woman who is calculated to make his life a burden. So far so good, but the "victim" is ruthlessly drowned.

The "evil, fascinating, reckless man," hard as is the work he has done for countless writers of romance, is once more pressed into service as the hero of Willing to Die, by J. Sheridan Le Fanu (Hurst and Blackett). Moreover, Jesuits or quasi-Jesuits appear upon the scene; and whenever such gentry are so artistically handled as they are in the present instance, there is always good sport, and amazing interest is created. The incidents, too, are of the exciting sort: there are a shipwreck, a duel (without seconds), a suicide, a clandestine marriage, a murder attempted by a young lady with a dagger, an example of the way in which Mother Church, by means of her Jesuitical priests, robs her daughters upon their deathbeds, and a case of a will purloined and burnt. It is satisfactory, however, to note that the biter is bit, or, rather, that the burner is burned, not literally, but figuratively. It is hardly necessary to mention, when the author's name has been given, that surprises are frequent and ingeniously contrived; or that readers must not expect affairs to be conducted with the strictest regard for probability and conventionality. Nearly every character has points sufficient to attract and to fix the attention, if not the sympathies; and the three volumes are, from beginning to end, eminently readable. It is to be regretted that the heroine should be left at the last in a state of spinsterhood at more than forty years of age; but, as she may, for all that appears to the contrary, be still living, fortune-hunting bachelors and widowers, begging-letter impostors, advertising supplicants for subscriptions, and all persons of that description, will perhaps be glad to be informed that she has come in for a large sum of money, which she hardly knows what to do with.

A man with eyes like "wet violets"—such, perhaps, as Roger Tichborne were when he joined the Carabiniers—is the hero of Hidden Perils, by Mary Cecil Hay (Hurst and Blackett); and the ocular peculiarity is so often obtruded upon the reader's notice that a feeling of provocation is not unlikely to be aroused, and followed by an ardent desire that some one amongst the personages who figure in the novel would try the effect of a little pugilistic science upon those aggravating eyes. And, indeed, the desire is very nearly gratified; for the possessor of the eyes receives, before his career is over, a tremendous blow on the temple, administered with the most philanthropic intentions by his dearest and most devoted friend. The story begins in a very pretty and original manner, and promises to be, in respect both of characters and of incidents, unusually fresh, bold, exhilarating, and attractive. Nor is the promise altogether unfulfilled; although, by reason of the disproportionate space allotted to subordinate characters, to mere trifles, and to by-play, and for want of compact construction, the attention has a tendency to flag. The novel is most remarkable for an almost total absence of moral perception. The characters whom we are evidently intended to love and esteem are afflicted with a distressing moral obliquity. They do not break the seventh commandment, or anything of that kind, for there is nothing like vulgar immorality (unless it be just faintly insinuated in one case) throughout the tale; but they behave in a manner which shows an ingenuous ignorance or disregard of the principles whereon social security depends. The peerless hero is engaged to one of two sisters, makes love to the other, and, being affectionately declined rather than sternly rebuked, marries the former, soon loses her by death, and, at the risk of "cutting out" his own best friend, again "proposes" to the surviving sister, and suggests, without success but without severe reproof, that they shall defy a law which they cannot get repealed. The peerless hero, again, commits downright murder; and his affectionate friends are represented as behaving rather commendably than otherwise when they become accessories after the fact and save him from justice by what is scarcely distinguishable from sheer perjury. As for the clergyman who shows his disapproval of a fair accessory's behaviour by refusing her the sacrament, it is plain that, if he knew enough to take so extreme a measure, he, too, most heinously neglected his duty towards the community: and he might with advantage have been left out of the business; for the little piece of religion of which he is the centre will shock some readers' sense of propriety, and present an appearance of having been pitchforked in for an unworthy purpose. It is much to be regretted that a story with so many charming characters, charmingly sketched, up to a certain point, should seem to propound, without implied dissent, a questionable system of ethics, and should, so far as the tragic element is concerned, culminate in a clumsily contrived and ludicrous catastrophe; for it is impossible not to laugh when the ingenious doctor conceives the happy idea of stunning his dear friend with one amicable but terrific blow on the temple.

Upon an old and tolerably well known anecdote, relating how an old curmudgeon, not having, or not caring to know that he had, any near kinsfolk, was struck with the unexpected kindness shown to him on a journey by a young man, a total stranger, and was moved to inquire who and what the young man was, and to leave that young man a large fortune, is founded the former and longer of two stories entitled Oliver Beaumont and Lord Latimer, by Lady Emily Ponsonby (Hurst and Blackett). It is a good, plain, straightforward, sufficiently well written story; and it is so very unexceptionable in tone and so highly moral, nay religious, in tendency, that it is quite fit to be read by the most straight-laced persons, on a Sunday. The old curmudgeon's heir leaves a will which, even if it would legally stand (of which the writer herself expresses some doubt), is foolish to the superlative degree; but one cannot find fault with the foolishness of the will, seeing that a very pleasant and readable tale hangs thereby. The young ladies to whom the reader is introduced are, almost one and all, of such a description that, if they were only to be met with in real life, they would make "a little heaven below;" and the gentlemen, both old and young, are nearly all such as Diogenes, when he went about with his lantern, would have been agreeably surprised to encounter. The latter of the two stories might be called "a study of a noble lord." The "noble lord" has been so brought up from his very childhood that he at a very early age, to use a somewhat vulgar but very expressive phrase, "considers himself everybody;" and, what is more, nine persons out of ten who come in contact with him appear to appraise him as highly as he appraises himself. In fact, to adopt the language used by the writer of the story, there was a "conspiracy to ruin an immortal soul;" and, at any rate, the conspiracy produced a mortal man of a kind scarcely tolerable in a free and independent country. The way in which he chooses a wife reminds one rather of the traffic carried on in certain Oriental markets than of the customs supposed to prevail amongst the proud Britons, who never will be slaves; and the easy manner in which a sweet young lady of seventeen, whose prophetic soul is probably full of diamonds, allows herself, with only a few days' notice, to be added to the noble lord's other furniture, is enough to make one's blood boil. He puts her under discipline, and the consequence is that, when she sees a great deal of a really natural young man, made of real flesh and blood and unspoiled by any "conspiracy," she finds that she, too, is flesh and blood, and—well, no harm comes of it, beyond a brain fever, which is followed by the happiest results, including a complete transformation of the "noble lord." The story is told in excellent style and at appropriately and considerably moderate length.

Almost as liberally as cayenne pepper is sprinkled over devilled whitebait, particles of "foreign lingo" are scattered over the pages of Wild Georgie, by Jean Middlemass (Hurst and Blackett), which is a lively, well-written, somewhat highly-seasoned novel, having for its heroine a "girl of the period." The heroine, who is quite an extreme case of the "girl of the period," is, in many respects, attractive and lovable; she is pretty, clever, and, at bottom, innocent, ingenuous, and affectionate, though she is flippant, rude, and fast. She has a heart, and she, unfortunately, bestows it upon a man who is only redeemed from perfect scoundrelism by the fact that he tells her he is a scoundrel, and warns her against taking him for her husband; but she is deaf to his admonitions, and, when he convinces her that he has not committed murder, the only little irregularity to which she appears to have any strong objection, she is quite anxious to become his wife, and to share the vicissitudes to which a swindler, as she well knows him to be—and a thorough rascal, as she might reasonably conclude him to be—is, even in the imperfectly moral condition of our modern society, daily exposed. The great plague of her life is a diabolical but fascinating woman, of a type not unknown to readers of novels, who is a cardsharp by vocation, and the fact of whose being half French and half English, and of her having a faithful French servant, created a little in the likeness of the famous Dagobert in the "Wandering Jew" (bar the high sense of honour), accounts for the intersprinkling, already alluded to, of French phrases. An old German is introduced, chiefly, it would seem, for the purpose of giving a Teutonic colour to certain portions of the dialogue. As for the extremely worthy gentleman, possessed of rank and riches, upon whom the heroine, left a widow through a duel fought without seconds, is ultimately foisted, he certainly deserved a better fate; for a swindler's widow, however sprightly and beautiful—it being borne in mind that she knowingly and wilfully became a swindler's wife—was totally unworthy of Sir Henry Wilbraham. There is a very pleasant, fresh, idyllic episode relating to the married life of an Arcadian young couple; and, whatever may be thought about the profit to be derived from the perusal of such a novel, it is certainly brisk enough, clever enough, exciting enough, and amusing enough, to give no little pleasure.

Whoever enters into affectionate competition with any departed relative illustrious in literature has so much expectation to satisfy and so much prejudice to encounter that there are long odds against any but a gradually, stubbornly, and laboriously attained success; still it cannot be denied that considerable promise is shown in Bressant, by Julian Hawthorne (Henry S. King and Co.). One great charm of the book for English readers is the new world revealed to them. No doubt Transatlantic life, what with the increase of travelling and the multiplication of printed works, has become, so far especially as the two extremes, the great civilised cities and the wild prairies, are concerned, tolerably familiar to most of us; but there can be only a few to whom Professor Valeyon and his two daughters and the theological student, gigantic but deaf, and the mysterious Abbie, and the village in which Abbie keeps boarders, and the habits, manners, and customs of that village, to say nothing of the natural features of the surrounding country, will not appear in the interesting guise of refreshing novelty. And then the author treats those human passions and that never-to-be-exhausted story, which are as old as the hills, in a decidedly original if not an altogether unexceptionable manner. Anything prettier than the earlier sketches of the Professor and his two daughters has seldom been done with pen and paper; and anything more strange and grotesque than the way in which the deaf giant wooes and wins both Cornelia, with her physical beauty, and Sophie, with her spiritual loveliness, has seldom been imagined since one-eyed Polyphemus told his gruff tale of heartache to Galatea. There is the stamp of a true Hawthorne in the quiet humour, the pre-Raphaelite minuteness of description, and the analysis of physiological and psychological properties; and, if only the second volume had been up to the mark of the first, the transmission of hereditary talent would have been in one more instance remarkably confirmed.

Patchwork is not necessarily uninteresting, as is proved by Residence at the Court of London, by Richard Rush, Third Edition, Edited, with Occasional Notes, by his Son, Benjamin Rush, &c. (Hamilton, Adams, and Co.); but that the volume deserves in some degree to be called patchwork may be demonstrated by the statement of a few facts. First of all there is a letter addressed by Mr. Benjamin Rush to Mr. Charles Francis Adams, late Minister of the United States at the Court of London; then there is a "preface to the third edition;" afterwards comes an "addendum to preface to third edition;" this is succeeded by some remarks offered by Mr. Richard Rush "to the reader;" at length there is an actual commencement of the narrative relating to "Residence at the Court of London;" that narrative, ceasing at the 361st page, is followed by an appendix, some thirty pages long; after the appendix are subjoined about a hundred pages of entirely new matter, entitled "A Glance at the Court and Government of Louis Philippe and the French Revolution of 1848;" next to this is an extract, referring to the "character of Mr. Canning," from one of Mr. Richard Rush's "occasional productions;" then comes a "biographical memoir of the author"—i.e., of Mr. Richard Rush; and the whole is wound up with "an alphabetical index." Thus the number of more than six hundred pages is fulfilled, and a volume, formidable in size and embellished by a portrait of Mr. Richard Rush, who has the appearance of a shrewd, urbane, gentleman-like, unmistakable American, is made ready for the application of the paper-knife. Let it be borne in mind, however, that there are more or less sound reasons, which it would be tedious to minutely set forth here, and which a perusal of the volume itself will make perfectly clear, why the form of patchwork should have been adopted, and that the term is used not disparagingly or reproachfully, but merely descriptively, so that readers may have due notice of the style of fare provided for them. Mr. Richard Rush's "Residence at the Court of London" had long been out of print, and had often been inquired after, says the editor, when the idea was conceived of publishing this third edition; and the opportunity was taken of adding the narrative, "published now for the first time on this side of the Atlantic," which refers to "the author's residence as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States at the Court of Louis Philippe, with a glance at the French Revolution of 1848, and a subsequent residence in the same capacity at the Government of the Prince President." It has been said by one who was likely to know that "the life of Richard Rush must be nearly the history of his country for half a century," and that "the most continuous portion, however, of Mr. Rush's public life was his representation of America as her Minister in England and France;" and, if so, there can be no doubt about its being worth while to read what impression was made upon such a man, able, discreet, observant, and cultivated as he is described to have been, during his English mission, or such portion of it as is referred to in the volume under consideration, and during his French mission, which allowed him to study France in the momentous days of 1847, 1848, and 1849. Some of the notes which it has seemed good to the editor to furnish—as, for instance, when he repeats (at page 244) the trite story of the unexceptionable manner in which Queen Victoria acquitted herself upon the delivery of her first speech from the throne at the opening of Parliament—are likely to appear gratuitous, to say the least of it, and to excite a feeling of impatience; but others there are of a more acceptable kind.

It is commendable to rescue from oblivion the names and ensamples of such excellent men and women as have from time to time acted in the spirit of him who said, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord," and have given up rank, and riches, and luxury in order to minister to the sick and needy; and for that reason a good word must be said for Anna, Countess zu Stolberg Wernigerode, translated from the German of Arnold Wellmer by D. M. P. (Strahan and Co.); otherwise, the style of the volume, somewhat theatrical, pretentious, and fulsome, would be likely to repel quite as many readers as it would attract. The high-born Anna left, at an early age, her ancestral home, and became, first of all, a "sister," and then the "mother," of the "Bethany" at Berlin. She was, in fact, a sort of Prussian Florence Nightingale; though the German lady seems to have been invested with something more of the official character than we are accustomed to associate with our idea of the English lady and her noble services. Countess Anna was born in 1819, and died in 1868; and, so universal was the gratitude she had inspired amongst all families, from the King's to the beggar's, that it was found impossible to comply with her dying wishes, and permit her funeral to be "quite so quiet and unnoticed as she in her humility had desired."

A savour of old jokes and an echo of old songs seem to hang about Captain O'Shaughnessy's Sporting Career: an autobiography (Chapman and Hall); but the two volumes are light, dashing, and amusing. The rollicking spirit, of course, predominates, but it is tempered by that sentimentality which is more or less noticeable in all sportsmen, and more in sportsmen of real or fictitious Hibernian origin. Nor is tragedy unrepresented; for there is an account of a fatal duel, and it is wonderfully like other accounts of other fatal duels. It is pleasant to relate that the gallant captain, whose autobiography is recorded, and who did not himself fight the fatal duel, ends his "sporting career" with a honeymoon.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The confirmation under seal of the commissariat of Panff of Robert John Abercromby, the son, David James Abercromby, the brother, and William Cosmo Gordon, the executors nominate of Sir George Samuel Abercromby, Bart., of Birkenbog and Forglan, has just been sealed at the principal registry, London. The personal effects in England, Scotland, and Ireland amount to over £140,000.

The will and codicil of Mr. Samuel Dean, late of No. 18, Camomile-street, City, merchant, and of Cleveland-gardens, were proved, on the 14th inst., by Arthur John Cribb, Rosser Samuel Dean, and Frederick John Dean (the sons), and Charles Frederick Hodson, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. The testator leaves to each of his daughters, Ann Bardswell and Jessie Dean, £22,000; to each of his sons, Rosser Samuel Dean and Frederick John Dean, £12,000; to his son Charles Percy Dean certain freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates and £4000. After payment of some legacies, he gives the residue to his said sons Rosser and Frederick.

The will of the Hon. Mary Windsor Clive, who died, at No. 28, Chapel-street, Park-lane, on June 16, was proved, on the 14th inst., by Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. George Herbert Windsor Windsor-Clive, the brother, the sole executor—the personal estate being sworn under £40,000. The testatrix bequeaths £7000, free of duty, upon trust for her nephew, William Clive Hussey; and £7000, also free of duty, upon trust, to invest the same and apply the income for the more efficient nursing and tending sick persons at Ludlow, Shropshire, in continuation of the work carried on by her in conjunction with the Rector, the Rev. Edward Ffarington Clayton, under the name of the "Parish Nurses Fund," in order that the same may become a permanent institution. The residue of her property testatrix leaves to her sister, the Hon. Victoria Alexandrina Windsor-Clive.

The will, with two codicils, of the Hon. Caroline Martha Berkeley (wife of the Hon. George Charles Grantley Fitzhardinge Berkeley) has been proved by James Mason, the sole executor; the personal estate, over which she had a power of appointment under the will of her mother, Mary Frances Benfield, being sworn under £12,000. Testatrix has exercised the power of appointment in favour of her son, Edward Stratton Fitzhardinge Berkeley, and his children; and there are numerous legacies, both pecuniary and specific, given by the codicils.

The will of Major-General Charles Steuart, C.B., Colonel of the 11th Hussars, was proved, on the 2nd inst., by Archibald Steuart, the brother, the acting executor, the personal estate in the United Kingdom being sworn under £70,000. Subject to the payment of legacies, including one of £3000 to his sister, Anne Pole, testator gives his property to his said brother.

The will of Mary Anne, Marquise de Mervé (formerly Mackenzie), late of Dinan, in France, has been proved in London by Henri Bazin, sen., the sole executor.

The will of the late James Thomas Benedictus Notley, Esq., of Combe Sydenham Hall, Somerset, was, on the 11th inst., proved in the district registry at Taunton, by Mrs. Notley, his mother and sole executrix. The personal estate was sworn under £40,000; and the testator gives the whole of it, as well as all his real estates (subject to an annuity of £12 a year to one of his servants), to his mother absolutely.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LADY MUSGRAVE.

Charlotte Lady Musgrave, who died on the 26th ult., was the widow of Sir George Musgrave, Bart., of Edenhall, in the county of Cumberland, to whom she was married June 26, 1828, and who died on Dec. 29 last year. Her Ladyship was daughter of the late Sir James Graham, first Baronet, of Netherby, by Lady Catherine Stewart, his wife, eldest daughter of John, seventh Earl of Galloway. She leaves three daughters, all of whom are married, and one son, the present Sir Richard Courtenay Musgrave, Bart.

COLONEL LOCKHART ROSS.

Colonel Robert Lockhart Ross, C.B., died recently. The son of Colonel Robert Ross, of the 4th Dragoon Guards, he entered the 93rd Highlanders in 1840, and served first in Canada. In 1854 he proceeded to the Crimea, was present at Alma and Balaklava, and shortly afterwards was appointed by Lord Raglan Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General. Subsequently, he was actively engaged during the Indian Mutiny and the war in China, and from 1866 to 1868 held a staff appointment in Egypt. Colonel Lockhart Ross had received the Crimean, Indian Mutiny, and China medals, with clasps, the Order of the Medjidie, and Turkish and Sardinian medals.

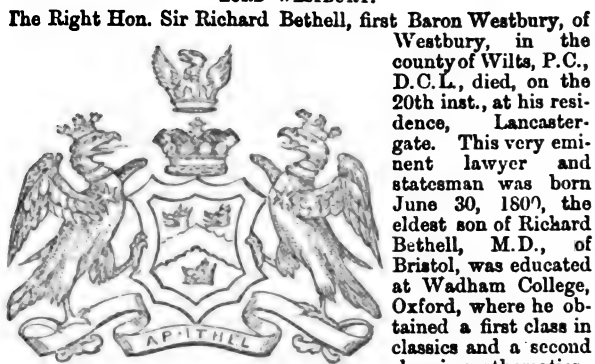

MR. M'CLEAN, M.P.

John Robinson M'Clean, Esq., M.P. for East Staffordshire, died at Stonehouse, near Ramsgate, on the 13th inst. He was born in 1813, the son of the late Francis M'Clean, Esq., of Belfast, and was educated at Tillinacree, N.B., at the Belfast Institution, and at Glasgow University. He adopted the profession of civil engineer, and was at one time President of the London Institution. Mr. M'Clean, who was a Fellow of the Astronomical, Geographical, and other scientific societies, sat for the eastern division of Staffordshire from 1868 till his death. He married, in 1835, the second daughter of W. Newsam, Esq.

M. WINTERHALTER.

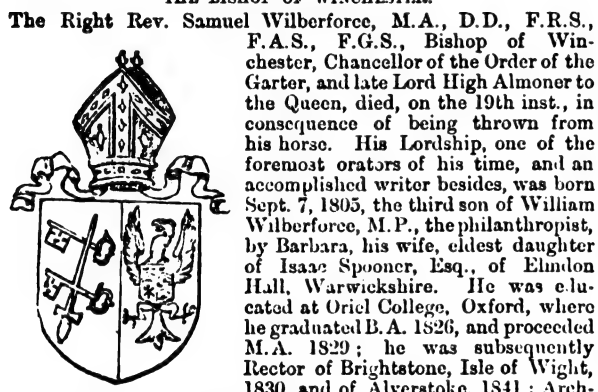

M. Franz Xavier Winterhalter, the favourite Court painter of her Majesty and the late Prince Consort, who died recently at Frankfurt, was born at St. Blasien, in Baden, in 1806. He pursued his professional studies in the Munich Academy of Art, and afterwards in the galleries of Italy. Early in his career he received commissions from Louis Philippe, and also from some of the Kings and Princes of the various States of Germany; and this led to his employment by the Queen, for whom he executed many portraits of herself, the Prince Consort (one of which is now in the National Portrait Gallery), the Royal children, &c. A portrait group of her Majesty, the Prince, and the Royal children was, in 1848, exhibited by special command to the public in Buckingham Palace. It has since been engraved by Cousins—the publisher, Mr. Moon, giving the painter 1000 gs. for the copyright, and the engraver the large sum of 3000 gs. For her Majesty Winterhalter also executed a group of Wellington and Peel (1850), which has likewise been engraved. Among other Court portraits by him were those of the Empress Eugénie, and many French, Russian, and Polish ladies. One of his most important subject-pictures—viz., "Florida: Roderick the Goth sees Florida for the first time, as she and her companions are about to bathe in the Tagus"—was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1852, and is now in the Royal collection. This graceful composition conveys the impression of greater talent than the painter's portraits, which, though tasteful enough, are often superficial and conventional. The want of power is especially evident in his male portraits.

LORD WESTBURY.

The Right Hon. Sir Richard Bethell, first Baron Westbury, of Westbury, in the county of Wilts, P.C., D.C.L., died, on the 20th inst., at his residence, Lancaster-gate. This very eminent lawyer and statesman was born June 30, 1807, the eldest son of Richard Bethell, M.D., of Bristol, was educated at Wadham College, Oxford, where he obtained a first class in classics and a second class in mathematics; and was elected a Fellow of his college and made, in 1860, D.C.L. He was called to the Bar, by the Middle Temple, in 1823, and attained the very highest distinction during a long practice in the Courts of Equity. In 1840 he was made Q.C., in 1852 became Solicitor-General, and in 1853 received the honour of knighthood. He was for some time Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster and Counsel to the University of Oxford; and, after having been thrice Attorney-General, he was constituted, in June, 1861, Lord High Chancellor, and raised to the Peerage at the same time. The high office of Lord Chancellor he resigned in 1865. His Lordship married, first, Nov. 19, 1825, Ellinor Mary, eldest daughter of the late Robert Abraham, Esq.; and, secondly, Jan. 25, 1873, Eleanor Margaret, third daughter of the late Henry Tennant, Esq. By the former (who died March 17, 1863) he leaves three surviving sons and four daughters. The eldest son, Richard Augustus, born March 11, 1830, and married, July 5, 1851, to Mary Florence, daughter of the Rev. A. Fownes-Luttrell, succeeds his father as second Lord Westbury. The nobleman whose decease we record sat for some time in the House of Commons, first for Aylesbury, and afterwards for Wolverhampton.

THE BISHOP OF WINCHESTER.

The Right Rev. Samuel Wilberforce, M.A., D.D., F.R.S., F.A.S., F.G.S., Bishop of Winchester, Chancellor of the Order of the Garter, and late Lord High Almoner to the Queen, died, on the 19th inst., in consequence of being thrown from his horse. His Lordship, one of the foremost orators of his time, and an accomplished writer besides, was born Sept. 7, 1805, the third son of William Wilberforce, M.P., the philanthropist, by Barbara, his wife, eldest daughter of Isaac Spooner, Esq., of Elmdon Hall, Warwickshire. He was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. 1826, and proceeded M.A. 1829; he was subsequently Rector of Brightstone, Isle of Wight, 1830, and of Alverstoke, 1841; Archdeacon of Surrey, Canon of Winchester, Dean of Westminster, and Chaplain to the late Prince Consort. In 1845 he was consecrated Bishop of Oxford, and in 1869 was translated to the see of Winchester. He married, June 11, 1823, Emily, eldest daughter and coheir of the Rev. John Sargent, Rector of Wool Lavington, Sussex, by Mary, his wife, daughter and heiress of Abel Smith, eldest brother of the first Lord Carrington, and by her (who died 1841) he had four sons and one daughter, Emily Charlotte, wife of Henry John Pye, of Clifton Campville Hall, Staffordshire. The Bishop's eldest son, Herbert William, Lieutenant R.N., died, in 1856, from over-exertion in the Baltic campaign.

SIR DAVID SALOMONS, BART.

Sir David Salomons, Bart., of Broomhill, Tunbridge, Kent, M.P. for Greenwich, J.P. and D.L. for Kent, Sussex, and Middlesex, an Alderman of London, and of the Middle Temple, barrister-at-law, died at his town residence, Great Cumberland-place, Hyde Park, on the 18th inst. He was born Nov. 22, 1797, the second son of Levy Salomons, merchant and underwriter, of London, by his wife, Matilda de Metz, of Leyden. He passed the earlier period of his life in mercantile pursuits, but was called to the Bar in 1849; and, after having unsuccessfully contested Shoreham, Maidstone, and Greenwich, in 1837, 1841, and 1847, was returned to Parliament for the last-named borough in 1851. He was re-elected in 1859, 1865, and 1868. In 1869 he was created a Baronet, with limitation, in default of male issue, to his nephew, the present Sir David Lionel Salomons, second Baronet. In 1835-6 Sir David served as Sheriff of London and Middlesex; in 1839-40 was High Sheriff of Kent; and in 1856-7 filled the civic chair of the city of London. He had been elected previously, in 1835, Alderman of Aldgate Ward; in 1844, of Portsoken Ward; and, in 1847, of Cordwainers' Ward. In politics the deceased Baronet was a consistent Liberal. He was the author of works on "the Corn Laws," "Banking," "English and Foreign Railways," &c. He married, first, April 18, 1825, Jeanette, daughter of Salmon Cohen, Esq., of Canonbury House, Middlesex; and, secondly, Sept. 23, 1872, Cecilia, widow of P. J. Salomons, Esq., of Upper Wimpole-street. He leaves no issue.

THE HON. SUSAN TOUCHET.

The Hon. Susan Touchet died on the 14th inst., at Sandgate, Kent. She was born July 19, 1826, the youngest child of George John, nineteenth Lord Audley, by Anne Jane, his wife, daughter of Vice-Admiral Sir Ross Donnelly, K.C.B.

MRS. CLIVE.

This distinguished lady, Caroline Clive, the authoress of "Paul Ferroll," whose lamentable death by an accident from fire occurred on the 12th inst., at Whitfield, Herefordshire, was the second daughter and coheir of Edmund Meysey Wigley, Esq., of Shakenhurst, in the county of Worcester, and was born in 1801. In 1840 she was married to the Rev. Archer Clive, of Whitfield, J.P. and D.L., who was formerly Rector of Solihull, Warwickshire, and is now Chancellor and Prebendary of Hereford Cathedral. Besides "Paul Ferroll," Mrs. Clive was authoress of "Paul Ferroll's Wife," and a volume of poems, published under the signature of "V." Mrs. Clive leaves one son, Charles Meysey Bolton Clive, and one daughter, Alice, wife of Lieutenant-Colonel Wilberforce Greathed, C.B.

CLOSE OF THE WIMBLEDON MEETING.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PRIZES.

Last Saturday the meeting was brought to a close, in the usual manner, by the presentation of prizes, followed by a cavalry and volunteer review, under the command of Field-Marshal the Duke of Cambridge.

Princess Mary Adelaide presented the prizes. Before three o'clock the Royal standard indicated the arrival of the Princess at The Cottage, where she honoured the president of the association at luncheon. In the meantime the portable tent and Royal dais had been erected immediately under the flagstaff fronting the grand stand, with the principal prizes displayed on tables covered with blue cloth. The prizemen were drawn up on the right, and in the rear was a guard of honour composed of the London Rifle Brigade under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Hayter, with its band. Earl Ducie and Captain Mildmay, with Colonel the Hon. C. H. Lindsay, M.P., awaited the arrival of the Princess at the tent. At four o'clock the fire of a gun announced that her Royal Highness had left The Cottage. The 1st Life Guards, the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), the 3rd Dragoons, and the 7th Hussars, which had been detached to take part in the forthcoming review, with two batteries of the Royal Horse Artillery, entered the inclosure about this time, and took up their position on the opposite side of the common. In a few minutes Princess Mary Adelaide, who was accompanied by the Duke of Teck, who wore his uniform as Colonel of the 1st Surrey Artillery, and by her daughter, Princess Victoria, drove up to the tent, amidst much cheering, the band playing the National Anthem. On alighting her Royal Highness was received by Earl Ducie and Captain Mildmay, and conducted to the dais, the only speech made being simply a request by Earl Ducie that her Royal Highness would do the National Rifle Association the honour of presenting the prizes, to which the Princess Mary Adelaide, smiling, bowed her acquiescence.

The prizes were then presented in the following order by her Royal Highness—the prize-takers being applauded according to their respective degrees of popularity:—

The 1st Warwickshire Yeomanry prize of £50, presented by Colonel Lloyd-Lindsay. For this novel competition, which came off on Friday, representatives from several corps of mounted volunteers and yeomanry contested on horseback and on foot in rifle-firing and in rapid field practice, including two jumps over hurdles.

Private Lowe, Queen's Westminsters, first prize in the extra prizes: Assistant Surgeon Vail, second extra prize.

Sergeant Bird, South Middlesex, and Major Waller, St. George's, first prizes of £20 each in any rifle cartons at 500 yards.

Private Bird, South Middlesex, first prize of £20, any rifle cartons at 800 yards.

Sergeant Menzies, Queen's Edinburgh, Albert first stage of £25: Captain Starke, Queen's Westminsters, Mr. Joyce, Belfast, R. M. Kerrill, London Scottish, second prizes, £17 10s. each; Private Mott, 1st Lancashire, second stage, £10.

Lieutenant Colonel Remington, 2nd London, Alexandria, £50.

Corporal Brooks, 1st Devon, £35.

Captain Starke, Queen's Westminsters, Windmill prize, £17 10s.

Captain Humphrey, Cambridge University, National Arms and Ammunition, second prize, £11 13s. 4d.

Captain Hachiffe, South Middlesex, Graphic first prize, £52 10s.

Lieutenant Hooper, Queen's Westminsters, Hauston and Scott's prize of £20.

Corporal Brooks, 1st Devon, Abingdon Works prize of £20.

R. M. Kerrill, London Scottish, Secretary of State for War's first prize, £9 15s.

Sergeant Reeves and Sergeant Whitehead, Royal Marines, General Eyre's prize and £5.

Private Baker, Bristol Rifles, Any Rifle Association Cup.

Private Clark, 2nd Edinburgh, Any Rifle Association Cup.

Quartermaster Curtis, 1st A. B. Sussex, Snider Wimbledon Cup.

Captain Edmond, Leeds Rifles, Olympic prize, £52 10s.

Lieutenant Colonel Fenton, 40th Lancashire, Dudley prize of £50.

29th Middlesex, the Belgian Cup and £30.

Nottingham, the China Cup and £25.

Sergeant Tildeley, 1st Beds, the St. George's Vase, the gold jewel, and £30.

Armourer-Sergeant Ingram, 1st Lanark, the silver jewel and £25.

Corporal Hemery, Cambridge University, the Dragon Cup.

Winchester School, the Ashburton Challenge Shield.

Sergeant Mellish, Eton, the Spencer Cup, arising out of the same competition.

Oxford University, the Chancellor's Challenge Cup.

The Mother-Country Team, the Kolapore Cup and £40.

The Canadian Team in same competition, £80.

Private Clarke, Scotland, the Irish International Trophy and £5.

The English Twenty, the International Challenge Trophy, Ireland.

The Irish Eight, the Elcho Challenge Shield.

Private E. Ross, the Duke of Cambridge's prize of £50.

Sergeant Hall, 18th Lincoln, and Private Boyd, 2nd Ayrshire, Prince of Wales's prize, £52 10s. each.

Corporal Willows, 4th Lincoln, Queen's first-stage Badge, medal and £60; and the following with the badge and £12 each, viz.:—Private Gilbert, 41st Middlesex; Colour-Sergeant Brookes, 12th Middlesex; Lieutenant Mortimer, London Scottish; Private Worthem, London Rifle Brigade; Private Sprott, 1st Lancashire; Private Clarke, Edinburgh Rifle Brigade; Corporal Giller, Robin Hood's; Armoury-Sergeant Ingram, 1st Lanark; Lieutenant Ross, 1st Lanark; Sergeant Menzies, Queen's Edinburgh; and Private Young, 11th Worcester.

Sergeant Menzies, Queen's Edinburgh, winner of the gold medal, gold badge, and the Queen's prize of £250, in the great competition of the meeting.

With Sergeant Menzies the work was done, the band played the National Anthem, and the Princess joined Lady Ducie in the Royal box above the principal entrance to the grand stand.

THE REVIEW.

Immediately after the distribution of prizes all eyes were turned towards the targets, and the cavalry were observed to be massed at the extremity of the plateau on the left side of the grand stand, while at right angles with that line, and along the edge of the inclosure, were ranged two batteries of the Horse Artillery. In the middle of the plain stood the Duke of Cambridge and his staff. Among the officers on the ground acting in various capacities were Sir James Lindsay, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, and Major-General Parke. The Duke of Teck also rode with the Duke of Cambridge's staff. There were two brigades of cavalry—the heavy brigade, including the 1st Life Guards and the Blues; and the light brigade, comprising the 3rd Dragoon Guards and the 7th Hussars. Two batteries of Royal Horse Artillery and four weak brigades of volunteers made up the force. The only artillery volunteers present drilled as infantry. The review began with an inspection of the four regiments of cavalry, which were drawn up in line facing the grand stand. The 7th Hussars then covered the front with skirmishers, and began firing on horseback. A change of front followed, and the artillery was brought into play with fine effect, and after two or three brilliant but somewhat slow charges, the enemy withdrew behind the butts and the infantry took up the fighting. The Queen's (Westminsters) covered an advance with skirmishers very steadily, and, being withdrawn, the lines advanced and fired some volleys, many of which were much more like file-firing. This was repeated, with variations, till half-past six, when the march past commenced. The Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Teck, General Lindsay, and the staff took post beneath the Royal standard, and the defile began with the artillery, who went past at the trot to the music of the band of the Life Guards. Great applause greeted the cavalry, whose dressing and general appearance were superb. The volunteers followed in two divisions, commanded by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and General Parke.

THE COURT.

The Queen, with the junior members of the Royal family, continues at Osborne House, Isle of Wight. The Princess of Leiningen has been on a visit to her Majesty. On Saturday last the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, and the Princess of Leiningen, drove to Parkhurst Park, and was present for some time at the Highland games of the 79th Regiment (the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders). Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne sailed in the Earl of Roden's yacht from Osborne to Sea View, where her Royal Highness and the Marquis landed and inspected Sea Grove House and grounds, the mansion being about to be sold. The Princess and the Marquis afterwards returned in the yacht to Osborne. On Sunday the Queen, the members of the Royal family, and the Princess of Leiningen attended Divine service, performed at Osborne by the Rev. George Connor, M.A., Vicar of Newport. The Queen has walked and driven out daily. The Hon. Mrs. Ponsonby and Major-General Sir Francis Seymour, Bart., C.B., have visited her Majesty. The Queen has entertained at dinner Major-General Sir Francis Seymour, the Right Hon. E. Cardwell, the Right Hon. A. H. and Mrs. Layard, and the Rev. George and Mrs. Prothero. The Hon. Caroline Cavendish, the Hon. Emily Cathcart, and Lord Alfred Paget have left Osborne. The Hon. Mary Pitt has arrived as Maid of Honour in Waiting.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales was present, on Thursday week, at the annual inspection of the division of Foot Guards by his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief in Hyde Park. The Prince and Princess gave a garden party at Chiswick, at which the Grand Duke Cesarewitch, the Grand Duchess Cesarevna, Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, the Duchess of Cambridge, the Duke of Cambridge, the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, and a large and distinguished company were present. On the following day the Prince and Princess and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna visited the Duchess of Cambridge at St. James's Palace, it being the birthday of the Duchess. The Grand Duke Cesarewitch went to Portsmouth and inspected the Russian frigate Swetland. In the evening the Prince and Princess gave a ball at Marlborough House, at which the Grand Duke Cesarewitch, the Grand Duchess Cesarevna, Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, the Duchess of Cambridge, the Duke of Cambridge, the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Count and Countess Gleichen, and a large assemblage of the aristocracy were present. Cootie and Tinney's and the Hungarian bands were in attendance. On Saturday last the Prince and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna drove to Richmond Park and visited the Duchess of Teck at White Lodge. In the evening the Prince and Princess and the Grand Duke Cesarewitch and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna went to the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden. On Monday their Royal and Imperial Highnesses left Marlborough House on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Richmond at Goodwood for the race week. The children of their Royal and Imperial Highnesses left Marlborough House for Albert Cottage, near Osborne.

The Prince and Princess and the Grand Duke Cesarewitch and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna visited Westminster Abbey last week. The Cesarewitch also visited the British Museum and Sir Richard Wallace's Collection at Bethnal-Green Museum. Their Imperial Highnesses have also visited the Danish Galleries in New Bond-street. The Princess and the Cesarevna have sat for their portraits in crayon to Mr. Koberwein.

The Prince of Wales has expressed in a letter to the family of the late Bishop of Winchester the sympathy of the Princess and himself in their bereavement.

The Duke of Edinburgh has returned to London from the Continent. He crossed the Channel by special steamer, and proceeded to town by the morning mail on Tuesday.

Prince Arthur arrived at Helsingør, Denmark, on Monday. His Royal Highness was received by the Crown Prince of Denmark, who accompanied the Prince to the Castle of Fredensborg.

The Duchess of Cambridge completed her seventy-sixth year yesterday week, when her Royal Highness and a family party dined with the Duke of Cambridge at Gloucester House.

Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and Countess Dornberg have entertained a large party at Molecombe during the Goodwood races.

Prince and Princess Woronzow have left town for Paris.

Prince Lucien Murat and Princess Caroline have left the Pulteney Hotel for Suffolk.

Prince Arenberg has arrived at the Cliftonville Hotel, near Margate.

The Archbishop of York and Mrs. Thomson have left Queen's-gate for Bishopsthorpe Palace, Yorkshire.

The Duke and Duchess of Richmond and the Ladies Lennox left their residence in Belgrave-square on Saturday last for Goodwood House, to dispense their usual hospitality during the race meeting.

The Duke and Duchess of Sutherland and Lady Florence Leveson Gower have left Stratford House for Scotland.

The Duke and Duchess of Cleveland have left town for Battle Abbey, Sussex.

The Duchess (Dowager) of Grafton has left Grosvenor-crecent for Ramsgate, where the Duke and Duchess of Grafton are staying.

The Duke and Duchess of Athole have left Thomas's Hotel for Blair Castle, Blair Athole.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Huntly have left town for Aboyne Castle, Aberdeenshire.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Kildare and the Ladies Fitzgerald have left the Duke of Leinster's residence on Carlton-house-terrace for Killee Castle, Ireland.

The Earl and Countess of Rosslyn have arrived at the Balmoral Hotel, Edinburgh, from London.

The Earl and Countess of Tankerville have left their residence in Curzon-street for Chillingham Castle.

The prizes to the pupils attending the Middle-Class Schools in Cowper-street, City-road, were distributed on Thursday week, and the occasion was further signalled by the opening of a new hall, which the growing requirements of the institution have rendered necessary. Lord Russell presided; and his Lordship witnessed the boys—who numbered 1100—go through a variety of drill exercises, which were creditably performed. The noble Earl afterwards proceeded to the new hall, and his declaration that the building was formally opened was received with loud cheers. The Dean of Westminster, who was accompanied by Lady Augusta Stanley, addressed the boys, after which the prizes were distributed by Countess Russell.

THE CHURCH.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Armstrong, John Hopkins, to be Vicar of Staines.
Boycott, E.: Rector of North Cove, Suffolk.
Dobie, John: Vicar of Wool, Dorsetshire.
Hall, Thomas Guppy: Vicar of Hythe.
Jesling, William James: Rector of Moulton, Suffolk.
Mildmay, Charles Arundell St. John: Rector of Alvechurch.
Thompson, G. T.: Vicar of Heacham, Norfolk.
Wray, William M.: Vicar of Ovingham, Northumberland.

Sir E. Lechmere has laid the foundation-stone of a new church at Welland, Worcestershire; Mrs. Guest, the wife of the member for Poole, has laid the foundation-stone of new schools for St. Paul's, Poole; and the Bishop of Ely has opened new schools at Luton.

The Rev. J. Winter, probably the oldest curate in England, has passed away at the ripe age of ninety-one. On Sunday morning, July 20, he was taken ill when officiating as assistant curate in one of the three churches (Carlton) in which he had officiated for more than half a century, and was led from the altar and conveyed to his own house, where he died on the following morning.

The Church of All Saints, at Walton-on-the-Naze, has lately been enlarged and reopened. The additions consist of new chancel, organ chamber and vestry, and part new nave and south aisle. The style chosen is Early Decorated. When sufficient funds are forthcoming, the present unsightly nave and tower (of red brick, which have been eyesores ever since they were built in 1804) will be pulled down, and rebuilt like that which has lately been opened. The architect for these recent additions was Mr. Henry Stone, of London; and Messrs. Saunders, of Dedham, were the builders.

On Sunday, the 27th ult., the Church of St. Mary, Beachampton, Bucks, was quietly reopened by the Rector, the Rev. R. N. Russell. This church, which is a small but very graceful specimen of the fourteenth and fifteenth century work, has undergone a thorough restoration, at the able hands of Mr. G. E. Street, R.A. The entire cost of the restoration amounts to nearly £3000, of which £50 has been contributed by the Diocesan Church Building Society, and about £717 by the landowners of the parish and private friends. The parish, a very small one, has already exerted itself, the farmers giving a handsomely carved oak pulpit, the farmers' wives a new font, their daughters a beautifully-worked communicant's kneeler, and the Rector's wife the altar-cloth and a small organ; while other friends have made offerings—of a silver chalice by Lady Helena Trench, a silver paten and flagon by the clergy of Mr. Russell's deanery, an oak eagle by the Rev. W. M. Hatch, and a handsome brass corona by J. Lewis Fytche, Esq.

On St. James's Day the church of Notgrove, Gloucestershire, was reopened by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, after its complete restoration. The present Rector, the Rev. D. F. Vigers, is the first resident Rector for near a hundred years. He has built and maintains a school for the children of the parish; he has restored the rectory, converting what was a dilapidated farmhouse into a picturesque and comfortable residence, without destroying the character of the mediæval parsonage; two years ago, assisted by personal friends, he restored the chancel; and now, by the help chiefly of two of the Oxford colleges, who have recently become the principal landed proprietors of the parish, he has completed the restoration of the church. Corpus College gave £300 to the work, Christ Church £200, and the Warneford trustees a handsome grant. The architect is Mr. J. E. K. Cutts, Waterloo-road, Hammersmith.

The quarterly meeting of the board of the Bishop of London's Fund was held on Wednesday to receive the report of the executive committee. The Bishop of London occupied the chair. The report stated that the total amount received since the last meeting of the board was, for general purposes, £11,414; for local and special objects, £3329. Of the former sum, £10,764 consists of new money. To this must be added balance over at date of last statement (£229) and £1850 (amount of former grants cancelled), making the total available for fresh grants £12,843. Against this there had been the following grants:—Churches and sites for churches, £4650; parsonages, £850; sites for schools and mission stations, £175; contingencies (consisting mainly of rent of houses for missions), £619. A further sum of £3879 had been written off outstanding liabilities for grants to schools, making the total amount appropriated £10,923. Grants had also been made to the extent of £1300 out of her Majesty's gift. Sermons had been preached on behalf of the fund in a large number of churches on May 18. The contributions received up to last meeting of the finance committee were £6125.

The funeral rites of the late Bishop of Winchester were celebrated, yesterday week, in the quiet churchyard of Lavington. A special train from Victoria conveyed a large number of friends, lay and clerical, to Petworth. The coffin was borne to its resting-place by labourers on the estate, and the mourning cortege included the Archbishops of Armagh and Dublin and the Bishops of Peterborough, Rochester, and Oxford. Canon Lloyd read the burial office, and the gospel was read by the Archdeacon of Berkshire. In Winchester Cathedral there was a special service at the hour of the funeral.—On Sunday morning a funeral sermon was preached in St. Paul's Cathedral, by Bishop Piers Claughton, Archdeacon of London, on the death of the Bishop. The preacher dwelt in emphatic terms on the deep sympathy of the deceased for his clerical brethren, and on his love for the Established Church and his desire to see it more united. At the afternoon service the pulpit was occupied by Canon Gregory, who paid a warm tribute to the memory of the late prelate. At Westminster Abbey three sermons were preached, all having some reference to the death of Dr. Wilberforce, who was for a short time Dean of Westminster. The morning sermon was preached by Dr. Bickersteth, Archdeacon of Bucks; in the afternoon the preacher was Dean Stanley, and in the evening Canon Kingsley. Allusions were made to the same subject at St. Paul's, Covent-garden, and several other places of worship.

Tuesday was prize day at Marlborough College, King's College School, the Stationers' Schools, the Royal Naval School at New-croft, and the College of St. Augustine, Ramsgate.

The Wesleyan Methodist Conference has held its sittings at Newcastle. The various committees having finished their deliberations, the Conference proper was opened on Wednesday. Eight vacancies had to be supplied, after which the Rev. G. T. Perks was elected president, and delivered his presidential address. A prayer meeting was held in the afternoon, and the usual business of the Conference was then transacted. There were four candidates for the presidency. The result of the voting was as follows:—Rev. G. Smith, 9; Rev. Dr. Punshon, 10; Rev. Alexander McAulay, 77; Rev. G. T. Perks, 320. The Rev. Gervase Smith was elected secretary by 182 votes. There were two other candidates for the office (Dr. James and the Rev. Mr. Williams), who obtained respectively 100 and 29 votes.

The Extra Supplement.

"LIONS FIGHTING."

In the catalogue of the Royal Academy Exhibition, whence we engrave this notable picture by Mr. Heywood Hardy, and where it forms a leading attraction, there is no title to the work properly speaking, and we must apologise to the artist for the prosaic heading which for convenience sake we give to these observations. Mr. Hardy uses only, by way of title or motto, the lines from Homer's "Iliad"—

Fierce as conflicting fires the combat 'ur'rs,
And now it rises, now it sinks by turns.

These lines will suggest some duration and some vicissitudes in this terrific contest between two full-grown males of one of the strongest and fiercest species of the feline tribe; whereas a painter's representation is limited to a single moment, unless, indeed, he adopt the mediæval licence of rendering a number of successive incidents in one and the same composition. Surely, however, a combat of such fell determination between two such blood-thirsty antagonists cannot long endure; surely this must be the final bout between the savage creatures; even feline tenacity of life cannot hold out much longer; and this leonine embrace must prove the last death struggle. One king of beasts—he with the blackish mane and fringe to his tawny coat, like his lately-deceased majesty the "old lion of the Zoo"—seems to have decidedly the best of it. His face is being frightfully mauled, but he has his fangs deep in his enemy's throat, and we feel that the vultures that hover and swoop in the mid-distance will not be disappointed of their prey. How is it that the representation of a fight between wild beasts always seems to excite keen sympathy and speculative interest from childhood upwards? Is it that the latent combative instincts of our own once savage nature are thereby excited—as by the old sports of the Coliseum arena, the bull-fighting in the Spanish ring, the tiger-hunting in India, and milder sports nearer home? The scene of this tremendous encounter at nightfall is, we presume, the African desert, on the border of the jungle, where grow only rank grass and a few stony asphodels. The cause of the quarrel is not far to seek—a female was at the bottom of it, as of many combats between bipeds, and this is a duel à outrance between jealous rival pretenders to female favour. Mark how the lioness slinks about the devoted combatants, how she seems to sniff the bloody tussle with keen relish, ready to submit at once to the victor! A word of warm praise is due, in conclusion, to the painter for the knowledge of animal character, the vigour and mystery of execution displayed in this picture, and that on a scale seldom attempted by contemporary artists. It is unquestionably one of the most admirable works by a young painter exhibited in recent years, and holds its own even beside our recollection of similar subjects by Rubens, Snyders, and other great animal painters.

THE LATE BISHOP WILBERFORCE.

The exact spot where the lamented Bishop of Winchester was killed, as we stated in our last, by a fall from a stumbling horse, on Saturday week, is a place called Evershed's Rough, from the name of the neighbouring farmer, which is on the bridle-path along the valley beneath the southern slope of the chalk hills, Rammoor-common, White Downs, and Hockhurst or Aekhurst Downs, extending from east to west between Dorking and Guildford. The Bishop and Earl Granville, attended by a groom, had ridden from Leatherhead, along the high road towards Dorking, as far as Burford Bridge, near Box Hill, where they turned off the road directly to the right hand, crossing Rammoor-common, and descending to the level horse-path in the grassy bottom. As they approached the farm buildings shown in our Illustration, half a mile from Abinger Hall, and nearly a mile from Wotton, the birthplace of Evelyn, this fatal disaster suddenly occurred, to deprive the English Church and State of a most accomplished and useful man. The Illustration, from a view taken by the Surrey Photographic Company, High-street, Guildford, shows the cross which was cut in the turf, immediately after the removal of the Bishop's dead body, to mark the precise spot of his fall. A few yards behind is the slight hollow in the ground where the horse stumbled and cast its rider headforemost out of the saddle. Abinger Hall, to which mansion the body was carried, is the seat of Mr. Farrer, Secretary to the Board of Trade. A little farther on is Holmebury, the seat of the Hon. F. Leveson Gower, where the Bishop and Earl Granville were going for a visit.

SKETCHES IN VIENNA.

The second page of figures representing various types of the motley Viennese population is given in our paper this week. The first page, which appeared in our last Number, contained sketches of the shop-girl and barmaid, the "Swiss" or house-porter in his gorgeous livery, the promenading cavalry officer, the carter leading a horse equipped with cumbersome ornamental trappings, the little vehicle drawn by a dog for the carriage of salable liquids, the Jew pedlar or hawk of trinkets, the Jewess from Galicia, the school-children, the dandy, and the sweep. In the descriptive notice written by our Special Correspondent, which accompanied those sketches by our Artist at Vienna, something was likewise said of the other Viennese samples of social life and class, occupation, or habit delineated in this week's page of similar Engravings. The Bohemian nursemaid, in her dress of bright and gay colours, her striped shawl and her head-kerchief, with her stout masculine boots, oddly showing themselves beneath the embroidered edge of a short petticoat, was one of the first to engage our attention. The policemen of military aspect, the commissionaires, ticket porters, and licensed messengers, the private coachman and the Fiaker-kutscher or cab-driver, the post-office letter-carrier and mailcart-driver, the driver and conductor of a tramway carriage, and the men employed to sweep the streets, who are mostly Slovaks in loose flannel overcoats with billycock hats, were also made subjects of comment. These figures will be recognised at once in the present series of Illustrations, with the monks and friars, the laundresses and charwomen, and the little Kellner or tavern potboy, who contrives to bear, at once, an incredible number of brimming vessels, without ever spilling a drop.

At a special meeting of the Sheffield Town Council on Wednesday it was resolved to purchase Wiston Park, containing over twelve acres of land, as a public park for the town. The cost, it is understood, is something like £15,000.

The Earl of Harewood recently presented a large plot of land to the Harrogate Bath Hospital, the site of which institution was the gift of his Lordship's grandfather. In recognition of this act of liberality the subscribers to this institution have presented the Earl with an address, in which his generosity is fittingly acknowledged.

S K E T C H E S I N S P A I N.

A SPANISH FIG-DRIVER.

Our Artist's sketches which appear on this page are merely specimens of the common aspects of life in Spain at this time, when the ragged soldiery of the new-born Republic, such as it is, may be seen in the streets as frequently as the bearer of a humble coffin with the mortal remains of departed humanity, or the less serious encounter of a rustic swineherd with the ordinary passers-by. With respect to the conduct of a Spanish funeral, we take the following from Mr. J. B. Stone's recently published "Tour with Cook through Spain":—"There is something strange and shocking about this procedure, which at once attracts our attention, and causes us to make inquiries into the rites and ceremonies performed here in connection with the dead, and the laws or customs of interment. Upon the shoulders of four men is borne a large tray or bier, upon which lies the body of a young man, without any coffin, dressed in white linen and covered with flowers. As the men move, the action betrays the limpness of the body, showing that the young man has been dead but a few hours. Behind walks a procession of twelve or eighteen youths, carrying long lighted candles. The whole cortege proceeds jauntily along at a quick pace, and if the body were not visible no one could believe that there is anything solemn or unusual going on. We are informed that all funeral rites have already been performed in the house by the priest, and that there will be no service at the grave. The Spanish law says that interment must take place within twenty-four hours, so that each evening, at the appointed hour for burials at the cemetery, all who have died during the day are brought to the cemetery to be buried. As may be imagined, curious incidents have arisen in carrying out this law. It has not unfrequently happened that people have been carried to the grave before they were really dead. A remarkable case of this was brought under our notice. One day at the hotel a woman was at the door begging—not an uncommon thing this—when the landlord called our especial attention to her case. Some years ago, during the ravages of the cholera, she was carried to the cemetery, along with fifteen dead bodies, to be buried, and it was only at the last moment discovered that she was alive. She afterwards recovered, and one result of her accident was her benefiting above her fellows in beggary to the extent of a small collection made for her among our English sympathising audience." This is what the landlord of an hotel at Granada told Mr. Stone, but every reader may form his own opinion whether it be a true story, or a fable devised for the traveller's listening ear.

Thursday, July 31.

After a stormy and eventful Session, the labours of the National Assembly have for the present been brought to a conclusion. On Tuesday, after the adoption of the treaties of commerce with England and Belgium, the message of Marshal MacMahon proroguing the Session till Nov. 5 was read by the Duc de Broglie. In this message, which is brief and to the point, the Marshal assures the Assembly that he will take care that nothing likely to endanger its authority shall occur during the recess, and congratulates himself upon the harmony prevailing between its opinions and those of the Government. After touching upon the new army law, he proceeds to speak of the successful negotiations for the liberation of the territory, complimenting M. Thiers on his share in this event, and emphasises the necessity, above all things, of peace; winding up with a compliment, which many profess to take as ironical, about the Assembly forgetting internal dissensions and thinking only of the good of the country. The conclusion of this message was received with loud cheers. At the last few sittings of the Assembly nothing of importance has transpired beyond two small tempests apropos of the erection of a church at Montmartre and the purchase of the Magliano frescoes, the adoption of the treaties already noticed, and the appointment of the Permanent Committee. In this Committee the Right Centre predominates, under the leadership of the Duc d'Audiffret Pasquier. The Committee has arranged to hold its sittings once a fortnight during the recess, and the members of the Left remaining in Paris, who have in turn formed themselves into a Committee of Surveillance, have decided to have their meetings held at similar intervals immediately after those of the Permanent Committee.

Most of the Deputies are, however, hastening away with all speed either to their respective constituencies or to the various bathing establishments now commencing their seasons. After the arduous labours of the session they, doubtless, feel in need of well-earned repose, and the country as well as they will be glad of a truce in matters political. However, M. Gambetta and several other members of the Left have resolved to take advantage of the recess for the sowing of those advanced Republican ideas from which they hope to reap a harvest at the next election, and have accordingly arranged for what can be best termed as a "stumping tour;" in other words, a series of speeches in all the large towns of France. M. Thiers, it is said, intends to pass the vacation in Switzerland.

After delays and difficulties innumerable, the trial of Marshal Bazaine seems at last about to become an established fact, though the exact date of the meeting of the council of war is not yet settled. However, the council has been formed, and its presidency accepted by the Duc d'Aumale. Compiègne is the spot selected for the trial, which in all probability will result in an acquittal.

In the absence of political events to talk about, society has been favoured with a terrible fire and a series of duels. The conflagration occurred on Saturday, at the village of Reuilly, on the plain of Argenteuil, so famous, or rather infamous, for the quality of its wine. It broke out at a grocer's shop in which a large quantity of petroleum was stored, and this fluid, becoming vapourised by the heat, exploded with terrific violence. Unfortunately, no one seems to have been aware of the presence of so dangerous a combustible, and at the moment of the explosion a large number of people, including a detachment of the 104th Regiment of Infantry, who were assisting the firemen, were close to the burning building. Twenty individuals, amongst whom was the Colonel of the regiment, were severely injured, and four of them have since died. Another fire of a violent and destructive character, though fortunately unaccompanied by any loss of life, took place last week in the dockyard at Toulon, and was with difficulty subdued. As to the duels, the most important, so far as the parties implicated are concerned, is that which took place on Friday evening at Vesinet, between M. Perin, a member of the Left, and M. Poirier, a Bonapartist writer, and which was due to an article of the latter in the Pays. In this article M. Perin was spoken of as a mountebank, a stage general, and a coward—implications he thought fit to try to remove by an interchange of sword thrusts. The result was that both gentlemen were slightly wounded, and their seconds then declared honour was satisfied. Another duel, projected between MM. Target and Ordinaire, both deputies, has, strange to relate, been prevented by their seconds, who, for once in a way, had the good sense to declare that there was nothing to fight about.

Some alarm has been expressed by several Government organs on account of the International, the emissaries of which, it is said, will be actively at work in France during the recess. In consequence, General Du Barrail, the Minister of War, has issued a circular to the Generals in command of the various districts warning them to keep a strict look out, and to prevent the troops under them from associating with foreigners. Several members of the International have been arrested, and, from papers found upon them, it seems their object is to cause a universal strike in the manufacturing districts.

The departure of the Prussians from Mézières was the signal of an outbreak. The mob assembled to celebrate this event were so carried away by the novel sense of freedom that they went so far as to get up a little riot. They shouted all manner of seditious outcries, and finally took to stoning the gendarmes. But, with the assistance of some troops hurriedly dispatched to the scene of action, these succeeded at length in quelling the disturbance and in arresting the ringleaders.

SPAIN.

Events are still proceeding unfavourably in Spain, although the Government is displaying more energy. Troops have been dispatched to Seville and Valencia, which are in the hands of the Internationalists, and both places are being besieged. At Valencia there has been heavy fighting. The Reds have offered, it is said, to surrender on certain terms, but the Government insists on unconditional submission. The insurgents under Pierrad have been captured and disarmed. The fugitive Spanish Generals at Biarritz, including Serrano, have resolved to offer their services to the Government. Fresh pronunciamentos continue to be made by the large towns. Accounts from Bayonne received in London on Monday from the Under Secretary of Don Carlos state that the Carlists have gained a great victory at Lizarraga, in Navarre, having captured the town, the fort, and the entire garrison, as well as two cannons, three mortars, and a great quantity of ammunition. An English steamer, which had been hired to run the blockade of the Biscayan coast, has landed several thousand Remington rifles and a large quantity of ammunition. A slight engagement took place on the beach between Republicans and Royalists; but the latter triumphed, and the valuable cargo was secured. At Carthagena General Contreras has formed an insurgent Ministry, and his rebel squadron has appeared off Almeria, in the adjoining province of Granada, and demanded a heavy contribution, under threat of bombardment. The inhabitants have resisted the demand, and hope the foreign men-of-war will prevent the bombardment. The city of Granada is in Communist hands.

PORTUGAL.

Lisbon celebrated on Thursday week the anniversary of the entry of the Liberal army into that city, and the triumph of Constitutionalism in the kingdom. The number of troops reviewed by the King was 6000. They defiled in front of the statue of Dom Pedro IV., and gave a military salute to the Queen, who was in a tribune erected in the square, the King marching at the head of the soldiers, attended by a brilliant staff. Dom Augusto commanded a brigade of infantry. The streets in the evening were illuminated, and bands of music were stationed at various points of the city, playing the national airs. The theatres were open free of charge. Bengal lights were displayed by the steamers on the Tagus, and the festivities were prolonged until morning. On the preceding day there was a requiem mass for those who fell in the Constitutional battles, the King himself being present.

SWITZERLAND.

The Council of the States has confirmed the decision of the National Council, and rejected by a large majority the three appeals against the banishment of Mons. Mermillod.

The Shah of Persia left Geneva for Turin on Thursday week. Before leaving he expressed to M. Cérésolo his thanks for the hospitality he had received during his stay.

ITALY.

The Duchess of Aosta (the late Queen of Spain) has had an attack of miliary fever.

The Shah of Persia, on Thursday week, reached Modane, where he was received, in King Victor Emmanuel's name, by one of the Royal aides-de-camp. His Majesty arrived at Turin the same night, at 9.35. The King, Prince Humbert, Prince Amadeo, and the Prince di Carignano, the Ministers, the Syndic, and the civic authorities welcomed his Majesty to Turin. The entry was most brilliant. The cortège was preceded by lancers and cuirassiers, and consisted of about fifty open carriages, several with four horses. It proceeded from the station direct to the Royal palace. The streets were splendidly decorated. About 150,000 persons thronged the streets, and there was great cheering. The effect of the palace illuminated was superb. The Shah frequently shook hands with the King to indicate the satisfaction he felt at seeing him. He was much astonished by the Mont Cenis Tunnel, and took great interest in the information given to him. On Friday the Court was a little startled by an illustration of Persian customs, the Shah having killed two lambs in the bedroom assigned to him. So at least says the Daily News' correspondent. On that morning the Shah visited the Royal Armoury, accompanied by King Victor Emmanuel. His Majesty appeared to take great interest in the different collections, but most particularly in the Persian arms, of which he recognised the historical authenticity. In the evening he was present at the theatre with King Victor Emmanuel and the Italian Princes. The house was densely crowded, and the Royal guests were greeted with loud and prolonged cheering. On Saturday the Shah presented his portrait, set in diamonds, to the King and the Royal Princes. He expressed much regret to the Duke of Aosta at the illness of the Duchess. King Victor Emmanuel decorated the Grand Vizier with the order of the Annunziata. The Shah, attended by his suite and accompanied by the King, drove through the city amid much cheering, the streets being crowded. In the evening he witnessed the illuminations and fireworks. The Via di Po had a most fantastic appearance. It represented a long covered garden illuminated with gas and coloured lights. On Sunday the Persian Monarch went on to Milan. At eight o'clock his Majesty was entertained at a grand banquet in the Royal palace. From the balcony he afterwards looked out upon the illumination of the cathedral, which produced a fantastic effect.

Yesterday week the Pope held a Consistory, at which he appointed twenty-two Bishops. The Pope afterwards delivered an allocution, in which he referred to the law for the suppression of religious corporations in Rome, and declared it to be contrary to all natural and human rights. On Saturday the Pope, receiving the Bishops who were nominated the day before, recommended them to defend the rights of the Church. He added that a question was now being discussed between some Bishops and an American Catholic Government. Freemasons, he said, had re-entered the councils of the Sovereign of that country and the religious associations. They believed on that account, and because the object of their association, as in Europe, was a charitable one, that the Church did not condemn them. This idea was false. They were excommunicated, like all other secret societies.

BELGIUM.

The Chamber of Representatives has adopted the bill laying down rules respecting the use of the Flemish language in the Criminal Courts. During the debate, which lasted several days, amendments were adopted, rendering the use of Flemish optional in several cases.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

It is stated that the Emperor will visit St. Petersburg and Moscow in the latter part of September.

A special convention has been concluded between Austria and Bavaria permitting the officers and soldiers of the army of the former to pass over the railroads of the latter on the same terms as those of the Bavarian army. For access to her Tyrolean possessions this is a great convenience to Austria.

Some important results are hoped for from an international patent congress which is to begin its sittings at Vienna on Monday next. The engineers of Germany, who suffer a good deal from the defective protection afforded to inventions in Prussia, will, it is understood, be numerously represented.

A letter from Vienna states that the number of cholera cases in that city is now so small that no cause whatever exists for alarm. Those which hitherto have proved fatal have been among the poorer classes.

RUSSIA.

The Czar held a review, in the Mokotow field, of all the troops assembled at Warsaw yesterday week. On Saturday morning last there were cavalry exercises in the same grounds. The infantry practised musketry-firing, on the Powonzkow field, in the afternoon. On Sunday the Czar attended Divine service in the church of the Palace of Lasensky, after which the cavalry of the Guard had a church parade, and the riflemen and dragoons had musketry practice on the Mokotow field. In the afternoon all the artillery of the garrison practised in the Powonzkow field. All the troops took part, on Monday, in grand manoeuvres near Belany.

The Emperor and Empress, with the Grand Dukes Serge and Paul and the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, arrived at Zarskoe-Silo on Wednesday evening.

Among the terms of the treaty concluded between Russia and Khiva are the payment of an indemnity of two million roubles, extended over seven years; the occupation of Schurahan and Kungrad by Russian troops as a guarantee; the abolition of capital punishment in the Khanate; and the surrender of the Khivan possessions on the right bank of the Amou-Daria to the Khan of Bokhara, in recognition of the assistance which he rendered to the Russian columns. The capital will be evacuated on Aug. 27. Khiva is being topographically surveyed by the Russians. They report that the Amou-Daria flows in a more easterly direction than is indicated in the maps.

TURKEY.

Another grand fête has been given at Constantinople in honour of the Khedive. His Highness has been specially invited to remain at the Porte during the festivities which will take place on the visit of the Shah.

AMERICA.

The city of Baltimore suffered heavily from a fire which broke out in a saw-mill yesterday week. A strong wind drove the flames before it, and about one hundred buildings, including four churches, were destroyed. Several lives were lost, and the property destroyed is valued at about £120,000.

A telegram from New York states that the King of Hawaii and his Cabinet have decided to conclude a reciprocity treaty with the United States, ceding to the latter the harbour of Pearl River.

AUSTRALIA.

The death is announced from Sydney of Sir Terence Aubrey Murray, the President of the Legislative Council. The Hon. John Hay has been appointed as his successor.

The Emperor of Germany has conferred upon Captain Burgess and Major de Winton the order of the Golden Crown, in recognition of their services during the Franco-German War.

South-Eastern China has been visited by a severe typhoon, which has caused considerable losses among shipping as well as great destruction of property on land.

Chevalier de Bunsen, who was previously German Chargé d'Affaires at Peru, has been appointed by the German Government Minister Plenipotentiary at Brussels.

A telegram from Salt Lake City, published in the New York papers, states that one of the wives (the seventeenth) of Brigham Young has left him, and is about to sue for a divorce and for alimony.

A telegram from Sir Samuel Baker, dated Berber, July 21, announces that Mr. David Simpson, one of the English engineers, died on June 20—two days after he had left Berber for Souakin.

The marriage of the Hereditary Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach stands fixed for the 26th inst., when it will be solemnised at Friedrichshafen. The august couple will make their formal entry into Weimar on Sept. 6.

A monument has been unveiled in the University of Naples, bearing the inscription, "To Pope Clement XIV., who, by the bull of the 21st of July, 1773, dissolved the Society of the Jesuits, the University of Naples dedicates this monument."

It is announced that at the commencement of next year one or two ships of the German navy are to be sent on a scientific mission to observe the transit of Venus. Their observations are also to be extended to ocean currents and tides.

By the mail from the West Coast of Africa, which arrived at Liverpool yesterday week, we have news that there has been no further engagement with the Ashantees at Cape Coast Castle.

A marriage has been arranged between Prince William of Hesse-Philippsthal-Barchfeld and Princess Juliana of Bentheim-Steinfurt. The Prince was formerly married to the Princess Marie of Hanau, daughter of the Elector of Hesse-Cassel, but has been divorced.

M. Jacques Dupuis died recently at Liège, at the advanced age of eighty-seven. He was the father of the three brothers Dupuis, who are well known in the musical world, two of them having been professors at the Conservatoire de Musique in the above-named town; and the third, Joseph, the well-known interpreter, at Paris, of the works of Offenbach, with Mlle. Schneider.

A correspondent of the Morning Post states that, at the Berlin University, the question has been raised by the juridical faculty whether the use of the German language had not better now be substituted for Latin in scientific dissertations, since the Latin vocabulary is scarcely suited to the new order of things in Germany, and the want of clear and intelligible expression is much felt. The proposal has, however, been rejected by a vote of five to four.

Dr. Petermann, the German geographer, has written a letter to the secretary of the American Geographical Society respecting the Arctic expedition of the Polaris. Dr. Petermann thinks that the geographical results of the expedition are of extraordinary value. "At any rate," he adds, "they are the highest that any vessel among the numerous expeditions of all nations to the North and South Poles have ever accomplished since many centuries."

The Minister of Public Instruction for Quebec, in his report upon the state of public instruction in that province for the year 1871 and part of the year 1872, says:—"I am happy to be in a position to announce continued progress, as well in the number of schools and the scholars attending as in the efficiency of these schools. There are to-day in several of the school municipalities of this province a great many model schools, and in nearly half the elementary schools the instruction given in several of its branches forms part of the education given in a model school."

A religious ceremony took place, on the 22nd ult., at the Monastery of the Holy Sacrament, in the village of Longuenesse, near St. Omer, Pas de Calais, France, being the jubilee or anniversary of fifty years' priesthood of Monseigneur Scott, Camérier to his Holiness Pius IX., and that of the fiftieth year of the religious profession of his sister, Madame Louise Scott, Countess, and Canoness of St. Denis, Prioress of that monastery, and foundress of several convents in France, Belgium, and Germany.

The thirty artisans sent by the Society for the Promotion of Scientific Industry to the Vienna Exhibition to report upon their respective trades as exhibited there have returned; and, from the careful selection of the men and the eagerness with which they set about their work, strong hopes are entertained that a very practical and valuable volume of reports will be the result of their visit. Mr. W. G. Larkins, the secretary of the society, undertook the entire responsibility of the arrangements, both of travelling and of board and lodging. The expenses of eleven Birmingham men were defrayed by the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce; and the party had the benefit of the experience of Mr. W. C. Aitken, who was connected with the artisans' visit to Paris in 1867.

LAW AND POLICE.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

The trial entered upon a new phase yesterday week: ladies and young persons were excluded from the court. Dr. Kenealy sought to prove, by reading extracts from French novels, that Roger Tichborne was utterly depraved, and that the defendant is Roger Tichborne. At the conclusion of the reading of the choice extracts which the learned counsel had selected the court was again thrown open to the general public. Dr. Kenealy then proceeded to assail the character of the late Sir James Tichborne—a line of defence which provoked some comment from the Bench as to the pain the defendant must necessarily feel at hearing his "father" traduced. From observations which were incidentally made by Judges and a jurymen, it would seem that threatening letters have been freely employed by unknown partisans on both sides. Dr. Kenealy was in full swing when the Court adjourned on Monday.

Before resuming his address, on Monday, Dr. Kenealy complained of some strong language which had just been applied to his client in a newspaper, in connection with an appeal which the editor had been requested by Mr. Guildford Onslow, M.P., to publish. The Lord Chief Justice said the language referred to was wrong, but that of the "appeal" itself was quite as improper, being a direct attack on the prosecution and the trial. In the course of his subsequent remarks, the learned counsel quoted passages from Roger Tichborne's letters to show that he had serious thoughts of relinquishing his proper station in favour of his brother Alfred, from a conviction that he himself could not perform its duties. The subject of Roger's habits was reinvestigated, and some of Lady Doughty's remonstrances with him were made to imply that he had other vices than excessive drinking and smoking. Some piquant speculation as to the "Rose Hill" entry in Roger's note-book was nipped in the bud by a prosaic statement that Rose Hill was the name of a place, and not of a woman. The observation that, "in the days of Lady Twiss, they should be cautious about believing French witnesses," elicited from the Lord Chief Justice the remark that the Court had nothing to do with Lady Twiss's case, and from Mr. Justice Mellor that the allusion was irrelevant. Just before the Court rose Dr. Kenealy occasioned a warm rebuke from the Lord Chief Justice by speaking of an observation of his Lordship respecting a letter as "a most ingenious way of accounting for it." His Lordship said, "I beg you will not apply such language to me," and the learned counsel apologised. The prosecution was taunted with the expense that had been lavished in the employment of private detectives and in collecting evidence from all quarters of the globe. When the Court rose Dr. Kenealy was tracing an internal similarity between the contents of the sealed packet as stated by the defendant and allusions to Miss Doughty occurring in Roger's letters to Gosford.

In continuing his address on Tuesday, Dr. Kenealy contended that some of the evidence for the prosecution showed that Roger Tichborne had the same hereditary diseases as had been manifested by the defendant, both being subject to erysipelas and apoplectic attacks. He contended, not for the first time, that there was no love between Roger Tichborne and Miss Doughty, but at the same time sought to prove that they were frequently found in each other's company. As on previous occasions, the Bench several times checked the learned counsel for making assertions and assumptions that were unsupported by evidence. Mr. Guildford Onslow made an explanation of, and an apology for, the letter he wrote in connection with the appeal for funds to carry on the defence of the Claimant; and the Attorney-General agreed to withdraw the charge of contempt of court against him and the proprietors and printers of the newspapers which had published the appeal.

Dr. Kenealy continued on Wednesday what he called his "weary task" of developing the abstruse meaning of the various links and allusions in the letters which passed between Roger and his aunt and Mr. Gosford. His object was apparently to show what he called "the true character of Roger Tichborne," in opposition to "the false light of a young man of high moral principles and religious feeling, and therefore a man exactly the reverse of the defendant." For this purpose he again referred to letters of Lady Doughty to Roger, and letters of Roger to Mr. Gosford and others, commenting on many of the passages cited as he proceeded. In speaking of the defendant's story of the loss of the Bella, the learned counsel drew from its improbability the inference that the defendant could never have been, as Arthur Orton was, a sailor, the narrative being too "absurd and ridiculous" for a seaman ever to have repeated it. In the afternoon the foreman of the jury said that one of his colleagues was under medical treatment, and was advised by his medical man that rest was necessary for him; and he asked, therefore, that next Monday being the bank holiday, the Court should adjourn over that day. It was ultimately arranged that the Court should adjourn from Thursday afternoon till next Tuesday morning.

Referring, on Thursday, to the assertions of Mr. Henry Seymour, the Viscount de Brimond, and other members of the family, that Lady Tichborne was ready to recognise the defendant as her son before she had seen him, Dr. Kenealy directed attention to some of her letters to Cubitt and Gibbes containing repeated statements that she could not positively recognise him until she had seen him, and only wanted to know the truth; and contended that she exercised great caution, shrewdness, and circumspection about the matter, and that eventually she satisfied herself beyond all doubt when she did see him that in reality he was her son Roger, a belief she retained until her death, in spite of all the pressure brought to bear upon her to lead her to a contrary conclusion. Yet she had the most tender affection for the infant son of Alfred, and it was highly improbable she could have done anything to disinherit him if she had the slightest doubt upon the point. With regard to the defendant's statement about having enlisted and other matters, Lady Tichborne said, "He has had so much to put up with and perhaps suffer that he has confused his ideas;" and Dr. Kenealy, remarking that this was in reality his defence in the present prosecution, submitted that the jury ought not to act upon the idle, silly, incoherent talk of the defendant, unless they saw a motive or object in it. If there was, then it might be criminal. Dr. Kenealy, next dealing with the Wagga-Wagga will, admitted it contained much that was untrue and perfect nonsense, but accounted for its being used as a pretext for raising money by asserting that such things were of common occurrence among young members of the higher classes in their transactions with money-lenders. Dr. Kenealy passed on to other parts of the will, and remarked that, although the Crown said the Tichbornes had no property in the Isle of Wight, yet he was informed they once had some there called the Wymmering estate. That fact would not appear in any Peerage or Baronetage, yet it was known to the defendant. As for the statutory declaration made by the defendant in Australia, in which he spoke of having been in the 66th Blues, Dr. Kenealy said it must be looked on in the same light as the will. It showed an aberration of common sense, and "folly could no further go." It was the powerful influence of Arthur Orton over his mind which made him do all these silly things. Such was the scope of Dr. Kenealy's remarks. The Court adjourned at four o'clock until Tuesday morning.

In the Court of Vice-Chancellor Malins yesterday week the Rev. Joseph Leicester Lyne, better known as Father Ignatius, attended with a youth named Todd, for the purpose of giving the lad up to his father. Mr. Lyne disclaimed, in the most emphatic terms, that he had any intention of disobeying the order of the Court, which had not been delivered to him by the doorkeeper at Llanthony Abbey. He admitted that he had administered monastic oaths to the boy, for which he was severely rebuked by the Vice-Chancellor. An order was ultimately made that Father Ignatius should attempt in no way to induce the youth to re-enter the monastery; and his Honour warned Mr. Lyne that he would be liable to imprisonment if he disobeyed this injunction.

At the Wicklow Assizes, yesterday week, the widow of a gentleman named John Slattery recovered £1400 damages from the Dublin and Wicklow Railway Company for loss sustained by the death of her husband, who was killed at a level crossing at Lansdown-road station.

The lady styling herself Countess of Derwentwater, who has been some months in Newcastle Gaol, under an order in bankruptcy, was released on Monday morning, no opposition to her discharge being offered.

A singular case of mistaken identity has come to light in the Bankruptcy Court. A bankrupt carrying on business in Bishopsgate-street, having suddenly disappeared, was supposed to have committed suicide, a body having been found in the Thames which was identified as that of the missing man. The creditors generously made the widow a present of £175 and some furniture out of the estate. The bankrupt has since reappeared, and he has been ordered to restore the property given to his supposed relict.

Damages to the amount of £1750 have been awarded to a young lady following the vocation of a dressmaker, at Ulverston, in an action for breach of promise of marriage. The defendant is a gentleman of fifty, who had wooed and won the plaintiff in a seven-years' courtship, but had suddenly changed his mind, and married some one else.

A firm of auctioneers, having distrained on the furniture of a poor woman who was in arrears with her rent, seized the sewing-machine which she had hired, and with which she was actually at work. For this act the proprietor of the machine very properly summoned them, and they have had to return his property and pay costs; the magistrate commenting on the harshness of brokers when dealing with the poor.

Extensive robberies have, it appears, been going on for some time at the Nine-elms goods station of the South-Western Railway; and circumstances tended to fix suspicion on Edmund Stewart, who, nevertheless, managed to evade detection. At length, however, he has been charged with robbing his sister; and through the facts disclosed in this case many others have been brought against him. It is said that he had advised her to write to the company and demand £10, the value of property abstracted from her box in transitu.

A repetition of the Eltham murder has been perpetrated in Richmond Park. As in that mysterious case, the victim is a young woman who has been in domestic service; and she has lingered in a hopeless state of insensibility, with short intervals of consciousness, since she was found, on Monday night, with her head and face cruelly battered.

Speedy retribution has waited on George Watson, an impudently dishonest news-vender, who, on the night of Thursday week, was given into custody for selling evening papers at a premium, on the pretence that they contained news of the "death of Mr. Gladstone." On Monday he was tried at the Middlesex Sessions, found guilty, and sentenced to a month's imprisonment, with hard labour.

Henry Taverner, who was convicted of cruelty to a cat in Drury-lane, appealed to the Middlesex Sessions on Saturday, but the justices affirmed the original sentence, which was two months' imprisonment.

Richard Carter was sentenced at the Mansion House, on Monday, to two months' imprisonment for throwing vitriol on the neck of his late master, Mr. Richardson, a fishmonger, in Gracechurch-street, by whom he had been discharged for intoxication and absenting himself from his work.

At the Mansion House, yesterday week, Minassia Parseck, the Persian who is charged with having been in possession of forged Russian rouble notes, was committed for trial.

Joseph Berry, a member of the "Long Firms," has been charged, at the Surrey Sessions, with attempting to apply his peculiar principles to house building. He had stolen 150 drain pipes for a block of houses he was erecting at Battersea, and, the offence having been proved, along with former convictions, he was sentenced to five years' penal servitude.

Each of the fifteen persons implicated in the charge of "cruelly abusing, ill-treating, and torturing certain cocks," at Weaverham, in Cheshire, has been fined £5 and costs by the Eddisbury bench of magistrates; and a warrant has been granted for the apprehension of a person named Edwards, on whom a summons had not been served.

Charles John Merry, of Cambridge, has been sentenced, at the local assizes, to eighteen months' hard labour, for forging and uttering a cheque in the name of Mr. John Willis Clark, M.A., of Trinity College.

At the Liverpool Police Court, on Monday, Frank Hutchins was sent for trial for having embezzled £4000 belonging to his employers, Messrs. James Gordon and Co.

A double tragedy has been perpetrated at Kingswood, near Warwick, by Joseph Parsons, who is said not to have allowed a woman to enter his cottage for twenty years. Returning home under the influence of drink, he pointed his gun at an old man, Hildrich, who lived with him, and shot him through the heart. Then, reloading the gun, he shot himself. The jury returned a verdict against him of murder and felo de se.

The trial of Sub-Inspector Montgomery, for the murder of Mr. Glasse, cashier of a bank at Newtownstewart, ended yesterday week, the jury returning a verdict of "Guilty;" and the prisoner Montgomery, on being asked if he had anything to say, confessed to the murder. In extenuation he stated that he had a monomania for robbing banks, and that while at Newtownstewart he was insane through drink. He was sentenced to be hanged on the 26th inst.

The sentence of death passed upon Joseph Turnbull, at the Durham Assizes, for the murder of Michael Hagan, has been commuted to penal servitude for life.

An Imperial decree has been issued in Brazil declaring Protestant marriages indissoluble, except by judgment of the competent tribunal.

THE CUSTOM OF DAHOMEY.

The Kingdom of Dahomey, on the west coast of Africa, has usually been regarded as the prey of one of the most bloodthirsty tyrants on earth. It has been supposed that human life is there destroyed wholesale for the mere diversion of the King. Some of these accounts, however, seem to have been much exaggerated. Dark as the King of Dahomey may be in complexion, we are now told that his character is not so black as it has been painted. Mr. J. A. Sketchly has just returned from Dahomey, where for six months he was the guest of the King, and an eyewitness to the grand annual "custom," when the principal human sacrifices take place. Mr. Sketchly is the only white man that has been admitted into the private apartments of his Majesty, by whom he was very hospitably treated.

There is no town of Dahomey. The capital is merely one of the King's palaces, with official residences for his high officers and servants; while the Amazons reside within the palace, in buildings like long barns, immediately outside and surrounding the private apartments of the King. At each of his palaces, of which there are nine, there are about 4000 of these female soldiers. Before Mr. Sketchly was admitted to the palace he went through ceremonials lasting three days, during which he was created a prince of the Royal blood, and was also made a Cabooseer, corresponding to the rank of Duke, and a General of the Army, but not of the Amazons. He was then permitted to see the private apartments, and subsequently the various customs. From his sketch book the illustration we have engraved is taken. In this scene the King appears in one of his palaces, reclining on a wicker-work lounge, which is covered with a striped coloured cloth. He wears only a blue cotton robe, as he considers his dignity so great that he can afford to dress in ordinary clothing. In fact, neither the King nor the members of the Royal family ever dress in gaudy attire. But above his head an umbrella is extended, and this is gorgeously brilliant, with scarlet, blue, and yellow figures cut out with a knife from pieces of velvet, silk, and damask, which are sewn together by the Amazons to form emblematic devices. The bird is indicative of royalty; none but the princes of Dahomey are allowed to adopt it. The top of the umbrella is surmounted by a wooden ornament, representing a man with a bird in his hand. The Amazons are seated around the King. Between them and the people a number of bamboo rods are placed in a line upon the ground; any man who dares to cross one of these rods suffers immediate death. The four conspicuous figures are soldiers bearing on their heads the victims for the next sacrifice, called the Men-hoo-who. These are slaves who have been taken in war; they are generally old men. They are gagged by means of a stick with grass rope wrapped round it, which fills up the whole mouth, and is tied at the back of the head. Their hands are fastened together, and they are firmly bound to baskets, which are carried about on the soldiers' heads. The conical hats which they wear are removed just before decapitation. Their bodies are entirely naked, except that a single cloth is wrapped round the loins. The kneeling figure is Ningar, the Prime Minister, who is receiving a message from the King to deliver to the four men. When the King has finished his speech, Ningar rises and calls upon every one present to hear. He then tells the four victims that they are to carry the message which he delivers to them to the late King, the present King's father, who died about nine years ago; and for their subsistence on the way he gives to each a bottle of rum and a head of cowries. The men are then taken to a platform, about twenty feet high, in an adjacent courtyard; thence they are cast headlong, still bound to the baskets. The executioners then cut off their heads and exhibit them to the people; after which they are placed on wooden altars to ornament the palace gate. When they have remained in that position three days the heads are taken within the palace, where they are cleaned by the Amazons, and used for State drinking-cups, ornaments for drums, flagstaves, and other purposes. The bodies of the victims are seized by the crowd, and dragged through the market-place, where they are subject to every imaginable insult, and are finally thrown into a ditch outside Abomey, where the hyenas soon make short work of them. This ditch is literally strewn with thousands of skeletons; but it is not "Golgotha," for not a single skull is there. The present King, however, is much more merciful than his predecessors were. He is, in reality, endeavouring to reduce the fearful sacrifices of human life which the customs of the country entailed upon him on his accession to the throne. He generously spares the lives of at least half the number of victims intended for sacrifice, and either keeps them inside his own plantations or presents them as soldiers to his head officers. The King rarely beheads any of his own subjects, except for the most heinous offences, such as murder or high treason; and no women are ever killed for sacrifice, although they, like the men, are brought out on the heads of the Amazons, to be carried round the courtyard. The men appear to have no fear of death; and Mr. Sketchly states that he has frequently looked into a man's face, just at the moment when he was about to have his head cut off, and not a muscle seemed to indicate either emotion or fear. All seemed alike to exhibit the most stolid indifference to the awful punishment they were about to undergo.

"AFTER THE VICTORY."

When wild war's deadly blast was blown,
And gentle peace returning,
Wi' many a sweet babe fatherless,
And many a widow mourning.

These lines from Burns's "Sodger's Return" are appropriately quoted by Mr. John Faed (brother of the Royal Academician) in connection with the title of the carefully and well-painted picture in the Royal Academy Exhibition which we engrave. The pathos of this picture is too simple, direct, and true, to require further enforcement. As the reader will see at a glance, the scene is laid in a Scotch cottier home; the period may be that, say, of the Crimean War or Indian Mutiny; and the head of this humble house is away "fighting," as is the phrase—too often a mere figure of speech misused—"for his country." News of the absent one, long looked for, perhaps, and certainly awaited with yearning love and boding anxiety, at length arrives. The letter (not in the familiar handwriting) proclaims a victory, but it also announces the husband, father, and son in the list of slain. The blow that laid the poor soldier low now pierces two other hearts far away. What is the glorious victory to them? Death on the field is merciful compared to their present agony and future sorrow. Ah! when will war, with all its shallow sophistry of pretended glory, with all its really murderous cowardice, with all its wanton waste, and cruel ravage, be no longer sought to aggrandise a selfish despot, bigot priest, or insensate people? Southey's admirable verses on the "Battle of Blenheim" might be read with advantage as a commentary on this touching picture.

Special telegraphic reports from the agricultural districts of England are generally favourable to the hopes of an early and plentiful harvest.

VICTIMS OF THE MEN-HOO-WHO, DAKOMBY.

"AFTER THE VICTORY," BY J. FAED.
IN THE EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

The strongest Ministry that ever existed (so used to run the cry) is fast becoming decidedly weak, as much from discordant elements within as from outward assaults. In the present week, and especially during two particular days of it, the Government has had a rather unpleasant time of it; and the disturbing cause has unquestionably been the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Long ago, and when he was a much more subordinate functionary than he is now, it was said of Mr. Lowe that there was nothing he touched that he did not disturb and agitate, and that his presumed originality in matters of administration was only creative of meddle and muddle. Just at present his mischievous activity has been curiously illustrated, and it has become apparent that he desires to make the Treasury not merely a controlling power in matters of finance, but an executive force over any department the chief of which will submit to him. On a day this week there came on, under the auspices of Mr. Cross, the discussion of that which is known as the "Financial Scandal" in the Post Office; which being interpreted means that, at the instance of the Director of Telegraphs, a very large sum had been applied to the use of that department without due authorisation. When it came to Mr. Monsell's turn to give his answer to the heavy impeachment of Mr. Cross, he presented himself in such pitiable guise, and his aspect was so mournful, that the whole House was melted; and as he, in tones pitched high, with evident effort and with a desperate candour confessed the offence, and by way of avoidance as far as he himself was concerned, declared that as regarded the Post Office proper he was master and supreme, but in reference to the telegraphs the Treasury had taken up that section of the department, and held counsel with its secretary without reference to him at all, everybody forgave him, and sympathised with one who was the mere victim of his amiable simplicity. Of course, there was only one idea, and that was of Mr. Lowe standing behind and over-shadowing the department, much in the way in which the spectre huntsman, Zamiel, in the opera of "Der Freischütz," hangs over the doomed Adolph of the story. The speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer himself was mildly delivered, but it was full of bitter suggestion as to the real authorship of the "scandal," and though, under any circumstances, he would have met with no sympathy—that would be impossible, in any case—it made an unfavourable impression. In the event, the Government was only too glad to ride off upon an amendment brought forward by a friend, but which only diluted the censure which was contained in the original motion, and all that was achieved was a lucky escape from defeat.

This occurred at a morning sitting; and on the same evening there came on the report of the last Supply of the Session, the passing of which was desirable, as from that point the day of prorogation could be fixed. But preliminary to that there arose one of those grievances of Government employés with which the House is now constantly flooded; and, though the point in question was but, so to speak, a twopenny-halfpenny one, its supporters were anxious to get from Mr. Lowe a word on the subject. He, however, refused to open his mouth. Again and again he was adjured to say something, but he remained obstinately reticent; and the House, justly enraged at such contemptuous treatment, eagerly adopted a motion for the adjournment of the debate; and Ministers, seeing obviously that it would be carried in spite of them, offered no opposition, and thus the report of Supply was postponed till the following day, and practically that dreadful course was resorted to of "stopping the supplies"—for twenty-four hours. During this scene Mr. Gladstone was absent (unhappily, from indisposition), but next morning he appeared, and, alluding to the event of the night before, hinted that things would have gone differently if he had been there, and insinuated that Mr. Lowe ought not to be treated as an ordinary mortal, and therefore he hoped that he might be forgiven, that Report of Supply would be passed, and prolongation of the Session be avoided.

As it proved, however, Mr. Lowe was again to be the hero of as remarkable a scene as has been for a long time witnessed in the House. While the clerk at the table was calling over the different votes in the Report of Supply for confirmation, he came to one which provided for the creation of an embankment of the Thames hard by the Victoria Tower of the Palace of Westminster. Thereupon, up jumped Mr. Bouverie, in what may be called his "stormy petrel" manner, and sternly pointed out that the Chief Commissioner of Works, to whose department this matter belonged, had, on a former occasion, repudiated any responsibility as to this vote, which was none of his and was opposed to his views on the subject, and Mr. Bouverie demanded who was responsible for it. At once there went through the House, as it were, by electricity, a conviction that here "was Lowe again." And so it proved, for Mr. Ayrton, rising from the side of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in a deliberate manner, and with scarce covert sarcasm, declared that the Treasury (the noun of multitude being a euphemism, inasmuch as Mr. Lowe is himself alone the Treasury) had overruled him and altered his Estimates, and therefore nothing would induce him to accept any responsibility in the matter. It was an extraordinary exhibition, and the effect produced on the House was considerable, everyone seeing that this was only a repetition of the "meddle and muddle" in the Post Office case. Again Mr. Gladstone had to rise and defend his Chancellor of the Exchequer (which he did gingerly) against his Chief Commissioner of Works; and he mildly rebuked Mr. Ayrton, and insinuated that, in this particular case, the change in the Estimate was if the suggestion, not the deed of Mr. Lowe, but of the Government as a whole. What need to tell of the quips and cranks, and jests more or less bitter, which were fired off from all parts of the House; even Mr. Ward Hunt being ponderously jocose, and making a palpable hit when he declared that it was clear that the Treasury, as personified by Mr. Lowe, and her Majesty's Board of Works, embodied in Mr. Ayrton, were not on speaking terms? The balance of opinion seemed to be that, notwithstanding the little scolding of him by the Premier, Mr. Ayrton had the best of the dispute; while some cynical people thought that ever since the ludicrous episode of the "match tax" Mr. Lowe's good fortune has forsaken him, and that, as one who troubleth the Government, and especially harasses the Prime Minister, his obvious refuge is to resign his office.

The business which has been before the Commons has been literally multitudinous, and the length of the sittings so long, that the divisions of day and night have been lost, and merged in each other. Out of the vast variety of incidents there may be singled one which possessed a special interest in itself and was made more special by a supplemental event. One day there came on a measure entitled the Crown Private Estates Bill; no matter what was its purport; but it served as a peg on which to hang a discussion on the delicate subject of the revenues of the Crown. Things looked ominous, inasmuch as Sir Charles Dilke had a notice on the paper, and might be expected to reproduce his prolixity at Derby and the speech in the House which caused so tremendous a row. However, the spirit which animated those efforts of his to place himself on a pinnacle of Republicanism seems to have dwindled within him; and now, in a manner that was so bland that it might be called courtier-like, he signified that he would not bring on his motion, but would embody it in a clause. The speech in which he moved the clause was as simple and unrousing as if he had been suggesting that the word "or" should be substituted for the word "and" in a clause—an amendment by no means unfrequent—and he went meekly to a division which showed that his following on the question of the revision of the Royal revenues has increased from three, at which it stood on the occasion of his great demonstration two years ago, to seventeen now, the "tellers" being included in both instances. A new critic, in word and action, on this subject of the revenues of the Crown arose on this occasion in the person of Mr. Dickinson, who is fond of uttering long soliloquies in empty Houses at unhal-lowed hours in the mornings; and he sought to dive into what are called the mysteries of the Civil List and the private property of the Sovereign with no little persistence and no success. It was fortunate that he and Sir Charles Dilke—who, by-the-way, were aided in a ponderously gambolling way by the ineffable Mr. Anderson—did not succeed in rousing any antagonistic feeling in the House in the matter of Royal endowments, because it might have happened that the proposal for an increased dotation to the Duke of Edinburgh on his marriage might not have been received with such unanimity and cordiality, as it was; for the opposition of Mr. Peter Taylor did not count for much, inasmuch as it partook a great deal of the character of his other attempts at changing things to the standard of his own eccentric ideas, and had about it an air of drollery which was intensified in proportion to his efforts to seem serious.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Questions were answered, yesterday week, relative to pebble powder and the robbery of arms at Bandon. The Conveyancing (Scotland) Bill and several others passed the final stage. The Earl of Kimberley moved the second reading of the Rating (Liability and Value) Bill, and protested against its rejection. Lord Henniker moved that it be read the second time that day six months. A long discussion followed, in which the Duke of Richmond, Lord Salisbury, and others supported the amendment, on the ground that the bill was only a fragment of a large scheme which they desired to know more about, and that there was now no time to consider it. Lord Granville appealed to the House to pass the bill, pointing out the time devoted to it by the other House, but his appeal was in vain, and the bill was thrown out by 59 votes against 43.

A Message from the Crown announcing the marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh was delivered by Lord Granville on Monday. The House was officially informed that her Majesty declined to comply with their prayer asking for the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the grievances of the officers of the Army, but was desirous that the matter should be carefully inquired into. Earl Granville stated that Sir Bartle Frere's recommendations as to the appointment of consular agents in the Portuguese dominions on the east coast of Africa, and the best mode of disposing of slaves captured by English men-of-war, were under the consideration of the Government. The subjects of the inspection of weights and measures and the condition of Achén in the Dutch colony of Sumatra were discussed.

On the motion of Lord Granville, seconded by Lord Salisbury, an Address, in answer to the Message of her Majesty announcing the approaching marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh, was agreed to unanimously on Tuesday. Their Lordships signified their readiness to agree to any provision that the Commons might make to assist the Royal couple to establish and maintain a household suitable to their rank. The other principal business was the second reading of the Education Act Amendment Bill.

On Thursday the Commons' amendments to the Lords' amendments in the Supreme Court of Judicature Bill were considered and agreed to. The Penalties (Ireland) Bill, the Elementary Education Act Amendment Bill, and the Lanchester Coroners Bill severally passed through Committee; and the following bills were read the second time—viz., Endowed Schools Act (1869) Amendment, Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment, Defence Acts Amendment, and the Conspiracy Law Amendment Bills.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Yesterday week the Crown Private Estates Bill was got through Committee, the Education Act Amendment Bill was read the third time and passed, and some progress was made with the Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment Bill in Committee. In the evening sitting a long discussion took place regarding English officers in India, but it led to no result. Mr. Vernon Harcourt called attention to a grievance of the owners of beerhouses under the valuation sections of the Licensing Act.

A Message from the Queen was read to the House on Monday, intimating that her Majesty had given her consent to the proposed marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh with Marie Alexandrovna of Russia, and thought it proper to communicate the fact. Lord Enfield, in reply to Mr. Callan, stated that, although Carlist bands had overrun a large portion of the north of Spain, they had not become sufficiently powerful to be entitled to recognition as belligerents. The President of the Board of Trade was very severe in his remarks on Mr. Plimsoll's charges against certain officials in that department whose names he had not given up, and expressed a hope that the correspondence on the subject would be moved for. The officials of the telegraph department of the Post Office have pronounced against Mr. Alderman Lawrence's proposal that the sender of a telegraph message should be entitled to receive a reply not exceeding ten words for sixpence. On the vote of £2,145,342 for the Post Office, Mr. Monsell stated that he had withdrawn the new regulation for the registration of letters so far as bank-notes and postage-stamps are concerned, but would enforce it in the case of letters containing watches or jewellery.

Amid the cheers of the House, on Tuesday, Mr. Gladstone (who has only partially recovered from his slight indisposition) proposed an annual grant of £10,000, to be settled on the Duke of Edinburgh and the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia during the life of his Royal Highness, with a provision of £6000 a year to the Grand Duchess in the event of her surviving her husband. As Parliament voted an annuity of £15,000 to the Duke of Edinburgh on his coming of age, the new grant will raise the amount of his allowance to £25,000 a year—a provision which, said Mr. Gladstone, "while it does not err on the side of parsimony, certainly does not err on the side of excess." Mr. Gladstone referred to the circumstance that this was a marriage of affection, and solemnly expressed his trust that the day had gone by when Royal personages connected with this country were required to enter into matrimonial engagements "without the consecrating element of personal attachment," which, he went on to say, was "the solemn basis on which this union was founded." The proposal of the Government, which was seconded by Mr. Ward Hunt, was warmly received in the House of Commons; but

Mr. P. A. Taylor gave notice that he would oppose the second reading of the bill which is to give effect to the resolution. A motion of Mr. Cross, censuring the Government for the alleged misappropriation of funds by the Post Office, was, after a lively debate, rejected by 161 against 111. The Telegraph Bill was passed through Committee, as was the Railway Regulation Bill. The Lords' amendments to the Conveyancing (Scotland) Bill were considered, and, with certain modifications, agreed to. The Expiring Laws Continuance Bill passed through Committee, as did the Gas and Waterworks Facilities Act (1870) Amendment Bill.

In response to the resolutions relating to the approaching marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh, agreed to on Tuesday, a message from her Majesty was brought up at Wednesday morning's sitting by the chairman of Committees, Mr. Bonham-Carter, and a bill to give effect to the resolutions was ordered to be prepared. At a later stage the bill was read the first time. An assurance was given by Mr. Gladstone that the case of clerks in the Custom House, which had been discussed on the previous evening, would be inquired into. The report of Supply was resumed, and, on a vote for embankment and buildings on the Thames by the Houses of Parliament, it was brought out that Mr. Ayrton differed with the Treasury as to the estimate; and an animated discussion ensued on the question whether the Treasury could overrule other departments in their executive functions—in the course of which Mr. Gladstone laid down that in the present instance it was the whole Government, and not the Treasury alone, which had overborne the Commissioner of Works. This vote and the remaining votes were eventually sanctioned. On a resolution voting £10,000 for Dover Harbour the Government narrowly escaped a defeat, the motion having only been carried by a majority of 61 against 60. The adjourned debate on the second reading of the Factory Acts Amendment Bill occupied a great part of the remainder of the sitting. The following bills were read the third time and passed:—Expiring Laws Continuance Bill, Railway Regulation Bill, Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force Bill, Slave Trade (Consolidated) Bill, Constabulary Force (Ireland) Bill, Local Government Provisional Orders (No. 6) Bill, Statute Law Revision Bill, and Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland) Bill.

On Thursday Mr. Otway gave notice that early next Session, unless the Government in the meantime announced their intention of dealing with the subject, he would move for leave to bring in a bill to shorten the duration of Parliament. In reply to Mr. Bowring, Mr. Ayrton said it was true that for some time past the surface of the frescoes of Mr. Macleise and Mr. Herbert in the Houses of Parliament had presented an appearance which detracted very much from their effect, but the exact cause of the appearance had not been ascertained. He had consulted several persons and an eminent Academician had come to the conclusion that the appearance was a mere efflorescence in the surface of the picture which could be removed. He was now arranging for the assistance of a picture-cleaner who was best qualified for the work. Mr. Gladstone said he hoped the prorogation would take place on Tuesday. Mr. Fawcett gave notice that, if the hon. member for Sheffield was allowed to have to-morrow, he would, on one of the stages of the Appropriation Bill, call attention to the way the Government conducted the business of the House. Mr. Gladstone moved the second reading of the Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity Bill. Mr. P. A. Taylor moved that the bill be read the second time that day month. He asked that the people should be told on what principle these Royal grants were founded, and how far they were to go. As the Crown could now hold private property, the Government were bound to show the necessity for this grant. It had been stated that the large economies which had been made of late in the Civil List had been paid over to the privy purse, and it was reported that the Crown had amassed enormous sums within the last few years. Looking to the Crimean War, and what had since been given up, he thought we lost more by diplomacy than we gained by force of arms, and it was doubtful whether the real interests of this country would be advanced by an alliance of our Royal family with the Colossus of the East, whose general purposes were rather at variance than in harmony with our own. The necessity of this grant was not shown, as the Duke of Edinburgh had already £15,000 per annum; and he looked upon it as unconstitutional and dangerous for the Prime Minister to intimate that the incomes of their Royal Highnesses should be put on the same basis as the wealthiest classes in society. The most remarkable feature was that this demand was made by an "economical" Government. He protested against the measure, which was discreditable to the Government which brought it forward, to the House which passed it, and no particular credit to the Prince who accepted it (Hear, hear). Mr. Anderson seconded the amendment. The discussion was continued by Colonel North, Mr. Bouverie, and Mr. Gladstone—all of whom were in favour of the bill. On a division, the second reading was carried by 162, against 18.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Bank of England directors on Thursday reduced the rate of discount to 3½ per cent.

Mr. Gladstone, who has been unwell, was able to attend a Cabinet Council held in Downing-street on Wednesday.

Dr. Frankland has a generally favourable account to give of the metropolitan water supply in his July report.

At a fire in Lincoln-court, Great Wild-street, on Monday night, a poor woman named Donovan, who had locked herself in her room, was burnt to death.

The Company of Mercers has presented a further donation of one hundred guineas to the Royal School for Daughters of Officers of the Army.

The Royal Polo Club played a match yesterday week, at Lillie Bridge, in aid of the funds of the West London Hospital. There was a good attendance, and the play was excellent.

The British Medical Association, which numbers over 6000 members, will hold its forty-first annual meeting on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, next week, at King's College, under the presidency of Sir William Fergusson, Bart.

Mr. Newton, of the Metropolitan Board of Works, laid, on Saturday last, the foundation-stone of the Western Pumping Station, the last great work of the main-drainage scheme. It is situated between the Victoria railway station and the river, and will provide machinery to raise the sewage of that district into the low-level sewer.

Mr. Forster assisted on Monday at the opening of a new board school in Wilnot-street, Bethnal-green. It is constructed to accommodate over 1500 children, part of a provision for 5000 which the Education Department has authorised in that district. In his opening address Mr. Forster vindicated the school boards, stating that in London the attendance at efficient schools had recently increased by 50,000.

The half-yearly election of girls to the benefits of the National Orphan Home, Ham-common, was held in the London Tavern, on Tuesday, at noon. The report showed that there are 115 inmates in the home, and that, the balance available for current expenses being now very small, subscriptions are most desirable.

The Metropolitan Board of Works has, with a view of concentrating its attention on the formation of the new approach to the Thames Embankment, decided to postpone for a year a number of minor improvements that had been projected. These included the widening of High-street, Camden Town, and Kentish Town-road, and the opening of an improved thoroughfare from London Bridge towards Deptford.

On Tuesday the first nomination in a metropolitan borough under the Parliamentary and Municipal Elections Act took place in the lecture-hall, Greenwich. After some difficulties were surmounted, Mr. Boord, Mr. Pook, and Mr. Robert Coningsby were nominated in the Conservative interest; while Sir John Bennett, Mr. Angerstein, and Mr. Baxter Langley were accepted as proper persons for candidates to represent the Liberal constituency. The polling takes place to-day.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 98,345, of whom 33,058 were in workhouses and 65,287 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the years 1872, 1871, and 1870, these figures show a decrease of 3676, 21,444, and 28,709 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 526; of whom 335 were men, 147 women, and 44 children under sixteen.

The Lord Mayor gave a banquet to her Majesty's Ministers, on Wednesday evening, at the Mansion House. Mr. Gladstone was unable to be present, owing to indisposition, and Earl Granville was prevented attending by official engagements; otherwise the Cabinet and the Liberal party were well represented. The speeches of the evening were delivered by Mr. Cardwell, responding for the Army, Mr. Goschen for the Navy, the Lord Chancellor for her Majesty's Ministers, the Duke of St. Albans for the House of Lords, Mr. Bruce for the House of Commons, and Mr. Lowe for the ladies.

At the weekly meeting of the London School Board, on Wednesday—Mr. C. Reed, M.P., in the chair—a resolution was adopted authorising the borrowing from the Public Works Loan Commissioners the further sum of £250,000 (making £500,000 in all), for the providing of additional school accommodation in the district of the metropolis, the amount to be charged on the school fund and the local rates, and to be repaid, with interest at the rate of £3 10s. per cent per annum, by fifty equal annual instalments. It was also resolved that a letter should be addressed to the Education Department seeking authority to obtain in the same manner and for the same purpose a further sum of £250,000, raising the total to £750,000.

The Lord Mayor laid, last Saturday, the foundation-stone of new baths for the inhabitants of Clapham and Brixton. The site is in Ferndale-road, in close proximity to the Brixton station of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway. There are to be a men's swimming-bath, 150 ft. by 60 ft., and a ladies' swimming-bath, 65 ft. by 30 ft., the entrances to the two being quite separate. There are also to be private warm baths, and a complete set of Turkish baths for both sexes. Financially, the scheme is to be carried out through the union of donations with shares. Sir J. C. Lawrence and Mr. W. M'Arthur, the two members for the borough of Lambeth, and a large number of leading inhabitants of the district, were present.

The third annual exhibition of flowers grown by the poor of Lambeth took place last week in the grounds attached to Lambeth Palace. Eight parishes competed for the prizes, which were distributed in the course of the evening by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The private gardens of the palace, thrown open for the occasion, were very much enjoyed by the poor people of the surrounding neighbourhood.—The fifth Twickenham cottage fruit and vegetable show was celebrated on Thursday week, at Strawberry-hill, under the presidency of the Right Hon. Chichester Fortescue. Not only are there many prizes for flowers, but a special one—a magnificent teapot, the gift of Lady Clay—for the best kept and most economically managed garden in which they are grown.

The Court of Common Council on Monday adopted, without discussion, a report from the Police Committee recommending the distribution of £200 as gratuities among the officers of the force above the rank of sergeant, but not including chief superintendent, in recognition of their services on Thanksgiving Day; and also recommending that the pay of the constables should be thus increased, namely:—Sergeants, 2s. a week; first-class constables, 1s. 6d. a week; and second and third class constables, 1s. a week—being an annual charge of £2396 upon the City police fund.—At a recent meeting of the court Mr. Alderman Cotton offered, on behalf of Sir David Sassoon, of Bombay, who is shortly to receive the freedom of the City, to place at the disposal of the School Committee two scholarships of £50 per annum, or one of £100 per annum. During a discussion on the constitution of the Market Committees, it was stated that on the seven markets now in possession of the City two and a half millions sterling had been expended, and that the annual receipts were £7271 less than the expenses.

The number of births registered in London last week was 2137, and the deaths 1609. The former were 114 and the latter 230 below the average. The Registrar-General reports that "the fatal cases of diarrhoea continue to increase under the influence of the high temperature; from 22, 68, 100, and 205, they further rose to 305 last week, but were 37 below the average number for the corresponding week in the last ten years. Of these 305 deaths referred to diarrhoea, 240 were of infants under one year of age, and 46 more of children between one and five years of age. To simple cholera and choleraic diarrhoea 12 deaths were referred, against 6 and 13 in the two previous weeks; ten were cases of children and two of adults." The deaths from fever, which had been but 20 and 21 in the two preceding weeks, rose to 37 last week, although they were 9 below the average; 6 were certified as typhus, 20 as enteric or typhoid, and 11 as simple continued fever. The registrar of Fulham, in returning a fatal case of typhoid fever in Peterborough-road, remarks that this was the second case in the house within the week, and attributes the disease to "defective drainage, and the waste-pipe of the cistern being connected with the cesspool." There were 31 deaths from measles, 15 from scarlet fever, 8 from diphtheria, 62 from whooping-cough, and not one from smallpox. To different forms of violence 43 deaths were referred. Thirty-four were the result of negligence or accident, including 10 from fractures and contusions, 3 from burns and scalds, 13 from drowning, 1 from poison, and 4 from suffocation. Four cases of suicide, three of infanticide, and one of manslaughter were registered. Three deaths were caused by horses or vehicles in the streets. The mean temperature was 68.8 deg., being 7.2 deg. above the average. On Tuesday the mean was 75.2 deg., or 13.7 deg. above the average. The highest temperature in the shade on Tuesday was 88.7 deg.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

GOODWOOD RACES.

The splendid weather which we have enjoyed up to the time of writing, and the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Cesarewitch and the Cesarevna of Russia, and a large party from Goodwood House, made the lawn at Goodwood as brilliant a spectacle as ever; but it must be confessed that the racing was scarcely as good as we expect at this most pleasant meeting. Proceedings commenced on Tuesday with the Craven Stakes; and Fordham, who was in great force, won very cleverly on Winslow, though he could scarcely have conceded the 28 lb. to Tourbillon over a shorter course. The easy defeat of Wild Myrtle by Chivalrous in the Gratwicke Stakes was one more proof of the miserable form of the Oaks fillies; and, after three successive victories, Fordham had to succumb to French, who ran away with the rich Ham Stakes on Atlantic, a nice colt by Thormanbury—Hurricane, own brother to Atlantic, and the property of Lord Falmouth. The Stewards' Cup brought out the usual gigantic field; but, after a comparatively short delay at the post, the thirty-one got off to a capital start. It is, of course, impossible to describe fully a race where the changes of position are so frequent, but when they had gone half way Modena (7 st. 4 lb.) took a clear lead, and appeared to be winning easily, till Sister Helen (7 st. 8 lb.) challenged her opposite the stand, and, after a short struggle, secured a two-lengths' victory. Oxford Mixture (7 st.) finished the same distance behind the second. Drummond (8 st. 7 lb.) and Roquefort (8 st. 12 lb.) both performed respectably; but Countryman (7 st. 4 lb.), who was said to have come back to his best form, and was very heavily backed, was about last all the way. Though Ecossais was on the course, he did not start for the Lavant Stakes, M. Lefevre finding a capital substitute in La Courreuse, who had no trouble in disposing of her three opponents.

The attendance was very much larger on Wednesday than on the previous day, and the racing was decidedly better. Four very bad animals, indeed, contested the Drawing-Room Stakes, and, as is generally the case under these circumstances, a wonderfully close struggle resulted, there being only a neck and a head between them all—Capuchin and Jesuit running a dead-heat. The latter secured the run off, though, had there been a strong pace throughout, the result would probably have been reversed. Backers received a terrible blow in the Findon Stakes, in which Lemnos sustained his first defeat. He looked very well, and galloped with great freedom; but possibly the distance was a little farther than he cared for, as the Thunderbolts are not remarkable for their stamina. Be this as it may, Glenalmond, the newly-named Blair Athol-Coimbra colt, won with consummate ease. He came out with a great reputation, but had twice previously disappointed his backers. It will be remembered that his own brother, a yearling, was recently sold by the Cobham Stud Company for 2000 gs. All the nineteen coloured on the card came to the post for the Goodwood Stakes—a remarkable circumstance, which we do not remember in connection with any other great race. A capital start was effected at the second attempt, and the sight of the large field dashing past the stand was exceedingly pretty. Wolfhall (7 st. 11 lb.) made most of the running at a cracking pace, which effectually settled most of his opponents—and also himself—before they got into the straight. Hesselden (5 st. 12 lb.) looked very formidable till a little below the distance, and then Uhlán (8 st. 8 lb.) and the Hippia filly (6 st. 2 lb.) drew away from the rest and ran a slashing race home, the latter just failing to get up, and sustaining a head defeat. By this victory Uhlán has proved himself to be one of the best stayers in England, and if he goes on improving at the rate that he has done for the last few months, our cup horses will have to look to their laurels. The Colonel showed even more speed than usual in the Bognor Stakes, as Eve and Mr. Winkle had no chance at all with him.

On Thursday Flageolet won the Cup by thirty lengths—Favonius being second and Cremorne third. Only these three started.

Another of Mr. W. G. Grace's gigantic scores completely spoilt the match between North and South, which was played at the Oval last week. That wonderful batsman made 192 (not out), but it must be mentioned that he gave two chances which were not accepted. R. Humphrey (41) was the only other Southerner who made any stand, but the total of 311 was altogether too much for the Northerners, who were beaten by 58 runs, with an innings to spare, Wild's 51 being the only large contribution. A close and exciting match between Kent and Surrey, which was played on Monday and Tuesday last, resulted in a victory for the former by two wickets. No large scores were made on either side. Gloucestershire has beaten Yorkshire by six wickets at Sheffield, the match being played for the benefit of J. Rowbotham. For the winners Mr. Townsend (88) and Mr. W. G. Grace (79) did best; while Smith (27 and 34) and A. Greenwood (23 and 89) fought hard for Yorkshire.

A skiff-match between Harry Kelley (ex-champion) and James Taylor for £400 was rowed on Monday night over the champion course at Newcastle-on-Tyne. Taylor was soon overhauled, and never regained the lead, Kelley coming in first by 150 yards.

At the Royal Western Yacht Club Regatta at Queenstown, on Wednesday, Mr. Ashbury's Iona won the Queen's Cup.

Sir Joseph Whitworth has offered prizes of the value of £100, to be awarded by the Society of Arts, for the best essays on the "Advantages that would be likely to arise if railway companies and limited companies generally were each to establish a savings bank for the working classes in their employ."

In the description, in another page, of the steam-tramway between Lisbon and Cintra, opened for traffic on the 3rd ult., it should have been mentioned that the Duke of Saldanha, Portuguese Minister in London, is president of the Lisbon Tramway Company; and the contractors are Messrs. Edwin Clark, Punchard, and Co. The engineer is Mr. Trevethick.

The Gloucestershire Agricultural Show was held on Tuesday. The shorthorn judges (Mr. Doig, of Buckingham, and Mr. Savidge, of Chipping Norton) had great difficulty in deciding which of the first animals in the several classes was deserving of the hundred-guinea cup for the best shorthorn in the show. Ultimately, it was given to a five-year roan cow shown by Mr. Outhwaite, of Cullerick, Yorkshire.

The Select Committee on Imprisonment for Debt has reported that the power of commitment as now exercised by county court judges is very uncertain and unequal in its effects. With a view to its supersession, it is recommended that the provisions of the Debtors' Act of 1869 relating to fraudulent debtors should be revised, and extended to persons against whom an order on a debtor summons may be issued.

FINE ARTS.

In Committee of Supply, the House of Commons this week voted £27,800 to complete the sum required for the new Courts of Justice. In answer to a question by Mr. Bentinck, Mr. Ayrton said that in the course of a few weeks (the Government having, as already announced, accepted a tender for the construction of the works) he expected that the contract for the execution of the works would be completed. It was intended to adhere very strictly to the ["amended"] designs of Mr. Street. The groined stone roof to the large hall is to be retained, with the thick walls and massive buttresses such a roof will entail. The rumour that this feature would be suppressed is therefore disposed of. The vote of £27,000 for the purchase of the Castellani Collection for the British Museum was also agreed to. An inquiry has been made in the House whether there is any objection to submit the plans of the Natural History Museum to the inspection of the public, or photographs of them. Mr. Ayrton replied that the copying of plans would involve time and expense. The remark hardly, however, applies to the simple photographs asked for. The First Commissioner of Works added that the plans had been slightly altered by the architect since they were first submitted to the House. But it is not easy to reconcile this statement with the fact that Mr. Waterhouse's original estimate was cut down by about one third. Perhaps no great public building was ever ordered by Government respecting the designs for which the public has been kept so much in the dark as this Natural History Museum at South Kensington. The introduction of a supplemental vote of £3500 for the acquisition of land for an extension of the Thames Embankment next the Victoria Tower, so as to reduce the danger from fire occurring in the present contiguous buildings, led to the exposure to the House by Mr. Ayrton of an unseemly feud between himself, as First Commissioner, and the Treasury, and to the interposition of Mr. Gladstone, who defined Ministerial responsibility in a sense adverse to his colleague, Mr. Ayrton. This is not the place, however, to discuss the political bearings of this almost unprecedented squabble. Suffice it to say that the vote was passed, but the expenditure is to be strictly limited to the embankment scheme: the Treasury had proposed to erect Government offices there. The other votes relating to public buildings and art, being of the usual character, raised little discussion.

We are glad to be able to announce that Mr. Foley has completed the model of the statue (to be in bronze-gilt) of the Prince Consort for the National Memorial in Hyde Park; the work is therefore ready for casting. We reserve criticism till our remarks may be tested by comparison with the work in situ. We may venture, however, to predict that this most difficult work will sustain the sculptor's great reputation.

A testimonial to Baroness Burdett-Coutts was presented to her Ladyship, at her residence, Holly Lodge, Highgate, on Saturday last, from the working classes chiefly of Bethnal-green and Spitalfields—districts which have been so largely benefited by her munificence. There were over 2000 subscribers to the testimonial, which took the form (at the desire of the Baroness) of a painting by Mr. Sydney Hodges, containing portraits of six members of the testimonial committee, and representing them at a meeting in the committee-room of Columbia Market.

Messrs Ferguson and Galton's report on the Wellington Monument at St. Paul's Cathedral states that if the present rate of progress is to be maintained there will not be much hope of the work being finished by the end of 1874.

It has been decided that the collection of works of deceased British artists to be formed in connection with the London International Exhibition of next year shall consist of works by the following artists—Painters in Oil: J. Constable, R.A., Augustus Egg, R.A., David Roberts, R.A., David Wilkie, R.A. Painters in Water Colours: J. Coney, J. S. Cotman, F. MacKenzie, S. Prout, A. Pugin, J. M. W. Turner, R.A. (architecture only), and C. Wild. Owners of pictures by these artists are invited to intimate their willingness to lend them to her Majesty's Commissioners.

The award of prizes to art-students in the ladies' division of the Crystal Palace School of Art, Science, and Literature was made on Saturday last. The silver medal was given to Miss Edith Farquhar, the certificate of merit to Miss Mary Fownes Turner, and special commendation to Miss Thwaites. The silver medal for sculpture was awarded to Miss Helena Toulon, for a model of the Venus of Milo; the certificate of merit to Miss Macduff. The judges also bestowed commendation on models by both the above-named ladies, as well as on works by Miss Kate Green and Miss Constance Hopcraft.

The French Government has purchased, for about £3260, the fine fresco known as "La Magliana," attributed to Raphael, a work certainly executed from the master's designs and under his superintendence, if not entirely by his own hand.

The death is announced, at the age of eighty-three, of M. Couder, a French historical painter of considerable celebrity in his day, and one of the most successful pupils of David. He executed several of the paintings in the Salle d'Apollon of the Louvre; among others, "Le Soldat de Marathon," "Adam and Eve," "La Lutte d'Hercule et d'Antée." As a mural painter he is also favourably known by his frescoes in St. Germain l'Auxerrois, and one of the principal works in the Madeleine. He is represented in the Luxembourg by his picture "Lévi d'Éphraïm."

Joseph von Keller, the eminent engraver, died lately at Düsseldorf. His principal works were the "Disputa," after Raphael; the "Evangelists," after Overbeck; "Christ sur la Sein de Marie," "Christ au Tombeau," "Les Saintes Femmes," after Ary Scheffer; "La Madone" and "Salvator Mundi," after Deger.

The Duke of Devonshire, in presiding at a farmers' club, on Wednesday, assigned the high price of corn and beef to the general rise in the wages of labour. Touching on the subject of agricultural machinery, he expressed a willingness to aid tenant-farmers by providing such means of fertilisation, the cost to be repaid him by instalments.

The Select Committee of the House of Commons on the Zanzibar mail contracts have presented their report. After an elaborate review of the history of the transactions, they express an opinion that the attempt made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to turn to account the eagerness of the Union company to obtain their proposed western contract was carried too far; and they do not advise the confirmation of that contract.

MOUNTED VOLUNTEER RIFLEMEN SHOOTING AT WIMBLEDON FOR COLONEL LOYD-LINDSAY'S PRIZE.

THE LISBON STEAM-TRAMWAY.

A locomotive steam-engine and carriages of novel construction are used on the line between Lisbon and Cintra, which was opened on the 2nd ult. by an English company, to whom has been granted the right of using this invention in Portugal. It may be understood from a brief description, in aid of our illustration. The line consists of three rails, the centre being made of iron, on the same plan as the usual permanent way of railway lines, only about one half the width. The two outer rails, or, more correctly speaking, "supports" for the driving wheels of the locomotive, consist of planks about nine inches wide. All are intended to be laid down level with the surface of the ordinary roadway. The centre rail guides the locomotive and carriages, and by this means sharp curves are easily turned, and the friction is reduced to a minimum. There are two broad driving wheels, placed centrally on each side, and four guiding wheels. The latter are placed under it, and form the centre of gravity—viz., two in front and two in the rear. In each case they are affixed close after each other. The ordinary working weight of the engine is 13 tons 5 cwt., and of this the driving and support wheels are calculated to sustain a maximum weight of about nine tons, or four tons and a half on each wheel, the balance being distributed over the guiding wheels. But in running over a level road or easy gradients, by means of a hydraulic ram, worked by steam and connected with the central mechanism, the weight on the support wheels can be reduced by one half, and transferred to the centre or guiding wheels, which enables a greater speed to be attained. The distance between the rails from centre to centre is 4 ft. 2 in., and a continuous chain-brake may be applied to the carriages and goods-van which form the train. The carriages are supported and run upon four wheels—viz., two broad outer wheels placed centrally on each side of the carriage, and two middling wheels affixed under its centre at each end, the latter being in this case made to bear nearly the whole weight of the carriage. This new system of traction may be described as a compound of the railway and tramway systems, and might, perhaps, be economically used as a conveyance from railways in rural and other districts to outlying places, where the cost of railways would not admit of their construction from a dividend-paying point of view. The original invention is patented by M. Larmanjat, but has been practically applied in this case by Mr. F. H. Trevithick, engineer, who designed the engines and stock. The carriages, when fully at work, consist of four classes—one first class, carrying sixteen persons; a composition first and second class, carrying eighteen; a third class, carrying twenty; and another class, twenty-four. The brake power is ample, and no difficulty is experienced in stopping the train on any part of the incline. The steepest gradient on the company's system in Portugal is one in twenty-two. The engine is constructed to draw 25 tons, but the weight of an average train with five vehicles attached will be about eighteen tons four cwt. The speed in ordinary working is fifteen miles per hour.

THE OLD BRIDGE AT LEEDS.

THE NEW BRIDGE AT LEEDS.

THE LATE LORD WESTBURY.

The death of this able lawyer, who was Lord High Chancellor of England from June, 1861, to July, 1865, was recorded last week. Sir Richard Bethell, first Lord Westbury, had just completed his seventy-third year. His career was one of brilliant success as a forensic advocate and jurist rather than a statesman. Having won the highest University honours and rewards at Oxford, he began practice as a Chancery barrister in 1823, and soon gained much business, with good reputation. In 1840 he became a Queen's Counsel. He was appointed Solicitor-General by the Aberdeen Government in 1853, and promoted to be Attorney-General in 1856. While conducting the Law Amendment measures of Government in the House of Commons, Sir Richard Bethell was a most efficient member of Parliament. Among the legislative acts with which he was occupied were the Succession Duty Act, the Oxford University Reform Act, the Acts for abolishing the Ecclesiastical Courts and Ecclesiastical Testamentary Courts and for establishing the Court of Probate and Divorce, the Fraudulent Trustee Act, the Charitable Trusts Act, and some improvements in the Equity and Common Law Courts. The Judgeship of the Probate and Divorce Court was offered to Sir Richard Bethell, but was declined by him. He held the Attorney-Generalship till February, 1858, and again in Lord Palmerston's second Administration, from June, 1859, sitting in the House of Commons for Aylesbury and Wolverhampton. On taking the office of Lord Chancellor, he was raised to the Peerage by the title of Baron Westbury. His retirement from the woolstack was occasioned by a Parliamentary censure of the exercise of his patronage in appointing a near relative to be Registrar of the Leeds Bankruptcy Court. Since that time Lord Westbury chiefly attended to the judicial business of the House of Lords, and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. He succeeded in the title by his eldest son, Richard Augustus Bethell. The portrait is engraved from a photograph by Mr. S. A. Walker, Margaret-street, Cavendish-square.

LEEDS BRIDGE.

Leeds New Bridge, which was opened by the Mayor of Leeds on July 9, was commenced in the autumn of 1871. The foundation-stone was laid by the ex-Mayor, Mr. Alderman Barran, on Sept. 20 of that year. It occupies the site of the old Leeds Bridge, which was a stone structure of five arches, and built so far back as 1327, but was twice widened, first in 1730, and again in 1755. In an Act of Parliament passed in that year it was recited that Leeds was "a place of great trade and large extent," and "was inhabited by great numbers of tradesmen, manufacturers, artificers, and others." The probable number of inhabitants of Leeds was then about 30,000, now it is over 260,000. Upon the old bridge was held for a great length of time what Thoresby speaks of as "the memorable cloth market, the very life of these parts of England." The whole of the cloth market business was done on the battlements of the bridge, and on stools or forms under it, on which the clothmakers used to deposit their cloth and expose it for sale. In course of time this arrangement was found to impede the increasing traffic, and the market was removed to Briggate in 1648, and thence to the Cloth Halls. The "Leeds Improvement Act" was obtained by the Corporation in 1869, and in the preamble it was stated that "it had been found that, from the increased and increasing traffic over the bridge, it is entirely inadequate for its present purposes; it is expedient, therefore, that the present bridge should be removed, and a new bridge should be constructed at or near the site thereof." Soon afterwards engineers throughout the country were invited to send in designs for the new bridge, and before the close of the year nearly sixty sets of plans were received. Many of these were of great merit. The Corporation, after consulting with Mr. W. H. Barlow, C.E., awarded the first premium of 100 gs. to the design by Mr. T. Dyne Steel, C.E., of Newport, Monmouthshire, and in 1871 Mr. Steel was instructed by the Corporation to carry out his design. The contract was let to Mr. David Nicholls, of Leeds, Mr. Butler, of Stanningley Ironworks, taking the ironwork. The first work was to provide for the traffic during the construction of the new bridge, and this was accomplished by erecting a substantial wood bridge alongside the old stone structure (also designed by Mr. Dyne Steel), the first pile of which was driven May 11, 1871, and the bridge opened for traffic on July 31 following; and the whole of the heavy traffic, both over and under the bridge, by land and water, has been uninterruptedly carried on during the progress of the works without accident or mishap of any kind. The new bridge is constructed entirely of wrought iron, except the face-girders and parapets, which are of cast iron; and, in place of the old bridge of five arches, we have a graceful single span across the river, built on the skew, with an angle of 1 1/2 deg. The rise at the centre is 13 ft. 3 in. above ordinary water level, and the main span or opening 102 ft. 6 in. Both abutments occupy part of the bed of the river. Through the north abutment there is a 7 ft. circular culvert, and through the south abutment a 10 ft. culvert. To the cast-iron face-girders architectural effect is given by ornamental scrolls introduced into the spandrels. The design of the cast-iron parapets, which are perforated, add largely to the lightness and beauty of the bridge. Embellished with suitable colouring, they have an exceedingly pleasing effect, quite in harmony with the surrounding details. In the centre of each parapet rises a well-designed three-light gas pillar, supplied by Allen and Co., of London, the larger pedestal of which has, on the inner and outer faces, the borough arms moulded in high relief. Ornamental gas pillars, of suitable design, also surmount the piers and abutments. Openings in the cross girders permit of the pipes for gas and water being carried over, and these are made of an oval form at the crown, the depth there of the main ribs being only two feet. Across the bridge there are two 12-foot footways and a roadway 36 feet, paved with Mount Sorrel granite—making a total width between the parapets of 60 feet. The old bridge was only 33 feet. About 270 tons of wrought iron and 130 tons of cast iron are used in the construction of the bridge. The whole work, including approaches, will cost about £50,000. The bridge has been completed under the superintendence of Mr. Dyne Steel, M.I.C.E., the designer of the bridge; Mr. W. H. Barlow, F.R.S., of Westminster, being the consulting engineer.

MOUNTED RIFLEMEN.

One of the most interesting features of the late meeting of the National Rifle Association on Wimbledon-common was the competition for the prizes, of £50 and £25, given by Lieutenant-Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, V.C., and by the Association, to yeomanry cavalry, volunteer light cavalry, or volunteer mounted riflemen, for the best performances in riding, hurdle-jumping, dismounting to shoot, and shooting at ranges of 200 and 500 yards. They had three quarters of a mile to ride, two flights of hurdles to leap, and five shots for each man to fire, all within twelve minutes. This competition took place on Friday, the 18th, and is the subject of an illustration. The performers were sections of five men from each of the corps here named, but two of these corps were doubly represented, each by two sections:—The Warwick Yeomanry, first and second sections; the Dorset Yeomanry, first and second sections; the Royal Bucks Yeomanry Horse Artillery, the 1st Devon Light Horse Volunteers, the Sussex Light Horse Volunteers, the Hampshire Mounted Rifle Volunteers, and the South Nottinghamshire Yeomanry. The Devon, Sussex, and Hampshire men used the short Snider rifles; the others were armed with the Westley-Richards piece. A circular course of the required length was laid out at the Wimbledon end of the common, on which the competitors, starting from a flagstaff, took a flight of hurdles, and then made for the 200-yards firing-point, which was at target 37 on the Queen's range. Here the competitors in alternate files fired the prescribed number of rounds, and then, remounting, galloped along the front of the butts, took another flight of hurdles, and went to the 400-yards firing-point at the first butt, above No. 5 or 6 target, where they completed their firing. Colonel Jenyns, late of the 13th Hussars, now Assistant-Adjutant-General, Horse Guards, was umpire, and a number of officers, including Sir Henry Havelock, witnessed the competition. All the Yeomanry carried their Westley-Richards carbines, which are breech-loaders, but require capping, in buckets slung to the off side of the saddle behind the rider's right leg; but the mounted rifle corps put the butts of their Navy Sniders into a bag slung to the front of the saddle before the rider's leg, the barrel crossing his thigh and the muzzle pointing away to the rear behind his back. The first prize was won by the first section of the Warwick Yeomanry, making 90 points in ten minutes; the Royal Bucks Yeomanry Horse Artillery, which made 87 points in eleven minutes, took the second prize; next in merit were the Devon Light Horse Volunteers, who made 81 points in nine minutes.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SCHOOL-ROOM
PIANOFORTE. In Quadrant or Mahogany Case. Price TWENTY GUINEAS. This instrument combines good quality of tone and excellence of workmanship. It has the merit of standing well in tune, and is capable of enduring hard school practice without going out of order.—Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT
PIANINO, with Folding Keyboard, Check Action, Trichord Treble, in Solid Mahogany or Black Canadian Walnut Case. THIRTY GUINEAS; or in Maple, THIRTY-FIVE GUINEAS. Constructed for Ship's Cabin, to occupy the smallest possible space, and to stand the damp of a sea voyage; the back is strengthened with iron bars and metallic plates, and the whole of the mechanism is of the best quality.—Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

DULCIANA ORGAN HARMONIUM, by Alexandru.—This New Instrument is especially adapted to the Drawing-Room. It has the sweetest tone possible, resembling the soft dulciana stop of the best organs, and, by a new patent air chest, is free from that harshness, and, by 3 stops, oak, 10s.; mahogany, 12s.; rosewood, 14s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ORGAN
HARMONIUMS on the "THREE-YEAR'S" SYSTEM.—These Instruments have the round tone of the organ without the disadvantages of requiring tuning, with much quicker articulation than the American Organ, and at half the cost.
Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-
GUINER ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case, Five Octaves, and Two Treble Boards.
The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured.
The instruments now offered to the public will be found devoid of all that has rendered a reed instrument so objectionable in tone. This and has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and organ-like.
Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.
The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect and without extra cost.

BY THE WAY.

It is difficult to understand why the Postmaster-General should have allowed the promulgation of such a notice as that lately issued on the subject of postage stamps in letters; and it is still more difficult to understand why he should have withdrawn it in consequence of arguments every one of which must have occurred to the officials at St. Martin's-le-Grand. We have not often had to notice a more "amazing" procedure; and, glad as we are of the abandonment of the nonsensical scheme for imposing a double registration fee by reason of a few stamps being inclosed in a letter, we own to a good deal of regret at a new proof of the small wisdom with which public business is managed. Not one single thing has been said, either in the Press or in Parliament, in opposition to the plan, with which Mr. Monsell and his subordinates were not perfectly well acquainted. They knew that the use of postal stamps as currency has become an institution. They knew that stamps are forwarded in charity, for little presents, for small purchases, for advertisements, for answers to inquiries, for the return of communications to journals, for the rectification of excess or insufficiency in payment of bills, and for the thousand-and-one other little businesses of life. Not a scrap or an atom of new information has been given to the Post Office, and yet, after some correspondence, some remonstrances in the papers, and a brief Parliamentary debate, the vexatious menace is done away, with the unwise expression of a belief that some day the public will see things in another light. However, there is an end of the matter, and we only add our hope that the Post Office will accept the situation fairly, and not revenge itself for its defeat by any irritating neglect to take all precautions against the dishonesty of which it makes so much. We believe that there is exaggeration as to this, and we do not believe that all the stamps that are stolen are stolen by the postmen (who have small leisure for prying into letters, and who never see stamps put into them, or receive them before the adhesive matter has hardened), but, be this as it may, the purchase of stamps is a great benefit to the revenue, and the purchaser has a right to all reasonable protection. But when we read that there are 15,000 undirected letters posted yearly, many of them containing money, we think that the mass of carelessness and idleness among us may account for a great deal of loss as regards stamps, and should teach us not to be unduly suspicious of the real "working man," the postman.

Something is to be done, even in Ireland, by perseverance. The Crown officers deserve much credit for the pertinacity which they have displayed in the case of Sub-Inspector Montgomery, the murderer of Mr. Glasse. Two protracted trials were failures, but the third has brought a conviction, and upon this instantly followed a confession, the assassin's cunning, of which so many proofs had been afforded, serving him up to the last moment, and suggesting the only mode by which he might possibly escape the doom he had so richly deserved. As a rule, we have frequently said that we regret confessions (except from a religious point of view), as they are more relied on by weak people than the most logical proofs that can be got together; but in this case it is, perhaps, as well that an ignorant population should know that circumstantial evidence had revealed the truth. The Times observes that the reiteration of assertion (the prisoner's counsel on the second trial having talked for nine hours) had the effect on an Irish jury that the multiplication of proof would have elsewhere; and in a country where such argument can be effective we make allowance for the satisfaction with which the confession of a very artful villain, whose falsehoods were told by the score, has been received. Our satisfaction is that, in the case of a brutal murder for the sake of plunder, justice has at length triumphed.

The originator of this Journal took an Englishman's pride in the Legislative Palace at Westminster, and our pages have presented such elaborate record of the rise and progress of the Houses, and so many pictorial illustrations of their best features, that we seem, as matter of course, to note any improvements that may be wrought in connection with the great edifice. We just mention, therefore, that a vote is asked for the prolonging of the Embankment beyond the Victoria Tower. Upon the space thus to be gained some useful public offices will be reared, and means will be taken to shut entirely away the low buildings which at present disgrace that part of the river bank, but which, it may be hoped, will ere long give place to structures more worthy of such a neighbourhood.

People who composedly read the journals, and solace themselves with breakfast comforts at the same time, have small idea of some of the difficulties in which the column that amuses or excites them may have been prepared. On last Nov. 6 metropolitan folk were entertained with a long and spirited account of festive proceedings at Lewes on the previous night. But they were not aware that the telegraphist who had been specially sent to report had his occupation pleasantly diversified by the Lewes mob, which pitched squibs and crackers at him through the post office window, and compelled him to divide his time between flashing his words to London and putting out the fires which the rabble kept kindling in the office by the agreeable means in question. In a small way, he was a sort of martyr at the stake, proclaiming the truth from amid the flames. It is well that such a thing should be known, and it might also be well to know what the Lewes police were about, instead of protecting a gentleman engaged at work in one of her Majesty's offices.

Chancery was once so much of a spiritual court that its traditions should have earned it the respect of Father Ignatius, who is pleased to refer everything to theological authority. Secularised as it has become, it is still too strong for that weak minded but obstinate ornament of the mock-turtle church. He chose to administer monastic vows to a silly boy, and to set at naught, as long as it was at all safe to do so, the admonitions of the Court of Chancery. But the law, if long-suffering, is strong, and Ignatius has had to submit. The twopenny vows were blown away like dandelion tufts by Sir R. Malins, the boy was admonished and handed over to his parents, and the Father was admonished too, and one of his friends actually wrote to the papers to say that Ignatius is thankful for the instruction he has received. We are glad that he is in so humble a frame of mind. We should regret that he had also been exposed to the insults of a mob, because, whether a mob is right or wrong, it is not to be encouraged in violence; but we imagine that the account of the people's rudeness may have been exaggerated. The Father and his friend say that the crowd was blasphemous; but what they might think deserving of that name might seem to Englishmen only a rough way of describing the conduct of an imitation monk who had administered to a runaway boy vows which he had no right to administer to anybody. A coarse word or so from indignant parents might be forgiven—anyhow the "Anglican Confessors" may as well take the hint.

As might have been expected, action has been taken in regard to the circular sent round by Mr. Guildford Onslow on behalf of "the defendant." It is clear that if it be lawful to send such a document to a journal, the journal has a right to make some kind of reply. One paper has answered indignantly. The "appeal" is an attack upon the Government and the prosecution, and is written in a gushing style, with "God forbid!" notes of admiration, italics, and other affecting devices. Mr. Onslow—or a lithographed letter bearing his name—asks for £3000 to enable Castro, alias Orton, to obtain fair play, and requests newspapers to publish the appeal. The Court has declared that the appeal was most improperly worded and must be withdrawn, and Mr. Onslow has made "a humble apology," alleging that he had not read the document which he, literally, indorsed. He will do well to act in a more business-like way in any future proceedings connected with the Orton case.

ARCHÆOLOGY AT EXETER.

The meeting, this week, of the Royal Archaeological Institute at Exeter recalls to mind the local relics of antiquity in that old city and the county of Devon. The Cathedral is, of course, the most imposing monument of architecture; and the view of its west front, in one of our page engravings, will give those who have never visited Exeter a fair notion of its characteristic grace as a Gothic ecclesiastical building. Its history has often been related, and no edifice of this order in provincial England, with the exception of York Minster, is of greater interest. The restorations now in progress, at a total estimated cost of £40,000, under the direction of Sir Gilbert Scott, will give full effect to its beauties.

The ruins of the old Castle at Exeter, properly called Rougemont Castle, are seen in the gardens of a private house in Castle-street, between High-street and the pleasant public walk of Northernhay, upon the top of a steep and lofty bank, surmounted by the old City Wall. Every reader of Shakspeare will remember how Rougemont, a name too much like Richmond, is spoken of by King Richard III. :—

Richmond! When last I was at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy showed me the Castle,
And called it Rougemont; at which name I started,
Because a bard of Ireland told me once
I should not live long after I saw Richmond.

The name is thought to have been derived from the red clay soil of the ground near Exeter. This Castle was built by William the Conqueror, who bestowed it on the husband of his niece Albreda. It was captured and partly burnt by King Stephen, in 1136. The gateway, three bastions, and portions of the rampart are now all that remain, overgrown with luxuriant ivy. The County Sessions House and Assize Courts are built within the Castle Yard. Northernhay is a grove of noble elms.

Powderham Castle, on the west shore of the wide estuary of the Exe, seven miles below Exeter, is the seat of the Earl of Devon, situated in a very extensive park, which is beautifully wooded. The mansion has a stately aspect, but has been so modernised as to lose its original character of a lordly feudal castle. Powderham has belonged to the Courtenay family since early in the fourteenth century.

Ottery St. Mary, a little market town on the river Otter, eleven miles east of Exeter, has a fine old collegiate church of St. Mary and St. Edward, built chiefly by Bishops Bronescombe and Grandison, from 1257 to 1340. This, as well as Powderham and Rougemont Castle, is the subject of one of the small engravings on a page of Devonshire scenes. There is not much else to be remarked of Ottery, but that Coleridge the poet, and his distinguished relatives now living, Sir John Coleridge and Sir John Duke Coleridge, father and son, were natives of this quiet place.

One of the most interesting places on the South Devon coast is Dartmouth, which has a picturesque site on the steep hill overlooking a landlocked harbour or estuary, one of the greatest naval ports of England in the times of our Plantagenet Kings. The towers remaining of Dartmouth Castle belong to the reign of Henry VIII. St. Saviour's Church is a fine cruciform building of the fourteenth century, with rich decorative carvings of wood in the interior, and is worthy of the visitor's inspection.

Not far from that fashionable watering-place Torquay, and under the guardianship of the curator of the Torquay Museum, is the famous limestone cavern, named Kent's Hole, in which were found the bones of the elephant, rhinoceros, lion, wolf, bear, and hyena—beasts of prey that formerly roamed in the gloomy forests of prehistoric Britain. Along with these were found the stone arrow-heads, spear-heads, and knives of a forgotten race of people. The roof of this cavern, or series of caverns, is hung with stalactites formed by the dripping of water charged with lime.

Between Torquay and Totnes, a few miles inland from the shore of Torbay, are two places of antiquarian interest, Compton Castle, which was a seat of the Pole family; and Berry Pomeroy Castle, which is a grand old ruin. Dartmoor, the great wilderness of granite rocks and barren heath in the interior of Devon, must be described more fully in connection with the military manoeuvres to be performed there. Its "tors" or projecting crags, on the summit of every rising ground, and its curious artificial combinations of huge blocks of stone, as in the cromlech called the Spinster's Rock, ascribed to the Druids or some Celtic agents, give this region a very weird aspect. The moorland villages or little towns were till lately quite out of the reach of the ordinary traffic. Widdicombe-in-the-Moor, with its tall Perpendicular church, finds place among the subjects of our Artist's sketches.

A return, obtained on the motion of Mr. Plimsoll, has been presented to the House of Commons "of the crews of merchant ships who have been committed to prison in the years 1870, 1871, and 1872 for refusing to proceed to sea; showing the number of men in each case, the name of the ship, and the term of imprisonment, together with the reason alleged by the seamen for refusing to go to sea." The total number committed was, it appears, 1638: 1352 in England and Wales, 109 in Scotland, and 177 in Ireland.

The annual Nottingham regatta took place on the river Trent last week. As some valuable prizes were offered, many competitors came from all parts of the country. The Tradesmen's Plate prize, £27 10s., was won easily by Ills, of Kew; the President's Plate, value £20, by the Bedford Argonaut crew; the Vice-President's Plate, by T. V. Brooks, West London Rowing Club; the Mayor's Cup, for senior scullers, was won also by Brooks, of London; and the Corporation Plate, value £50, open to amateurs, by the Sunderland crew. A yacht-race, which brought out half a dozen competitors, was won easily by the Camilla, managed by Captain Goddard, of Lincoln. The canoe-race, over land and water, was won by Tootell, of Nottingham, two others competing.—The Worcester Regatta was held on the Severn last week, under favourable auspices, and drew together a crowded attendance. The chief race of the meeting—the Town Plate, value £30, for four-oared clinker-built boats—brought two crews from Burton, one from Bristol, one from Bath, and one from Cheltenham, besides two local crews. The final heat was rowed off by the Hereford and Cheltenham crews, and was won by the former easily. Other races of an important character made up the card.

Archæology of the Month.

The Royal Archaeological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland this year holds its congress at Exeter; it commenced on the 29th ult., and will occupy up to the following Tuesday, Aug. 3. The president of the meeting is the Earl of Devon, and the following are the presidents of sections:—Antiquities, Mr. O. Morgan, M.P., F.S.A. Architecture, Archdeacon Freeman; vice-president, Mr. Beresford-Hope, M.P., F.S.A. History, Sir John St. Aubyn, M.P. Papers will be read daily, and the excursions include, of course, Dartmoor, which will be visited under the guidance of Mr. G. W. Ormerod, M.A., F.G.S. Amongst other places visited are Totnes, Bury Pomeroy, Compton Castle, Ford Abbey, Powderham Castle, &c.

The Rev. F. Spurrell has described to the Archaeological Institute the stone coffin of Ingelrica, foundress of Hatfield Priory, Essex, which had been found in some restoration works, of twelfth-century date. Mr. Nightingale has also exhibited a damask tablecloth, in which are woven figures of St. George and the Dragon, with the arms of Queen Elizabeth and Anne Boleyn, portrait of Queen Elizabeth, border of point-lace, &c.

Mr. P. Gervais publishes a paper describing the animal remains which have been brought to light by Mr. E. Pietto, during his exploration of the bone cavern of Gourdan, in the Haute Garonne. These remains consist chiefly of the bones of the reindeer, broken by man, and associated with the bones of other mammals and of certain birds and fishes.

The Water-Gate built for York House remains at the south end of Buckingham-street, Strand, though in a ruinous state, the Portland stone ornamentation of the front (though the work of Inigo Jones, Nicholas Stone, and Kearne, the "jarmian") being defaced and much obliterated. It has been proposed to raise the gate and make it an entrance into the garden of the Thames Embankment from Buckingham-street, though it is uncertain by whom this work will be undertaken. The stone-work has still a picturesque appearance, backed by the trees and shrubs on the river-bank.

The residence of the late General Fox, in Addison-road, at the north-west angle of Holland Park, is about to pass into other hands. The gardens and lawns, for the most part planted and laid out by the General himself, face the Uxbridge-road; and here still stand "some of the elms that formed part of the avenue of Holland Park, and under which Addison probably walked and sat."

The North Oxfordshire Archaeological Society, at its annual excursion, have inspected the restored churches of Handborough and Northleigh, and then proceeded to the valley of the River Evenlode, where they viewed the remains of a large Roman villa, with a tessellated pavement, constructed over a hypocaust, the bath still retaining its leaden service pipe. Another Roman villa was discovered near the above about 1713, in the parish of Stonefield, but its site is forgotten.

The restoration of St. Alban's Abbey is still progressing, though we regret to hear that before long it will have to be suspended, as the greater part of the £15,000 collected for repairs has been expended. While the work of restoration is proceeding, the nave of the abbey is temporarily fitted up for Divine service.

The remains of the church and conventual buildings of Louth Park Abbey have been disinterred by Mr. W. Allison, who has laid bare the entire plan of the church, chapter house, cloister-court, &c. In the chapter-house the stone coffins of two of the abbots have been discovered.

The Yorkshire Architectural Society have made an excursion to Doncaster and its neighbourhood, visiting Arksey Church, lately restored; Kirk Sandal Church, and its Norman remains; Barnby Dun Church, the churches of Fishlake, Hartfield, and Doncaster.

The Sheffield Architectural and Archaeological Society, jointly with the Sheffield Naturalists Club, have made an excursion to Bolsterstone and Bradfield, the party managing to see the Badyke, the site of a battle between the ancient Britons and Romans, and the supposed remains of a famous Druidical circle. Bradfield church was inspected, and the Saxon camp near it explored.

According to the Bristol Times, Silbury Hill, Wilts, a mound of little value, excepting an archaeological point of view, although covering an area of 7a. 3p., with a height of 135 ft., has been bought by Sir John Lubbock for £500, and thus saved from destruction.

On the summit of Humbledown Hill, about 300 ft. above the sea level, half a mile west of Bishopwearmouth, in excavating for a reservoir, two sun-dried urns have been discovered, filled with bones and fragments. These urns are supposed to be of ancient British origin, belonging to the Brigantes. Except on the neighbouring heights of Tunstall Hill, and at Trimdon, no instances have occurred in the county of Durham of the finding of urns of a similar description.

The Surrey Archaeological Society have held their annual excursion, meeting at Wallington station, and thence proceeding to Carshalton church, by Merton Abbey, to Merton church, and then to Caesar's Camp at Wimbledon.

In removing a portion of the "old New Inn," in the Old Bailey, and in excavations for new buildings at the printing works of Messrs. Petter and Galpin, at a depth of about twelve feet below the surface, has been discovered a stone coffin, containing human remains. The dimensions are 7 ft. 9 in. long, 2½ ft. wide, and 3 ft. deep. The coffin and remains have been removed to the Corporation Museum, Guildhall.

An interesting tessellated pavement has been discovered, at the depth of seven feet only, on the site of old buildings recently taken down on the north side of Bishopsgate-street Within. The portion exposed comprises the red-brick bordering—a guilloche pattern, with trefoils in red, white, and black, carefully worked in small tesserae, in the usual mortar of pounded brick and lime. It originally formed part of a large and elegant design extending beneath the roadway. Its proximity to the surface indicates a period late in the Roman occupation, the average depth of such remains in this locality being about twelve or thirteen feet. A record of its existence has been made by the London and Middlesex Archaeological Society, but the remains have, unfortunately, been covered in. This discovery has been made near Crosby Hall, and two years ago was made another find opposite; and Roman pavements have at various times been found hereabout in Austinfriars, Wormwood and Old Broad streets, Threadneedle-street, &c.

Near Whitby several fine specimens of Roman weapons, utensils, and implements have recently been dug up on the moors adjoining the Guisborough high road.

The Congress of the British Archaeological Association will be held from Monday, Aug. 18, to Saturday inclusive. The Association will assemble at Cutlers' Hall, Sheffield, then visit the Shrewsbury Monuments in the parish church, and proceed to Sheffield Manor and to Broomhall. The other attractions for the Congress include Beaulieu Priory, Workop Priory, Steatley and Thorpe Salvin; excursions to Roche Abbey and Rotherham Church and Bridge; excursions to Berry Bridge for the Roman Station at Stark, thence to Almondbury and Castle Hill; to Conisborough Castle and Church, Edlington, and Tickill Castle; the remarkable earthworks at Bradfield, Wortley, and Wharfedale Lodge and Chase.

Saint John's Gate has been sold to the English Order of the Knights of St. John, and is to be restored to face an important thoroughfare—viz., the new street now being formed from Old-street to Oxford-street.

The London and Middlesex Archaeological Society have held their general meeting in the Great Hall of Hampton Court Palace, the Rev. F. Hugo describing the manor of Hampton as in Domesday Book, and bringing its history down to the thirteenth century, and next to the sixteenth, when Wolsey pulled down the old manor house, and constructed the palace pretty much as it now appears, though the great hall was the work of Henry VIII. The splendid brickwork of the eastern front is by Sir Christopher Wren, the carvings being mostly the work of Grinling Gibbons.

A very curious paper has been read before the Society of Antiquaries, by the Dean of Westminster, describing the tomb of Richard II. in Westminster Abbey. The details are too interesting for compression here.

The Cambrian Archaeological Association will hold its annual meeting next week at Knighton, in Radnorshire. The president elect, the Hon. Arthur Walsh, M.P., will deliver the inaugural address on Monday evening. There will be excursions on the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th to places of interest in the surrounding neighbourhood, including, of course, Offa's Dyke, which is visible close at hand, and the castles of Wigmore, Clun, Hopton, and Castle-cwm-Arran, the camp of Caractacus, British camps near Llandewy, and Brandon Camp. A museum of antiquities, ornaments, manuscripts, &c., will also be formed.

THE WORK OF THE POST OFFICE.

The Postmaster-General, in his report for 1872, says that the number of post offices in the United Kingdom was increased last year by nearly 300; so that there are now upwards of 12,200, of which nearly 870 are head offices. The number of road letter-boxes was increased by over 700; making a total of nearly 8400. Thus, the whole number of postal receptacles is now upwards of 20,600, as compared with about 14,600 ten years ago, and with little more than 4500 before the establishment of penny postage in 1840. In London alone there are now more than 1500 such receptacles. At nearly 450 places free deliveries have been established for the first time; and at more than 800 other places the deliveries have been extended in their area or increased in number.

The number of letters in 1871, as stated in the last report, was nearly 915,000,000; but since that report was written grave doubts have arisen regarding the accuracy of some of the returns on which the statement was made; and a strict examination has shown that the real number was probably about 870,000,000. Beginning with the last quarter of 1872, such a system of check-counting has now been established as will in future bring to light any considerable error which a postmaster may make in his return. In my next report, therefore, I shall be able to give the number of letters with confidence. The same remarks apply to the numbers of post-cards, newspapers, and book-packets, which were respectively entered in the report for 1871 at 75,000,000, 99,000,000, and 103,000,000.

As on a previous occasion, arrangements were made to provide postal accommodation for the troops assembled last year for the autumnal manoeuvres at the Blandford and Pewsey camps. At these camps 130,000 letters were dispatched, and 200,000 letters, with nearly 3000 newspapers, received.

The number of letters which, owing to wrong addresses and other causes, found their way to the returned letter office did not greatly differ from the number of 1871, being about 3,600,000. Of these about 170,000 were sent back to foreign countries, and of the remainder it was found practicable to re-issue with corrected addresses, or to return to the senders, upwards of 3,000,000, or more than eleven-twelfths. About 83,000 of the undelivered letters contained property of different kinds (being an increase of about ten per cent upon the previous year), and of these more than 300 had no address, although containing coin or bank notes.

Besides the property thus posted, there were 2700 valuable books which, owing to careless packing or weak envelopes, escaped from their covers, but were recorded so as to allow of their being traced if inquired for; and more than 51,000 postage-stamps were found loose in the different post offices.

The total number of letters posted last year without any address was upwards of 15,000, being about 500 more than in the previous year.

In regard to the carelessness and recklessness in posting letters, the Postmaster-General remarks that the heedlessness with which risks are sometimes run is astounding; but of all cases that have come before him, one of the most surprising relates to what is generally regarded as an exemplar of caution and prudence—viz., a Scotch bank, from which an unregistered letter was lately sent, containing an uncrossed cheque for £500, which was stolen and quickly cashed.

Mr. J. D. Marwick, late Town Clerk of Edinburgh, has been presented with his portrait painted in full-length, by Mr. Herdman, R.S.A., as a token of the good wishes which have followed him to Glasgow from a large circle of friends.

Mr. Vernon Harcourt was on Monday present by invitation at a dinner of the Odd Fellows and Foresters of Oxford, the chair being occupied by Mr. A. W. Hall, who is the recognised Conservative candidate at the next election, and who, in proposing "The City Members," paid a high compliment both to Mr. Cardwell and Mr. Harcourt. The latter, in a speech of thanks, observed that the present Parliament has diminished the taxation of the country by three millions, and has also passed, however incompletely, the Judicature Bill.

The 46th Middlesex Volunteers were inspected, last Saturday, by Colonel Shipley, C.B. The full number of men required by Government were present. At the close of the proceedings the inspecting officer desired Lieutenant-Colonel Bennett to express to the regiment his satisfaction with the appearance of the men and the manner in which the several evolutions had been performed.—On the same day the 3rd Middlesex Artillery Volunteers were entertained by one of their officers (Captain Davies) in his beautiful grounds, Little Blake Hall, Wanstead. After some spirited drill on Wanstead Flats, the officers and men, numbering about 400, and about 200 non-military guests (ladies and gentlemen), sat down to a sumptuous dinner in a spacious tent; and this was followed by outdoor entertainments, aided by the services of the regimental band.—On Monday the Berks battalion of volunteers, under Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, marched to Windsor Great Park, and encamped upon Queen Anne's Meadow, near the site of the late review. A detachment of the Hon. Artillery Company arrived at Windsor, on Saturday, with three guns, and have encamped near the Berks battalion.

MUSIC.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The annual concert of the students of this institution took place, on Saturday afternoon, at the Hanover-square Rooms. Pianoforte performances, as heretofore, formed the chief features of the programme; and these again attested the excellence of the system of instruction which prevails at this establishment. Miss Pamphillon in Sir Sterndale Bennett's caprice in E, Mr. Fitton in the first movement of Beethoven's concerto in E flat, Miss Bagelhole in Spohr's quintet with wind instruments, Miss Conolly in the first portion of Schumann's concerto, and Miss Curtis in the two last movements of that of Mendelssohn in D minor—all proved themselves worthy pupils of an institution which has done so much for the advancement of musical art in England.

The vocal performances were above the average of former years, as proved by Misses J. Jones, N. Goode, Beasley, Mayfield, Bagnall, Edouard, and Bolton; and Messrs. D. Thomas, Wadmore, Pope, and Howells in various solo and concerted pieces. Besides the instrumental performances already specified Messrs. Reed and Szczepanowski executed two movements of Spohr's concertante for two violins in B minor with brilliant mechanism, and Mr. Done played Bach's pedal organ fugue in C minor with good command of the instrument.

Specimens of progress in orchestral composition were offered in portions of symphonies by Mr. Roberts, Mrs. Florence Marshall, Mr. Wingham, and Mr. Eaton Fanning.

Between the two divisions of the concert Sir Sterndale Bennett read an address, and Mrs. Gladstone distributed medals as follows:—Female Department—Silver medals: Miss Emily A. Troup, Miss Elizabeth Conolly, Miss Amy E. Turner Burnett, Miss Mary Taylor, Miss Jessie Jones, and Miss N. A. Goode. Bronze medals: Miss Emma Cornish, Miss Isabella W. M'Carty, Miss Eliza J. Hopkins, Miss Emma L. Beasley, Miss Llewellyn Bagnall, Miss Alice Mary Curtis, Miss Lavinia Sheehan, Miss Johanna Ludovici, and Miss Beata Francis. Male Department—Silver medals: Master Harry Walker and Mr. W. A. Howells. Bronze medals: Mr. Frederick Weekes, Mr. Frederick Done, Mr. Bernard E. Elmenhorst, Mr. J. L. Wadmore, and Mr. Henry A. Pope. Other prizes, chiefly books and letters of commendation, were awarded to many students who had distinguished themselves. Mr. W. Macfarren, recently appointed conductor to the establishment, directed most of the performances. The Royal Academy of Music is now in a more flourishing condition, and has a larger number of students, than at any period since its foundation, half a century ago.

The next specialty in London music will be the Promenade Concerts, directed by M. Riviere, to commence on Aug. 16. Mlle. Carlotta Patti, sister of the great prima donna, and Mr. Levey, the well-known performer on the cornet-à-piston, are engaged.

The recent death of Herr Ferdinand David has removed one of the most sterling violinists of the school of which Spohr was the acknowledged head. Herr David was for many years concertmeister at Leipzig, where he was principal violin at the renowned Gewandhaus concerts, and professor at the Conservatoire. He was one of the most intimate friends of Mendelssohn, who wrote for him the fine concerto which almost parallels in value Beethoven's one great work of the kind. It was for Herr David, too, that Mendelssohn added his masterly pianoforte accompaniment to Bach's chaconne for violin solo (in D minor). The deceased violinist produced many excellent compositions for his instrument, besides having edited a valuable collection of pieces by the older writers for it.

THEATRES.

The close of the season causes the announcement of the last nights of Mr. Wilkie Collins's drama of "Man and Wife" at the Prince of Wales's, and the last week of Mr. George Conquest, and the drama of "The Snafell," at the Gaiety.

The Royalty has been opened for three or four nights, nominally for the annual benefit of Mr. Edward Hastings, with three or more new pieces, but really for the trial of a new company previous to a provincial tour. The company is called "Varieties Comedy, Drama, and Burlesque Company." The entertainment commenced with a new drama in one act by Mr. T. W. Speight, entitled "Salt Tears." The story is simple, and somewhat French in its treatment, which we may characterise as neat, and leading up to a pathetic situation on which the curtain falls with effect. At the commencement of the play we find that Ben Briney, an old fisherman (Mr. E. W. Sinclair), has aided in saving the life of Lady Janet Trevor (Miss F. Taylor) and her husband, Sir Harry. The lady takes refuge in Ben's cottage, and, in the end, turns out to be his own daughter. The recognition is brought about by an old salt, Jam Riley, played with great force and discrimination by Mr. J. Bissan. This piece was followed by a burlesque, entitled "The Marble Maiden; or, Zampa in Miniature." The business of this extravaganza is skillfully arranged, so as to be brought within the means of small theatres, and is supported by a respectable company. The author is Mr. G. M. Layton, and the music is selected from Offenbach and Hervé. It adds much to the liveliness of the action. Miss Blanche Carlton, as Zampa, shows much promise; and Mr. Sinclair, in the rôle of Daniele, Zampa's lieutenant, was very amusing. Of the other pieces, including "The Female Iago," we cannot speak at present. If successful in the country, no doubt they will all return to London in due course, and then claim the attention they merit.

Mr. Ryder took his benefit, on Friday week, at the Queen's, when Miss Neilson supported the part of Juliet in Shakespeare's immortal love-tragedy. This eminent artist will shortly return to America.

The Civil Service Commissioners have given notice that an open competition for second-class and supplementary clerkships in the Civil Service will be held in London, Edinburgh, and Dublin, on Tuesday, Oct. 21 next. Preliminary examinations will be held in the same towns on Sept. 5 and 19, and on Oct. 3. No information has yet been given respecting the number of appointments to be competed for.

In connection with the autumn manoeuvres the important experiment of moving cavalry by rail is this year being tried. The transit began last Saturday, when the 6th Dragoon Guards were conveyed in four trains from Farnborough to Exeter. The journey occupied from eight to ten hours. Other regiments for the camp on Dartmoor have followed. The troops at Dartmoor were on Tuesday exercised at brigade drills, and the volunteers also received instruction in tent-pitching.—Considerable progress has been made by the Royal Engineers at Cannock Chase in preparing the ground for the encampment of the two divisions which are to take part in the forthcoming manoeuvres. Wells are being bored to supply water, and roads made to facilitate the movements of troops. A noticeable feature of the operations will be the crossing of the river Trent by means of a pontoon bridge laid down by the A troop Royal Engineers.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH'S MARRIAGE.

Russian papers not being allowed, without special permission, to dilate upon events in the Imperial family, the comments upon the coming marriage are few. There is, however (says the Berlin Correspondent of the Times), no doubt that the announcement of the Royal betrothal has been most sympathetically received at St. Petersburg, both on account of the sincere interest felt in the amiable Princess, and also as an earnest of good relations between the two countries to whom the affianced belong. Her Imperial Highness Princess Maria Alexandrovna is honorary Colonel of the Yamburg Regiment of Uhlans; and her photograph in the uniform of this gallant troop, crapped on head, with the white sultana gracefully hanging down, certainly makes her the most charming officer in the service of all the Russias. It is asserted that the marriage will be celebrated in January, and that Queen Victoria has held out hopes of honouring the ceremony with her presence. Her Majesty's arrival in the Russian capital would certainly be appreciated as one of the most gratifying events in the history of the Court, and perhaps even of the country. It is believed in Russia that Count Schouvaloff, when he visited England a few months ago in order to arrange the Asiatic difficulty, was at the same time commissioned to settle certain preliminary questions incidental to the matrimonial project recently announced.

The following article on the subject is translated by the correspondent quoted from the Globe:—"Notwithstanding his youth, the illustrious betrothed of the Grand Duchess has enriched his mind by long and profitable travelling. When his life was attempted in Australia, as also on other occasions, he showed great courage and uncommon firmness of character. His noble frankness, his brilliant and cultivated intellect, his exceeding amiability and affability, have gained for him the sincere attachment of all those who were fortunate enough to come in contact with him. As the nephew of the reigning Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Prince Alfred is the heir of that duchy, and, after his uncle's death, will be one of the Princes of the German Empire. The news of Prince Alfred's betrothal to the most august daughter of his Majesty the Emperor has been received in England with the utmost joy and satisfaction. The organs of all political parties alike admit that a marriage with the only daughter of the Russian Emperor is the most brilliant match any European Prince could have aspired to. Although not attaching much political importance to this alliance in an age in which national interests are more powerful than dynastic connections, the English papers are in hopes that the event will strengthen the good relations existing between the two largest and most powerful empires of Europe. In point of fact, they look upon the marriage as another pledge of the preservation of peace in Europe. There is no doubt that in all Russia the joyful event excites the same sympathetic feelings and good wishes as in England."

THE LABOUR QUESTION.

The conference which was held between the coalowners and colliers at Cardiff last Saturday resulted in a concession of the statutory ton as the future standard measure, but on condition of a proportionate reduction in wages. The other claim of the men to be paid for small coals was refused, and there is still some apprehension of a lock-out.

On Saturday about 20,000 persons assembled at the Speech-House at Blakeney, on the occasion of the colliers, miners, and ironworkers' demonstration. Four thousand five hundred union men met, having in their procession twenty banners and as many brass bands. The speakers were Messrs. Mountjoy, Forest, and Owen, of Staffordshire; William Brown, of Staffordshire; and William Pickard, of Wigan. A resolution was passed in favour of the weighing clause in the Mines Bill. A vote of confidence in the amalgamated association was carried, as was also a congratulatory resolution on the good relations existing between masters and men in Dean Forest.

A meeting of the File Manufacturers' Association was held at the Cutlers' Hall, Sheffield, yesterday week, when it was resolved to increase the wages of the cutlers and forgers something like 5 per cent.

A large demonstration of miners belonging to the South Yorkshire Miners' Association was held, on Monday, at Barnsley. Nearly 11,000 pitmen walked in procession to the Queen's Recreation Grounds, where a mass meeting was held. It was estimated that nearly 40,000 people assembled to witness the proceedings, which were of a very interesting character. The chief speakers were Mr. Macdonald, Mr. Lloyd Jones, and Mr. Plimsoll. The latter, on rising to support the resolution sympathising with the efforts on behalf of sailors, was loudly cheered.

Fifteen colliers have been fined £5 each by the Rotherham magistrates for breaking their contract with the Holmes Colliery Company. Defendants represented 700 men and boys who struck work at the company's pit because of their pay being insufficient and their lives endangered through the accumulation of gas.

The executive council of the National Agricultural Labourers' Union held a special meeting, on Tuesday, at Leamington, and arranged that, about the 9th inst., Mr. Arch, the president, shall proceed to Ireland and visit the centres where the movement has been inaugurated, accompanied by Mr. Cox, the Belper magistrate, with a view to prevent Irish harvesters unfairly competing with English labourers. Mr. Arch will then proceed to Canada to organise a system of emigration in connection with the union to that Dominion. Mr. Arch has had a conference with an influential American gentleman, who will take a thousand families on his estate, and find land and stock, to be paid for by arrangement. The secretary of the union has announced that 10,000 men can obtain free passages to Queensland, the Queensland Legislature having voted £150,000 for the purposes of introducing farm labourers and other classes of workmen and servants into that colony.—The pleasant little town of Sevenoaks was, on Tuesday, the scene of a fête organised by the committee of the union. There was a large attendance of labourers connected with West Kent, and many of them were accompanied by their wives and children. There are now 1400 labourers enrolled as members in the district.

The progress made in elementary education in the course of the last few years is borne witness to by the exhaustive analysis which the report of the Committee of Council on Education, 1872-3, contains under the heads of supply of accommodation, local organisation, the teaching power employed, attendance, with the means for improving the same, and the instruction of the scholars.

A gentleman and lady, apparently about twenty-five years of age, named Mr. and Mrs. Hall, of London, have been staying at Ilfracombe about six weeks. On Tuesday afternoon, nothing having been seen of them, the room was entered, and they were found nearly dead. Medical assistance was at once obtained, but they are in a doubtful state. The gentleman had first tried to hang himself, and both afterwards swallowed laudanum. Mr. Hall has written messages in Latin, German, and Greek.

THE EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

STATUE OF GENERAL SIR JAMES OUTRAM, FOR CALCUTTA, NOW IN WATERLOO-PLACE, BY J. H. FOLEY, R. A.

Mr. Foley, R.A., has again proved himself one of the very first sculptors of our time, native or foreign. Little as sculpture seems to be appreciated or even understood among us, high as the spirit of partisanship in favour of certain practitioners seems to run, it is universally admitted that the bronze equestrian statue of Sir Jas. Outram, temporarily erected in Waterloo-place, is a work of unrivalled power and originality. The statue, which is considerably beyond lifesize, was executed for subscribers in India, and has been several years in progress, Sir James having sat for the portraiture on his return from India till his departure to the south of France on account of failing health. The present site of the statue, between the Athenæum and the Senior United Service Clubs, is somewhat similar to that of its final destination in Calcutta. It will there be placed opposite the Asiatic Society, and near the principal Government offices and clubs. It will stand near the statue of Lord Hardinge, another chef-d'œuvre of Mr. Foley; and to these will ultimately be joined an equestrian statue of Lord Canning, by the same sculptor. In the present work Mr. Foley has daringly represented a degree of action in the fiery Arab, but more especially in the attitude of the fearless horseman, which has never been attempted, so far as we remember, by any sculptor. The idea, or motive, of the composition is this:—Sir James Outram is heading an attack, or charge, and, finding himself too far in advance, violently reins back his horse's head; the animal, perforce, subjected instantly by the master hand, extends and stiffens the fore leg on the ground to arrest his course in full career, whilst the disengaged leg is retracted and thrown up almost to the chest. At the same moment the General swings round till his right hand, with the hilt of the sabre, rests on the horse's quarter, and his face, which wears a most inspiring expression, combining encouragement and command that will brook no hesitating obedience, looks towards the rear in the supposed direction of his men. This turning backwards of the rider's figure is a most bold innovation. In the Marcus Aurelius, at Rome, in the great equestrian statues of the Middle Ages and Renaissance, and in all modern works of the same kind, the rider's head looks more or less to the front. Mr. Foley has not departed from precedent without having to make some serious sacrifices; but, on the other hand, he has gained, as we think, counterbalancing advantages. Seen from the rear and the left, the grouping is certainly more remarkable for energy than for elegance. But viewed from the right (as we have engraved it), the composition has incomparable spirit, power, and expressiveness. After the tame and lifeless effigies to which we are accustomed, it is an enormous relief to meet with a work of English sculpture eminently original and full of vigour and truth, if not equally satisfactory from every point of view. Even in reference to the abstract principles of monumental sculpture, there is, however, little room for adverse criticism of Mr. Foley's innovation. It is sheer nonsense to pretend that a statue can be equally interesting, and its lines equally agreeable all round; and the noble qualities of this work are appreciable from as wide an area as most works of its class. Moreover, the destined situation of the statue, its associates, and the character of the person represented, alike justify the sculptor's treatment. It will stand, as we have said, opposite the building of the Asiatic Society, as it now stands before the Athenæum. Lord Canning is, we hear, to be represented in repose, as befits a Viceroy. The comparatively slight action of Lord Hardinge is equally suitable to a Commander-in-Chief; whilst the leading characteristics of Sir James Outram, when in the field, were, as in this statue, impetuous heroism and dashing horsemanship. We need hardly add that the modelling and execution of the group throughout are most conscientious and masterly. The statue is to be shipped for Calcutta in a few weeks, and we cannot but regret that a work which would go far to redeem the character of our public monuments should, like the Lord Hardinge and so many other of the finest works of our best sculptor, be lost to this country. A repetition cast would be comparatively inexpensive, and, even in the interests of art alone, it will be a public disgrace if so great an achievement should be suffered to pass from us when with a small effort it might be virtually preserved. We have only to state, in addition, that the statue has been cast in bronze by Messrs. R. Masfield and Co., of Manor-street, Chelsea.

STAMFORD PUBLIC PARK, ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE

STAMFORD PARK, ASHTON.

The busy cotton-manufacturing town of Ashton-under-Lyne, seven or eight miles east of Manchester, is connected by manorial and territorial proprietorship with the Earl of Stamford and Warrington (Grey of Groby), who has an "Old Hall," with a feudal dungeon, adjacent to the town. His Lordship has made the town a liberal gift of some twenty-five acres of valuable land, with the remission of a chief rent upon other land, towards the formation of a public park for the people. The effort to obtain such a park began with the bequest of £300 a year for that purpose by the late Mr. Samuel Oldham, who died in 1858, and it has been most actively promoted by Mr. J. R. Coulthart, who was, if we mistake not, lately Mayor of the borough; while there is also a Mayor of the manor, in the person of Mr. J. Fletcher. Large donations have been made by Mr. F. Astley and others, and a fair amount has been raised by subscription among the working classes. The park is made of ground adjoining Highfield House, lately occupied by Mr. A. Harrison, which is shown in our view. The opening ceremony took place on Saturday, the 12th inst., which was observed as a general town holiday. There was a procession through Katherine-street, Richmond-street, Chester-square, and Stamford-street, in which some of the Town Council of Ashton, the magistrates, the clergy, and many of the inhabitants, with Mr. T. W. Mellor, M.P., Mr. Coulthart, Mr. H. Hall, and the Mayor of the manor, with the Mayor of Stalybridge, bore the leading parts, followed by the trades and friendly societies. At Highfield House they were met by the Earl and Countess, Mr. Francis Astley, lord of the manor of Dukinfield, and Sir Willoughby Jones. The members of the park committee, headed by Mr. George Mellor, presented an address to his Lordship, as did also Mr. Coulthart, for the inhabitants of Ashton, and Mr. R. Bates, the Mayor of Stalybridge, for that neighbouring borough. The Earl of Stamford and Warrington made an appropriate reply, and declared the park open. These proceedings were accompanied with singing and prayer. There was a banquet in the volunteers' drill-shed that evening.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

"The Raising of Lazarus," an oratorio by J. F. Barnett, has been published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co., in that convenient large octavo form which has lately been so generally adopted for works intended for wide circulation. Of the composition now referred to we spoke in some detail on the recent occasion of its first performance in public, at St. James's Hall, and therefore need now only record its appearance in print, in a handsome edition, at a moderate price, that brings it within general reach.

Messrs. Cramer and Co. have been contributing rather largely of late to the stock of pianoforte music. From Mr. T. M. Mudie we have two very pleasant pieces—a "Serenade" and "Victoria, Allegro à la Militaire"—the first a graceful movement in the nocturno style, the other a spirited march. Mr. Charles Salaman's "Saltarello" is full of the impulsive spirit of the popular Roman dance, which is analogous to the Neapolitan "Tarantella." "Le Jaguar," by the Chevalier de Kontski, is a waltz, in which the rhythm of that form is well preserved. A name less familiar to us than that of the distinguished Polish pianist is appended to three pianoforte pieces—"Le bon retour," "L'étoile rouge," and "La fontaine." In these M. Lafuente displays a good knowledge of the resources of the instrument.

The monthly publication of "The Songs of Wales," by Messrs. Cramer and Co., is progressing well. As we recently stated, in our notice of the first number, the work is edited by Mr. John Thomas (Pencerdd Gwallia), the well-known harpist, who has furnished accompaniments for the pianoforte or harp. The collection comprises—with many additions—much that appeared in the publications of the late John Parry (Bardd Alaw), George Thomson, and others; some of the melodies being given as vocal solos, others as part-songs; and the interest of the work is enhanced by copious historical notes and a preface containing an account of the bards, bardic institutions, and minstrelsy of Wales. Five parts have now appeared—seven more being promised to complete a volume which will possess a value far beyond the price at which it is issued.

Miss Elizabeth Philp is both indefatigable and successful in the production of songs and ballads. In the latter style we have three new specimens of her industry—"Restored," "Marguerite's Letter," and "The Hidden Chord," each of a somewhat serious cast, and all offering good scope for expressive singing. In her setting of the French lines of M. Prudhomme, "Le Soupir," Miss Philp has produced a pretty vocal romance.

Mr. J. L. Hatton's series of original songs, with German and English words (the English text by Mrs. Oliphant), commences with No. 1, "Mysterious Serenade" ("Himmels-Ständchen"), and No. 2, "The Chapel" ("Die Kapelle"). The first is full of fancy, and the second has a serious character appropriate to the subject. These are also issued by Messrs. Cramer, who have recently made further welcome contributions to drawing-room vocal pieces in "The Village Fête," song, words and music by Louisa Gray, the thoroughly English style of which is well contrasted by the Italian sprightliness of "Brunetta," a ballad by F. Rizzarelli, which has found favour with some eminent singers, including Madame Sinico and Signori Gardoni and Cotogni. "Sleep, baby darling," a lullaby, by Mrs. Alfred Phillips, is in the six-eight tempo conventionally associated with slumber-songs, the characteristics of which style are well preserved in this piece.

Messrs. Augener and Co., of Newgate-street, are doing good service to the cause of classical music by various new editions of the works of great masters. Some of Robert Schumann's finest pianoforte compositions have been issued by this firm, revised and edited by Herr Pauer. Among these are the characteristic "Kreisleriana," and the charming series of pianoforte duets—op. 82 (Zwölf clavierstücke für grosse und kleine Kinder), op. 109 (Ball Scenen), and op. 130 (Kinder Ball).

From the same publishers we have also two valuable collections of overtures—one consisting of adaptations, by Herr Pauer, for two performers on the pianoforte: the other series being arrangements, by Mr. Ebenezer Prout, for pianoforte and harmonium, in which shape much of the original orchestral effect is obtained, the latter instrument serving as a representative of the wind band of the score. In closeness of transcription and faithful reflection of the originals Mr. Prout's arrangements bear internal evidence of being made from the full orchestral scores.

Sir Julius Benedict's song, "Love at Sea" (words by the late H. F. Chorley), is a recent addition to the now extensive catalogue of Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co. A graceful and pleasing melody is here allied to a skilfully-written accompaniment, in which the triplet figure prevails and gives a variety to the general effect. Another welcome piece of the same class, also by a distinguished composer, is Mr. Henry Smart's song "In the morning." Here some characteristic verses by Mr. F. Enoch are charmingly set to music, in which simplicity is preserved without loss of interest or approach to commonplace. "The voice of song" and "The old ballad" are two of a set of three songs composed by W. Lovell Phillips. The first, in twelve-eight tempo, has a flowing and attractive melody, supported by an animated accompaniment—the second being somewhat simpler in construction, while yet fully as interesting. Among other publications by Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co. are—pretty arietta, "Non m'ascolta," by Il Cavaliere Fabio Campana; an effective duet, "The Lark," for mezzo-soprano voices, by Ignace Gibsone; a characteristic vocal romance, "La Visione," by Giuseppe Romano (who must have written extensively, as this piece is classed as opus 163); a "Reverie for the Pianoforte," by William Crawford, who has surrounded a cantabile theme with some brilliant ornamentation; and one of Mr. Kuhe's clever transcriptions for the pianoforte, the subject in this case being the vocal piece "Oh! take me to thy heart again."

The beautiful "Spinning Song" from Wagner's opera "Der Fliegende Holländer," has just been published by Messrs. Chappell and Co. in the form of a vocal trio, with words by C. J. Rowe, and an effective arrangement of the orchestral accompaniment for the pianoforte by Dr. Rimbault. Another "Spinning-Song," with words from the same source, has been also adapted by Dr. Rimbault—from the rondo of Beethoven's pianoforte sonata in E minor, op. 90. This is likewise published by Messrs. Chappell, who have recently issued various other vocal pieces. Signor Piatti's hunting-song to Scott's lines, "Waken, lords and ladies gay," has much robust character in the melody, with appropriate quasi horn effects in the accompaniment. "Changed," song, by Louisa Gray, is one of those unpretending but pleasing strains of which there are so many bearing this lady's name. "True to the last," music by Stephen Adams, will afford good scope for declamatory singing. Among the instrumental music lately received from Messrs. Chappell may be specified an effective "Polonaise," for piano solo, by Mr. Ignace Gibsone; "On Guard," a capital cavalry march, by M. E. Silas; an addition to the "Shah" music in another "Royal Persian March," by Michael Watson—a march of a different class, by Walter Spinney, who has written this piece specially for the organ, in the orthodox three-stave form.

The recently-established firm of Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co. has been active in the issue of many novelties within a brief period. The publication, by this firm, of a neat and cheap edition of Brahms's "Deutsches Requiem," with English words, will interest many, and should find a large sale, for one of the most remarkable productions of modern Germany.

Among compositions of a lighter class, from the same publishers, we may specify "Après tant de jours," song from Chastellard, written by C. A. Swinburne, music composed by Virginia Gabriel—a pretty vocal piece in the style of a French romance. "The Little Chair," words by Robert Reece, music by Berthold Tours, is a ballad in which the sentiment is well expressed both by poet and musician. The name of Mr. S. W. Waley is well known as that of one of our most distinguished musical amateurs, both practical and theoretical. His duet, "The Banner," is a setting of words by Longfellow, which cannot fail to be effective if fairly well sung. From the same hand we have two very pleasing solo vocal pieces, "In der ferne" (words by Uhland) and "Ich lieben vogeln"—each having also an English text. Six songs by the late Bernhard Molique are each of special interest. Their titles are—"Stars of the Summer Night," "The zephyr's pinions are moving," "I know thou dost love me," "O hemlock-tree," "Ye soft blue eyes, good-night," and "When other friends are around me." Each has the distinctness of character and the artistic touch that might be expected in the productions of so eminent a composer. All six songs were composed for Mr. Sims Reeves. Sir J. Benedict's pretty two-part song (for soprano and contralto), "Come to our fairy bower," has pleased greatly in recent performances in the spectacle of "Azurine," and will doubtless find equal favour with drawing-room audiences.

The men and boys employed at Waleswood Colliery were, on Tuesday, released, after an imprisonment of twenty-seven hours, caused by the blowing up of the shaft. Food was supplied to them by means of a rope, and no deaths occurred.

Dublin was visited, on Sunday afternoon, with a dreadful thunderstorm and a heavy downpour of rain.—Continuous thunderstorms prevailed in the north and east of Yorkshire. In the North Riding, at Kelton, a stack was set on fire, a horse killed by lightning, and much timber damaged. In the East Riding seven sheep belonging to Mr. Owston, of Bracken, were killed.—Another thunderstorm of great severity passed over Forfar, Perth, and other Scotch counties, on Sunday afternoon. Near Brechin the river North Esk rose in a few moments to 3 ft. or 4 ft. above its usual level. The framework of a fine bridge in course of erection by Lord Dalhousie was carried away, and nearly twenty tons of wood were swept down the stream. At Crieff, in Perthshire, hailstones of enormous size fell for fully ten minutes. Two young men were tending cows in a field, when the violence of the storm caused them to take shelter under a tree. A flash of lightning passed down the side of the tree under which they were standing, killing one of them instantaneously and rendering the other insensible.

NEW BOOKS.

AMONG THE ANCIENTS.

Crib is, no doubt, a vile phrase; but, for all its vileness, it will probably be applied by very many persons to The Works of Horace rendered into English Prose, by James Lonsdale, M.A., and Samuel Lee, M.A. (Macmillan and Co.). The volume belongs to the excellent and, it is to be hoped, popular "Globe" edition; and it contains "a literal rendering of the original." The latter statement might, a long while ago, have caused the very tassels in the college caps of Dr. Busby and Co. to curl with ire, and the very hearts of ten thousand schoolboys to leap with joy; but our age has seen many changes, amongst which the scholastic are by no means the least remarkable. The most irascible head master might possibly, nowadays, listen to a plea for the general use of cribs, and yet not even feel an inclination to flog somebody on the spot (the usual spot); and, on the other hand, the most timid and most incorrigibly idle schoolboy, conscious of the disrepute and desuetude into which the birch-rod and kindred instruments of torture have fallen, might possibly, nowadays, either treat with perfect indifference the appearance of a new and really "stunning" crib, or else contemplate an early and a systematic use of it, and yet experience no premonitory stings in his conscience or in "another place." Indeed, scholastic discipline has been so altered as to destroy the grimly humorous idea connected with the memory of Horace, who, having, by his own account, suffered grievously from the ferule of Orbilius, must have often chuckled in the shades below at the way in which he was daily avenged à posteriori—that is, upon the persons of posterity represented by young "Britons at the limit of the world." As to cribs, they are objectionable only when they are used as crutches and not as sticks, to altogether supply the place of and not simply to assist a boy's natural faculties; when they are properly employed there is scarcely more objection to be made to them than to dictionaries. The boy, however, who, not having read a line of his lesson, and having depended entirely upon an ingeniously concealed crib, astonished his master by reading out, "Hi-ther-to, the Carthaginian," as if "Hitherto" were a proper name similar to "Himilco," and promptly, upon demand, declined "Hitherto" as a noun-substantive of the third declension, fully deserved the chastisement duly administered. The most exacting of human beings would hardly expect that this version of Horace should have been carefully perused from beginning to end in order that a judgment might be passed upon it; but, so far as personal has gone, it may be pronounced wonderfully good. There are, it is almost unnecessary to say, points as to which a different interpretation, or at least a suggestion of improvement, might be offered; but, on the whole, it seems to be as nearly perfect as anything of the kind well could be, and it has at least one advantage over the many translations in verse—it does not give us anything that is not in Horace; it gives us no Horace-and-water. Besides, it offers an opportunity of substituting for the parrot-like method of "saying Horace by heart," a rational plan of seeing whether a boy remembers and can reproduce the original Latin; for the translation is so literal that a boy who has carefully studied what he has had to construe ought to find little or no difficulty in turning back the English, as he holds the crib alone in his hand, into the very words of Horace. Of course, reasonable time would have to be allowed for reflection; but more good would thus be effected than is to be obtained from gabbling off, as quick as lightning, a few stanzas or lines committed to memory on the principle on which people manage to remember the gibberish of a long-winded charm. It may be interesting to compare a little piece of the prose translation with the corresponding piece of a verse translation which has been favourably spoken of. "Spring of Bandusia" runs the prose, "more clear than glass, worthy of pleasant wine and flowers withal, to-morrow shalt thou be presented with a kid, whose brow that heaves with budding horns designs both love and battles. In vain! for to honour thee he shall with crimson blood dye thy cold streams, he, the offspring of the playful herd." The verse runs:—

Fountain, of Bandusia hight,
More than glassy mirror bright,
Fairest flowers and sweetest wine
Are but rightful meed of thine;
And to-morrow I will be
Donor of a kid to thee.
On whose forehead budding out
Little horns begin to sprout,
Tokens vain of idle dreams—
Deeds of love and warlike schemes—
For the little wanton's blood
Red shall dye thine icy flood.

It should be observed that in the prose translation "to honour thee" and "thy" are the somewhat exuberant rendering of a Latin dative case. A most instructive, agreeable, and useful introduction, a number of scholarly and illustrative notes, and an index enhance the value of the volume.

No lover of the ancient classics should voluntarily miss the pleasure to be derived from Studies of the Greek Poets, by John Addington Symonds (Smith, Elder, and Co.). It may be that the first chapter, in which "the periods of Greek literature" form the subject of discourse, and the last chapter, in which "the genius of Greek art" is discussed, bear an unpleasant resemblance to the laboured productions that do constant duty in the lecture-room; but the intermediate chapters, ten in number, are charming. The author is enthusiastic, and considers it necessary to apologise for a certain extravagance of expression into which he seems conscious of having been occasionally betrayed; but though he has undoubtedly used strong language here and there, one is grateful to him for having warned to his work, and for having adopted a tone which is calculated to re-awaken the slumbering sympathies of those to whom his theme was once tolerably familiar, and to stimulate the curiosity and the interest of those to whom he offers a new means of intellectual culture. Nowhere else, at any rate in the same compass, would it be easy to find so complete and so attractive an exposition of all that has made the name of Empedocles immortal, of the peculiarities that distinguish the "Gnomes poets" of Greece, and of the circumstances connected with the introduction of the iambic metre which Archilochus appropriated and employed to such deadly purpose. Of the lyric poets, and especially Pindar; of the tragic poets, and especially (so far as a hearty vindication goes) Euripides; of ancient and modern comedy, especially the comedy of Aristophanes; of the idyllic poets, and especially Theocritus; and of what is known as the Greek Anthology, the author has written in a manner which not only proves his own scholarship, taste, and judgment, but also provides his readers with a treasury of instruction and delights. The chapter entitled "The Idyllists" is particularly refreshing; and, if they have ever before been treated of with equally artistic and graceful appreciation, the book in which that treatment is to be found must have hitherto been carefully kept in the back-ground. The bits of translation are of very unequal merit; but some are very well chosen from various translators or paraphraser, and some are admirably executed by the author himself.

To the student and the scholar a treat will be afforded by The Tragedies of Æschylus, by E. H. Plumptre, M.A. (Strachan and Co.). It is probable, also, that those who are neither students nor scholars may extract considerable pleasure from the "Life of Æschylus," which is prefixed and from the "rhymed choruses" which are appended to the main contents of the volume. It were rash, however, to assert that any reader, who has neither the student's anxiety to know how a passage ought to be rendered, nor the scholar's curiosity to see how a passage can be rendered, is likely to be absorbed by even so masterly a translation. To one who knows the difficulties it will often appear marvellous that the translator should have grappled so successfully with appalling obstacles, should have been able to combine so much brevity with so much intelligibility, and should have in the choruses so ingeniously imitated the rhythmical construction; but to one who knows not the difficulties it is not unlikely often to occur that there is something unpleasantly peculiar about the English, and that the verse is afflicted with a decided lameness. It is almost impossible, especially in the dialogue, to so arrange the words of the translation as to reproduce the musical cadence with which the original must almost certainly have fallen upon a Greek ear. It is well understood that even Milton is more praised than read, and neglect of him is partly and reasonably attributed to the frequently alien structure of his language and his versification; and in such a version of a Greek tragedian as is here noticed the objection felt in the case of Milton cannot fail to apply with far more force. Popular, then, the translation has little chance of becoming; but by a chosen few it will, no doubt, not only be read and admired, but kept in a place of honour for the reference which, if only for its valuable notes, will be constantly and profitably made to it.

Not much in the way of mere literature, but very much indeed in the way of such books as people delight to read, and remember, and discuss one with another, is Monographs, Personal and Social, by Lord Houghton (John Murray). It contains more or less interesting reminiscences of Suleiman Pacha, Alexander von Humboldt, Cardinal Wiseman, Walter Savage Landor, "those Miss Berrys who have been running all over Europe ever since the time of Louis Quatorze," Harriet Lady Ashburton, the Rev. Sydney Smith, and Heinrich Heine; and there are four portraits to assist the imaginations of persons who are fain to wonder what manner of men or women, to look at, other persons may have been. Extremely pleasant as the book is to read, extremely amusing as are some, and extremely touching as are others, of the many anecdotes recorded, it is a question whether a perusal of the pages will, with the majority of readers, increase rather than diminish whatever vague sentiments of admiration may have hitherto been felt for the characters of the personages who are the subjects of the monographs. It is probable, at any rate, that Suleiman Pacha, whose real name was Selvis, who was a Frenchman by birth, and who began life as a midshipman in the French navy, will be regarded, notwithstanding all specious representations to the contrary, as having decidedly earned the name of renegade and as having been a somewhat superior sort of Dugald Dalgetty; that the conduct of even Alexander von Humboldt will seem to call, in some small respects, for explanation and defence, and meet with rather lame ones; that Cardinal Wiseman will appear not to have been proof against the weakness which lures men on to sonnet-writing, quite against the grain; that Walter Savage Landor, though a most elegant scholar and poet, will be considered to have been an overbearing bully, impatient of contradiction, a very disagreeable man to differ from, and one who might have been improved had he been obliged to work for his living; that the Rev. Sydney Smith will be suspected of having been unedifyingly regardful of his personal comforts and ungenerously and peevishly intolerant of competitors in his own line of art, the art of brilliant and witty conversation or composition; and that Heinrich Heine will run a risk of being set down as an afflicted indeed, as well as a wonderfully gifted, but at the same time an egotistical, a self-conscious, a bilious, and a malignant being. And yet, partly from the translations which the author's competent powers have enabled him to furnish, and partly from the weird nature revealed, there is more fascination about the monograph relating to Heine than about any other. One may even feel a kind of pity for him; but, if pity be akin to love, it is not very closely connected with respect. It is curious that the idea of a prose translation of Heine's poems should have seemed to the lady to whom he himself suggested it impracticable. Of course Heine's own vanity would have prevented him from ever dreaming that he could be passably rendered into verse; but, when we recollect what grand English prose has been made in our Bible out of Hebrew poetry, it strikes us as just possible that English prose might be found capable of doing approximate justice to the muse of Heinrich Heine. And we may quote a more modern instance than the Bible. Horace, with whom Heine shares just the one peculiarity of being the despair of versifactory translators, was at least attempted, some years ago, in French prose by M. Jules Janin, if memory may be trusted, and has certainly been very lately turned into English prose by Messrs. Lonsdale and Lee for Messrs. Macmillan's "Globe" edition of various works; so that there was no occasion to be startled at the mere notion of putting Heine into prose. As for the monographs referring to the Berrys and to Lady Ashburton, they will, perhaps, be voted more novel and refreshing than any of the rest.

If only one had an abundance of time to spare and an unlimited supply of the best cigars (say Upman's brand) to smoke, few things would be more delightful than to spend the requisite number of hours in a thorough investigation of every proposition advanced, and every "various reading" suggested, in Caliban; The Missing Link, by Daniel Wilson, LL.D. (Macmillan and Co.); for a study which should involve the agreeable necessity of reading a play, or many plays, of Shakspeare by the light of Darwinian speculations, and with an eye to revision of the Shakspearean text, could not fail to prove most attractive and absorbing. It is, from a certain point of view, creditable to Canada and flattering to the mother country that a Canadian professor should have devoted no small amount of original thought, acquired knowledge, and subtle ingenuity to a consideration of the wonderful manner in which Shakspeare unconsciously "anticipates and satisfies the most startling problem of the nineteenth century," inseparable from the honoured name of Darwin, and to a conscientious attempt at rehabilitation, in the cases of two plays, of Shakspeare's text; but it is doubtful whether the game was worth the candle, and whether conjecture unsupported by indisputable authority had not already been employed, even to nauseousness, on unintelligible or unsatisfactory lines in Shakspeare's plays. Apes still exist, and are visible to the naked eye; Caliban and other creatures of a poet's imagination do not and are not; and, consequently, between ourselves and our simious ancestors there is at present a hiatus, which cannot be quite unexceptionably filled up by any number of shadowy creations nowhere to be found save in the works of the omniscient and prescient Shakspeare or of somebody else. Nevertheless, the "missing link" is, no doubt, a subject of profound curiosity; and it is treated of by the Canadian professor in a way which leads to many interesting and cognate inquiries, not to be disregarded by those who, as was observed above, have plenty of leisure.

There is enough of adventure and excitement to be found in the big volume, entitled The Lion and the Elephant, by Charles John Andersson, author of "Lake Ngami," &c.; edited by L. Lloyd, author of "Field Sports of the North of Europe," &c. (Hurst and Blackett); and there is, no doubt, a great deal in it of such information as will be acceptable to the naturalist and the sportsman. It cannot be denied, however, that the proportion between what is given at secondhand and what is related from personal experience and observation is not so much, as regards quantity as well as quality, in favour of the latter as it might have been expected to be. The whole number of pages is 386; and if the liberal quotations made from Gordon Cumming's, Jules Gérard's, Deleorgue's, Sir Samuel Baker's, and many another traveller's and sportsman's narratives or diaries or friendly letters were deducted, that number would be very considerably reduced. But perhaps that fact, though it may detract a little from the credit due to the author—now, alas! no more—will not interfere with the delight which nine readers out of every ten to whom lions and elephants are a care will derive from the book. It is sad to relate that the author's personal acquaintance with lions did not permit him to indorse what has been reported of their magnanimity. He came to the conclusion that any gentleman who felt inclined to put their noble forbearance to the test would do well to previously ascertain whether they had or had not already dined; and if not, to defer an interview until "after dinner." Nor, on the other hand, had he found reason to believe in the cowardice attributed by some writers to lions; he, on the contrary, came to the conclusion that any enterprising man who should go out into the jungle for the purpose of trying upon the king of beasts the effect of the human eye (unless it were glancing along a gun-barrel) would return home, if at all, with his confidence greatly shaken in the lion-taming properties of that useful and sometimes ornamental but not particularly defensive or deterrent organ. The author, from what he knew, and it was more than a little, about elephants, was not led to wholly entertain the popular idea of them as harmless, good-natured, patient, conciliatory animals, rather glad than otherwise to employ their gigantic selves as beasts of burden; but then he looked upon them from the sportsman's point of view, and to the sportsman the elephant "is the most formidable of all the beasts, the lion not excepted, that roam the African wilds; and few there are, who make the pursuit of him a profession, that do not, sooner or later, come to grief of some kind." It can scarcely be wondered at that the elephant, if he be as sagacious as many suppose, and if he can compare notes with his fellows, should feel that he has a grievance against the whole race of those gentlemen who frequently send him off, with a bullet in his head, or his shoulder, or his hinder-quarters, to die like a dog; and it is when we reflect upon the number of merely wounded animals left to die a lingering and horribly painful death in their places of concealment that we are almost ashamed to be so intensely interested in these thrilling stories of sport.

It is impossible to say how many thousands of persons will indorse the statement that the public resemble Oliver Twist to the extent of "asking for more" information about Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette, and how many thousands hold that the public would prefer by this time to wipe up the blood and tears and "say no more about it," but as many thousands as there are belonging to the former category should not omit to read and recommend Recollections of a Page at the Court of Louis XVI. by Felix, Count de France d'Héecques; edited, from the French by Charlotte M. Yonge (Hurst and Blackett). And the book is the more worthy of being read and recommended for the very reason that the incidents involving "blood and tears" are not dwelt upon at anything like the length, or described with anything like the detail and morbid gusto, that might have been expected. Indeed, there is more of amusement than of anything else to be derived from the bulky volume. The "page" is amusing, both intentionally and, particularly, unintentionally. Nothing could be more ludicrously and pantaloonishly grotesque than the way in which he treats the character and conduct of General Lafayette, unless it be the way in which he writes of "states-general," and the way in which he unconsciously betrays the fact that he was one of those high-born gentry who show how the originally grand spirit of feudal loyalty may get watered down in a long series of noble families until it becomes hardly distinguishable from the flunkeyism of James de la Plush. One of the most interesting chapters is that in which an account is given of the discipline undergone by the pages at the Court of Louis XVI., not according to rules established by the King or his officers, but according to tradition and custom handed down and prevailing amongst the boys themselves; and it is very aptly remarked in the preface that the system resembles to a remarkable degree that which is prevalent at our large public schools in the present day. One is not much impressed by the personal description given of Louis XVI.: he was, it seems, bashful, corpulent (though his corpulence, in the opinion of the "page," gave him "dignity of carriage"), and vigorous; he waddled, after the fashion of Bourbons, in walking; he had "well-formed but very thick legs;" his teeth were irregular, so that his laugh was ungraceful; he had light-coloured or colourless eyes, and he was so short-sighted as to have "no openness in his glance;" he was given to practical jokes; he was devoted to hunting, though he was a bad rider and got rid of any horse "that transgressed with him;" and, after hunting, he would get so tired and sleepy and stiff in the legs, and incapable of readily mounting the stairs, that his own servants would consider him drunk, an opinion which the world was not slow to adopt. That the King had the Royal gift of strength would appear from an anecdote, in which we are told that there was in a certain chamber a shovel "so heavy that it took a strong man to hold it out at arm's length," and yet the Most Christian King would win the respect of his pages and promote the welfare of his people by performing "this feat with a little page standing on the shovel as well." In fact, it appears that if Louis XVI. had been placed by Providence in the station of life of a gamekeeper, or of the "strong man" who, with one end of a pole held firmly against his stomach, bears aloft his whole family clinging to the other, he would most likely have died in his bed, and left behind him the character of a worthy paterfamilias, tolerably successful in his calling. As it was, he has left behind him the reputation of having been "the wrong man in the right place," for he rightfully inherited what he was unfitted to manage, and of having been a lamentable instance of the tragic manner in which the sins of fathers are sometimes visited upon children. But, however that may be, the "page" gives some most entertaining sketches of what he saw, heard, and experienced at the Court; although, as he was only twelve years old when he "took office," and was "in office" no more than six years, it is reasonable to suppose that his "recollections" were fundamentally but those of a boy and were submitted to a process of subsequent reflection. The volume is quite a marvel of misprinting.

There is excellent reading in Political Women, by Sutherland Menzies (Henry S. King and Co.). Of course such a work must be a selection; or else one might go back, if no further, to the famous Deborah, who "judged Israel" in the days of Barak; and certainly to "Madame Anne," daughter of Louis XI. of France, and others. But the author has chosen, for more or less cogent reasons, to begin from the seventeenth century; and in an "introduction" he has explained at great length, if not in a perfectly satisfactory and conclusive manner, why his two well-stocked volumes—whether they are or are not to be followed at a future time by others—cannot justly be taxed with an exhibition of the arbitrary spirit of selection as regards the few but important "political women" whose careers it has seemed good to him to depict. The chief luminaries have, of course, their satellites; and therefore, if it be briefly stated that the "political women" with whom the author has dealt upon the present occasion scarcely amount in number to half a dozen, the statement must be taken with the modification just implied. The first name mentioned is that of the celebrated Madame de Longueville, who was born in 1619; the last is that of the imperious Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, who was born in 1660; and between the two occur many other names, including those of Louise Quéroutille, Duchess of Portsmouth, popularly known amongst the islanders disdainful of French pronunciation as Mrs. Curl, and of Madame des Ursins, of whom St. Simon remarked, "she reigned in Spain, and her history deserves to be written." Such books necessarily contain much that is mere stale repetition; but when they are put together, as seems to have been the case in this instance, after a great deal of research, and, certainly, in an attractive style, the reader may repress all feelings of repugnance, and may even calculate upon becoming acquainted with "things not generally known." The great charm of such books is that they impress historical facts upon the mind in the most fascinating manner; most prominent are the figures of fair women beguiling gallant gentlemen; around them all sorts of exciting incidents are taking place; and from every nook and corner comes the insinuating tale of scandal. Our author, however, appears to have had in view an object, which is happily timed in one respect but by no means in another; he would warn women against the political arena, and, although they now more than ever require the warning, they are now less than ever, one would say, disposed to take it. Gratitude requires a statement to the effect that there is not only an index, but an index to each volume.

Cheery, anecdotal, and chatty, to an extent not to be surmised from its very solid exterior appearance, is the large volume entitled From the Thames to the Tamar, by the Rev. A. G. L'Estrange (Hurst and Blackett). The voice of wisdom that has been for so many centuries crying out at the corners of the streets, with no man to regard it, seems to find an echo in the short preface, in which regretful allusion is made to the pertinacity wherewith English people troop abroad, to the neglect of their own beautiful and unexplored country. However, the reverend gentleman who is so laudably desirous of recommending his own land to further notice and of dissuading his compatriots from giving way to the craze of running over the seas just to get up at a given signal, as schoolboys at the morning-bell, and to rush out for a sunrise on the Right or for something far less glorious, does not devote himself in his book, so much as might have been expected or, perhaps, desired, to the panorama provided by nature for those who should follow his track; he rather inclines to historical, biographical, and archaeological reminiscences, and, sooth to say, writes a little after the fashion in which a guide might be supposed to address a cockney. From London to Herne Bay, and thence to Plymouth, by the route he adopted, is a trip which, one would imagine, might have offered opportunities of calling attention more frequently than attention has been called to something, in the way of picturesque scenery or desirable abode, or the like, such as could not be rummaged out of an English History and an ordinary guide-book. Nor is the reader likely to care much whether a young lady, belonging to the author's party, "tripped down with the lightness of a mountain nymph;" or whether a certain colonel, who had served in the Peninsula, showed the effect of early discipline by "unfolding his napkin as the soup appeared;" or whether, in fact, anybody unknown did anything quite usual. It may also occur to nine persons out of ten that it was scarcely necessary nowadays to append to some remarks touching the ruins of St. Martin's Priory at Dover a notice explaining the origin of the once favourite, though vulgar, expression, "My eye and Betty Martin." Nevertheless, the book is calculated to raise a desire of making the same excursion as the author made and of having his volume for a companion.

Under the suggestive title of Silverland (Chapman and Hall), the author of "Guy Livingstone" has written, as he might be counted upon to write, a very readable book about Transatlantic matters in general and mines and miners in particular. Whether his volume be or be not such as a practical miner and man of business would consider full of useful information, it were perilous to declare offhand; but it may be safely asserted that, regarded as a mere narrative of travel, enlivened by occasional anecdotes and interspersed with facts relating to operations conducted into the bowels of the ore-producing earth, the work is entitled to fair rank amongst publications of the kind. It is curious to notice how the author's Southern proclivities appear to have become modified; and he bears witness that a similar modification has tempered the views of those who were in days gone by the most frantic amongst the singers of "Maryland, my Maryland." The author's somewhat high and mighty manner and somewhat stilted and pretentious style may sometimes provoke a smile; but you look for them in him just as you expect a clank and a swagger in a Life Guardsman on foot.

Mr. Walter, M.P., on the occasion of laying the foundation-stone of the new chapel at Reading School, yesterday week, spoke strongly on the importance of combining religious with secular instruction.

We learn from the Morning Post that a Treasury circular has been issued to all the public departments forbidding, under penalty of dismissal, civil servants of the Crown from communicating official information within their cognisance to the press. "My Lords" have at the same time transmitted a form of declaration to be signed by the employés to the effect that they will observe the rule.

The ninth annual meeting of the National Artillery Association will be held at Shoeburyness, from the 4th to the 9th inst. It is understood that the competitions will exhibit the capabilities of the 40-pounder Armstrong gun and the 64-pounder converted Palliser gun. As the entries are from all parts of the kingdom, the meeting may be regarded as really national. Prominent amongst the prizes are those offered by the Queen, the Prince of Wales, the association itself, and Sir Richard Wallace. Colonel Chermiside, R.A., will have command of the camp; and Brigadier-General Sir J. M. Adye, K.C.B., will preside at the distribution of prizes, on the 9th.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LORD WOLVERTON.

The Right Hon. George Carr Glyn, Baron Wolverton, of Wolverton, Bucks, died, on the 24th ult., at his residence, 1, Upper Eccleston-street. His Lordship was born April 27, 1797, the fourth son of the late Sir Richard Carr Glyn, Bart., of Gaunta, in the county of Dorset, Lord Mayor of London in 1798, by Mary, his wife, daughter of John Plumptre, Esq., M.P., of Fredville, Kent. After receiving his education at Westminster School, he entered his father's banking-house, in Lombard-street, and rose eventually to be senior partner of the well-known firm of Glyn, Mills, Halifax, and Co. He was many years chairman of the London and North-Western Railway Company, a Commissioner of Lientenancy for London, and a governor of Harrow School. In 1847 he was returned to Parliament by Kendal, and continued to represent that constituency until 1868. In the following year, on Dec. 14, he was raised to the Peerage, taking his title from the station of Wolverton, on the railway with which he had been so long connected. Lord Wolverton married, March 13, 1823, Marianne, daughter of Pascoe Grenfell, Esq., M.P., of Taplow House, Bucks, and granddaughter of St. Leger, Viscount Doneraile, and by her had nine sons and two daughters. His eldest son and successor, George Grenfell, who succeeds, as second Lord Wolverton, M.P. for Shaftesbury since 1857, is Joint-Secretary of the Treasury, and, as such, popularly known as "the whip." He was born Feb. 10, 1824, and married, June 22, 1848, to Georgina Maria, daughter of the Rev. George Tuffnell, of Uffington, Berks.

SIR F. D. ASTLEY, BART.

Sir Francis Dugdale Astley, second Baronet, of Everleigh, Wilts, died at Eastleigh, Wilts, on the 23rd ult. He was born Nov. 5, 1805, the only son of Sir John Dugdale Astley, of Everleigh, M.P., who was created a Baronet Aug. 15, 1821, and died Jan. 19, 1842. This family of Astley represents in the male line the senior branch of the noble House of Astley. The Baronet whose decease we record was J.P. and D.L. for Wilts, lord of the manor of Everleigh, and patron of three livings. Sir Francis married, Nov. 26, 1826, Emma Dorothea, fourth daughter of Sir T. B. Lethbridge, Bart., and by her, who died Dec. 9, 1872, leaves six sons and four daughters. The eldest son and successor, now Sir John Dugdale Astley, third Baronet, of Everleigh, late Lieutenant-Colonel Scots Fusilier Guards, was born Feb. 19, 1828, and married, May 22, 1858, to Eleanor Blanche, only child of Thomas Corbett, Esq., of Elsham Hall, county of Lincoln.

MR. JONATHAN HENN, Q.C.

Jonathan Henn, Esq., Q.C., died, on the 22nd ult., at Clifton Villa, Bray, in the county of Dublin, aged eighty-four. This able and eloquent lawyer, called to the Irish Bar in 1811 and made King's Counsel in 1835, stood for several years in the foremost rank of his profession, not only as a powerful advocate, but also as a most learned and accomplished lawyer. His last great effort was in the O'Connell prosecution, 1843. Soon after, although in the zenith of his fame, he retired from active practice, and became Chairman of the county of Donegal. Mr. Jonathan Henn was second son of William Henn, a Master in Chancery in Ireland, by Susanna, his wife, sister of Sir Jonathan Lovett, Bart., of Lipscombe Park, Bucks.

CIVIL-LIST PENSIONS.

An official list has recently been published of all pensions granted during the year ended June 20, 1873, and charged upon the civil list. The following were granted on Dec. 20, 1872:—

Mrs. Sarah Gordon, in consideration of the services of her late husband, as inventor of iron lighthouses, £50.
Miss Eliza Keightley, in consideration of the valuable assistance which she rendered to her brother, Mr. Thomas Keightley, in the course of his historical studies, and of her own destitute condition, to commence from Nov. 5, 1872, inclusive, being the day following the death of her brother, to whom a civil-list pension was granted of £100 a year in 1855, £50.
Mrs. Louisa Chesney, widow of General Chesney, in consideration of the services of her husband in connection with the Euphrates expedition in 1835, £100.
Mr. William Gibbs Rogers, in recognition of his services as a wood-carver, £50.
Mr. Alexander Bain, in recognition of his scientific services as inventor of electric clocks and other instruments, £50.
In the present year the following grants were made:—
Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley, in recognition of his musical talents, £100.
Miss Martha Charters Somerville, in consideration of the eminent services rendered to the natural sciences by her late mother, Mrs. Somerville, £50.
Miss Mary Charlotte Somerville, in consideration of the eminent services rendered to the natural sciences by her late mother, Mrs. Somerville, £50.
Mrs. Frederick Louisa Knowles, widow, in consideration of the heroic conduct of her husband, Captain Knowles, on the occasion of the loss of the Northfleet, £50.
Mrs. Mary Ann Munday, widow; Mrs. Sarah Ransom, widow; and Miss Mary Jane Waghorn, in consideration of the services of their brother, Lieutenant Waghorn, in connection with the opening of the overland route to India, and of their own destitute circumstances, £25.
Mr. Edward Masson, in consideration of his services to classical literature, £100.
Mr. William Mann, in consideration of the time and labour which he has devoted to the service of astronomy, whereby his health has become seriously impaired, £50.
Mrs. Elizabeth Williams, widow of the Rev. J. Williams, formerly Rector of Llanymowddwy, in consideration of the value of her husband's Celtic and archaeological researches, £50.
Mrs. Agnes Moir, widow, in consideration of the services of her husband, the late Dr. Moir, in connection with medicine, and of her own destitute condition, £45.
Dr. David Livingstone, Consul in the Interior of Africa, &c., in consideration of the value of his discoveries in Central Africa, £300.
Total, £1900.

Mr. Stansfeld was to have presided, on Thursday week, at the annual distribution of prizes on board the training-ship Goliath, but his place had to be taken by Mr. Barringer, vice-chairman of the Hackney District Board. Captain Bouchier's report stated that the number of boys now on board was 372. During the past year 161 had been sent to sea. The Holborn Union has tried a new experiment, in putting sixteen of its boys on board fishing-smacks, but there are misgivings as to the result among the authorities on board the Goliath.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* * All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed "To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS," &c., and have the word "Chess" legibly written on the outside of the envelope.
C. B. desires us to inform "E. D. A. Walworth," who inquired for a chess club on the Surrey side of the Thames, that a club for the practice of the game has for a considerable time been established in connection with the South London Working Men's Institute, Richmond-street, St. George's-road, E.C.
C. W. M. D.—It shall receive due attention.
ALLIANCE.—We meant, of course, a rudimentary treatise of acknowledged authority, and not one which contained such a nonsensical piece of misinformation as that "If a pawn can proceed across the field to the rear line of the enemy, he is exchanged for a Queen, or any other piece of his colour that has been taken. If no piece of his own side has been lost, he must remain idle until some piece has been taken for which he may be exchanged."
G. COLLIER.—It is already in the hands of the examiners. The former was declined, as not sufficiently piquant for publication.
D. C. L.—We shall probably be enabled to give a list of the chief players who have entered for the Vienna tournament next week.
B. M.—The July number of the Austrian Schachzeitung announces the interesting fact that Mr. Kolisch is now joined with Mr. Lehner in the editorship of that magazine.
A. DEMOCRIT.—We have received the solutions, for which we accept our thanks.
C. MURRAY and Others.—Your best course is to obtain the Philadelphia Chess Record by book post. Apply for particulars to Mr. G. Reichhelm, 323, Walnut-street, Philadelphia. The annual subscription is only a dollar.
G. W. D. G.—Perhaps you will be good enough to send us another copy of the last two games mentioned, in short slips containing about twenty moves each.

CHELMSFORD V. COLCHESTER.—The return match between the Chelmsford and Chelmsford Chess Clubs was played at the White Hart Hotel, Chelmsford, a few days ago—victory this time crowning the efforts of the home team with a score of eleven games against four. The players were the same as on the previous occasion, with the exception that Mr. Brightwell, Colchester, who was taken ill at the last moment, was replaced by Captain Tyler, of the 50th Regiment. Play commenced at 3.30 p.m., and lasted until eight, when the combatants partook of a substantial dinner, presided over by Mr. G. Baker. Before the departure of the Colchester players, it was suggested by Mr. Gossip that an Eastern Counties Chess Association should be formed, which, as it would embrace several very strong clubs—from Ipswich, Norwich, Cambridge, and Bury, for instance—might prove a powerful addition to the strongholds of chess. This proposition, we understand, has already been discussed by the Ipswich and Norwich clubs, and will doubtless receive the full consideration it deserves. Appended is the final score:—

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, dated April 22, 1873, of Henry Charles, Earl Cadogan, who died at Woodrising Hall, Norfolk, on June 8, was proved, on the 22nd ult., by his eldest son, George Henry Cadogan, the present Earl, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator bequeaths to his daughter, Lady Charlotte Georgiana Mary Cadogan, £10,000; and the residue of his property, real and personal, to his three sons, Arthur, Cecil, and Charles, to be equally divided between them; and he declares that such bequests to his said children are to be in addition to what they are entitled to under the settlement made on his marriage.

The will, with two codicils, of Caroline, Countess Dowager of Abergavenny, of Birling Manor, Kent, was proved, on the 17th ult., by Lady Caroline Emily Nevill and Lady Henrietta Augusta Mostyn, the daughters, two of the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. The testatrix appoints to her three daughters, Caroline, Henrietta, and Isabel, the trust-funds of her marriage settlement, and she also constitutes them residuary legatees. There are several legacies in the will, pecuniary and specific. All her freehold property testatrix devises to the same uses, and upon the same trusts, as the Birling Manor estate is devised by the will of her late husband, the fourth Earl.

The will, as contained in papers A and B, with one codicil, of Margaret Caetani, Duchess of Sermoneta (née Knight), who died at the Palazzo Caetani, Rome, on Oct. 19, 1872, was proved on the 3rd ult., by Charles Bridgwater Williams, as the attorney of her husband, the Duke of Sermoneta, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testatrix leaves her jewels to her stepson, Onorato, Prince of Teano, legacies to her sister and brother, and the residue of her property to her husband.

The will, with four codicils, of Alderman Sir James Duke, Bart., was proved, on the 26th ult., by Dame Jane Amelia Duke (the relict); Marshall Pontifex, of St. Andrew's-street, Holborn-circus, solicitor; and the Rev. C. F. C. West, Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, power being reserved to Mr. W. B. Hume to come in and prove, the personal estate being sworn under £100,000. The testator bequeaths an immediate legacy of £1000, and a policy for £2000 on her life, to his wife, and directs his trustees to keep the policy on foot out of the income of his real and personal estate. He gives his widow the use of his mansion house, Laughton Lodge, Sussex, with the grounds and accommodation lands, of the plate and furniture and live and dead stock there, and an annuity of £900, during widowhood. The will contains a direction that if his son should marry during the widowhood of the testator's wife he should be entitled to the candelabra given by the Corporation of London and the cup given to him by his late Majesty Louis Philippe, King of the French. Subject to these dispositions, and to certain annuities in favour of his daughters, the whole of his real estates are limited to uses in strict settlement in favour of the testator's only son, James, the present Baronet, who is under age; and the will contains a direction for the investment of his residuary personal estate in the purchase of freeholds, to follow the trusts of his will.

The will of Dame Charlotte Musgrave, widow, late of No. 27, Eaton-place, was proved on the 14th ult., by the Rev. M. R. Graham and Mr. Stuart Gladstone, the executors.

The will and codicil of Mr. William Leigh, of Woodchester Park, Nymphsfield, Gloucestershire, were proved on the 17th ult., by Lewis Raphael, William Leigh, the son, and Mrs. C. Leigh, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £9000.

The will of Mr. James Braham, of Fairlaw, Central-hill, Upper Norwood, has been proved by Mrs. Henrietta Braham, the relict, and Samuel John Daw, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator bequeaths to his said wife all his property absolutely, except his pure personality, and she gives to her for life. At her death, after giving thereout legacies to members of his family, and providing for the keeping in repair of his tomb, he directs such a sum to be set aside as will produce £100 per annum; and annually, on the anniversary of his wedding day, such sum is to be drawn for by lot by the three most deserving girls of the Hebrew persuasion educated in the endowed school, Hope-place, Liverpool; the income of the residue of such pure personality is to be paid for ever to the lecturer and reader for the time being of the old Hebrew synagogue at the date of his will worshipping in Seal-street, Liverpool.

The will, with one codicil, of Mr. Charles Pease, of Southend, Darlington, has been deposited at the district registry at Durham for probate, the personal estate being affirmed under £350,000. The testator has appointed his three surviving brothers—Mr. J. W. Pease, of Hutton Hall, North Riding, M.P. for South Durham; Mr. Edward Pease, of Greencroft West, Darlington, Durham; and Mr. Arthur Pease, of Hammersknott, Darlington, Durham—executors and trustees, to each of whom he has bequeathed a legacy of £500. He has bequeathed to Mr. C. Rutter Fry, of Darlington, a legacy of £500; and to the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Peace Society, the Religious Tract Society, and the Darlington Hospital and Dispensary, a sum of £1000 each free of duty. He has also directed his trustees, within twelve calendar months after his decease, and with the consent of his widow, if living, to pay and apply any sum not exceeding £10,000 for charitable purposes. After bequeathing to his widow absolutely his household furniture and effects, and his carriages and horses, the testator devises the whole of his real (and bequeaths the residue of his personal estate upon certain trusts for the benefit of his widow and his only son, Charles Gurney Pease.

The most successful show ever held in connection with the Blackburn Agricultural Society came off last week. The show was held in the centre of Witton Park, lent for the occasion by Mr. Henry Master Feilden, M.P. The number of entries was 1583, and more than £800 was given in prizes.

The postal official circular contains an announcement informing "postmasters and other officers that the extension of compulsory registration to letters containing bank notes, postage stamps, watches, or jewellery appointed to take effect on the 1st of August, is postponed. The notices to the public issued on that subject a few days since should, therefore, for the present, be withdrawn."

The National Archery Meeting at Leamington was concluded on Thursday week, and the winners were disclosed at a ball at the Assembly Room, shortly before midnight. Mrs. Hornblow, of Leamington, took the first ladies' prize, £15, and the transferable bracer, thus winning the double first honours. The six other winners of gross score prizes were—Miss Ripley, Mrs. Leigh, Mrs. Pinckney, Mrs. S. Hutchinson, Mrs. Beetham, and Mrs. Forbes. Captain Fisher took the first gross score and champion's medal; and nine other winners of gross score prizes were—Mr. Pailaret, Mr. Everett, Mr. Boulton, Mr. Fust, Mr. Lowe, Mr. Prescott, Mr. Fryer, and Mr. Snow.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1873.

The prorogation of Parliament, on Tuesday afternoon last, regarded as a state ceremony, was attended with unmistakable symptoms of political exhaustion, and was characterised by incidents which brought to a climax that succession of mistakes and miscarriages, unfortunate accidents and administrative blunders, which, from the commencement to the close of the Session, has more frequently than in many preceding years made its appearance in Parliamentary annals. By an inopportune misadventure, the messenger who left Osborne with the Royal Commission was detained two hours on the other side of the Solent. To be sure, the delay thus occasioned did not tax the patience of any large assembly. General Schenck, with a small party of Americans, two Peers, and a few ladies in the body of the House of Lords, and a scanty muster of members of the House of Commons, were, no doubt, sorely inconvenienced by the contretemps. But the general public knew nothing of the occurrence, inasmuch as the Royal Message, a copy of which, as usual, had been delivered on certain conditions to the public press, was read in every part of the kingdom before it was delivered. It is curious to observe how ill-fortune of a trivial kind—but ill-fortune, nevertheless—pursued her Majesty's Government up to the last moment of the present Session. We may be permitted to hope that they will rest from their vexations, as well as from their labours, during a fair portion of the recess that has just commenced.

The Royal Message was of an average length, though we cannot help thinking that, in character, and, we may add, in diction, it was somewhat below the average. We know not why it should be so, but, for the most part, the words put into her Majesty's mouth, or submitted to her for her Royal sign-manual, are neither aptly chosen nor deftly put together. We think there is no excuse for this. A Royal speech or message becomes a part of the history of the country, and one would think should be verbally constructed in such manner as might harmonise with the dignity of history. Length is not desirable; novelty is scarcely possible; but compactness of expression, and especially freedom from grammatical inaccuracy, are hardly too much to expect in a document which passes under the combined supervision of a Cabinet of British statesmen.

The topics adverted to by the Speech divide themselves into personal, diplomatic, and legislative. Her Majesty proceeds naturally in the first place to thank Parliament for the additional provision it has made for the Duke of Edinburgh on the occasion of his approaching marriage—the marriage which she trusts "will form a new tie of amity between two great empires." The assurance of continued friendly relations between herself and all foreign Powers follows in a few words which custom has consecrated. We have then an announcement of the successful termination of the mission to Zanzibar; of the satisfactory issue of the commercial negotiations with France; of the conclusion of Treaties of Extradition with Italy, Denmark, Sweden, and Brazil; and of the practical steps, still in progress, which diplomacy is taking to give effect to those provisions of the Treaty of Washington which relate to British claims against the Government of the United States, and to the interests of the Queen's possessions in North America. Thus much for the diplomatic portion of the Message. That which refers to the legislation of the past six months, although somewhat eked out by minor matters, presents a more respectable show than the public had anticipated. The remission of public burdens by the reduction of the Sugar Duties and the Income Tax is a somewhat unusual topic for a Royal Speech, as is also the formal mention of the fact, gratifying as it is, that, up to the present time, the revenue of the country had not fallen below the expectations of those of her Majesty's servants who preside over the management of it. Perhaps, we may look upon these paragraphs as intended to serve the purpose of padding. They severally occur at the beginning and the end of the allusions made by her Majesty to the legislative work accomplished. The Act for the establishment of the Supreme Court of Judicature; those for the amendment of the Education Act, 1870, and of the Endowed Schools Act, 1869; that relating to the regulation of railways and canals; and that, dealing with merchant shipping with a view to diminish the risks to which the seafaring population are exposed, are the only completed measures to which reference is made, as illustrating the wisdom and persevering labour of Parliament. Of these the first mentioned is by far the most important. The establishment of a Supreme Court of Judicature is really a great and beneficent reform. The Act, it is true, is characterised by some grave deficiencies; but, take it for all in all, it embodies, to a very large extent, the bold and broad views which jurisconsults of eminence have been engaged for many years past in expounding to the public, and in enforcing upon Parliament, though seemingly to no great purpose. Perhaps it will be found, at no very distant date, to take rank with those heroic measures of change which have given to each preceding Session of the present Parliament its characteristic reputation.

Parliament is now up for the holidays. So far as the United Kingdom is concerned, it seems more than probable that political controversy will subside into stagnation for some months to come. We cannot profess to recoil from the prospect. We do not expect that public affairs will go far wrong during the interval wherein they will escape immediate Parliamentary notice. The routine of the Services will suffice for the remaining months of the year. There is no great danger to be apprehended, under our Constitution, in dismissing for awhile the Supreme Council of the State. The Executive Government, even if disposed to go wrong (which few persons are inclined to believe) is hedged up on both sides by law, custom, and precedent. The real peril of the age lies not in too little but in too much legislation; not in the slowness but in the swiftness of its pace. For ourselves, we do not greatly lament what some others mourn over as the sterility of the Session. If it has been unproductive, it has been so, not in an absolute sense, but only in comparison with the fertility of a few preceding years. Meanwhile, the country still enjoys a large amount of prosperity. The wheels of national life move on easily enough. We can, therefore, echo with cordiality the concluding words of her Majesty's Message. "These and all mercies of Divine Providence will, I trust, find their suitable acknowledgment alike in our words and in our hearts."

THE COURT.

The Queen, with the junior members of the Royal family, continues at Osborne House, Isle of Wight. The news of the death of the Duchess of Inverness, yesterday week, was transmitted to the Queen by telegraph. On Saturday last her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, drove to Binstead, and visited Sir Charles Locock. The Duke of Edinburgh arrived at Osborne. On Sunday the Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service, performed at Osborne by the Rev. George Prothero. On Monday her Majesty held a Council, at which were present the Marquis of Ripon, Viscount Halifax, the Marquis of Hartington, and Viscount Sydney. Sir Arthur Helps was Clerk of the Council. The Marquis of Ripon and Viscount Sydney had audiences of the Queen. At the Council Lord Wolverton and Sir Bartle Frere, G.S.I., were sworn in members of the Privy Council. Sir Bartle Frere had audience of her Majesty. M. Leon Fernandez, the Minister of Costa Rica, presented his credentials, and M. Manuel Peralta, Secretary of Legation, was presented to her Majesty. The Hon. William Stuart, Minister at Athens, had an audience of the Queen. Her Majesty conferred the dignity of knighthood upon Mr. Alderman Thos. White and Mr. Frederick Perkins, Sheriffs of London and Middlesex. Princess Beatrice was present during the ceremony. The Queen, with the members of the Royal family, has driven to Ryde and to other places in the island. Her Majesty has also witnessed, from the Royal yacht, the several regattas of the Royal Yacht Squadron during the week. The Queen has entertained at dinner the Prince and Princess of Leiningen, Earl Granville, Lord and Lady Odo Russell, Lieutenant-General Sir Francis Seymour, Major-General and the Hon. Mrs. Ponsonby, and Colonel the Hon. W. Colville. The twenty-ninth anniversary of the birthday of the Duke of Edinburgh was duly celebrated at Osborne on Wednesday, and Royal salutes were fired from Portsmouth and from the Channel fleet, lying at Spithead. Prince Arthur arrived at Osborne on Wednesday, in H.M.S. Enchantress, from Hamburg.

The Countess of Caledon has succeeded the Duchess of Roxburghe as Lady in Waiting, the Hon. Mary Lascelles has succeeded the Hon. Mary Pitt as Maid of Honour in Waiting, and Major-General the Hon. Arthur Hardinge, C.B., has arrived as Equerry in Waiting to the Queen. The Hon. Honatia Stopford and Colonel Du Plat have arrived at Osborne.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales and the Grand Duke Cesarewitch and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna arrived at Osborne Cottage, Isle of Wight, yesterday (Friday) week, from Goodwood Park. Their Royal and Imperial Highnesses have witnessed the Royal Yacht Squadron Regatta, and the Prince and the Cesarewitch have accompanied the yachts in some of the matches. The Princess and the Cesarevna have taken frequent drives with the Queen. The Cesarewitch, accompanied by the Duke of Edinburgh, visited Prince and Princess Alexander of Oldenburg on Monday at Steephill Castle, Ventnor. The Prince of Wales has fixed Tuesday, the 19th inst., as the day upon which his Royal Highness will formally declare the public works at Holyhead Harbour completed.

The Duchess of Cambridge, accompanied by the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, has left St. James's Palace for the Duchess's château at Rumpenheim, near Frankfurt.

Prince Christian inspected the Berkshire volunteers in Windsor Great Park yesterday week, and the successful competitors at the recent shooting at Reading were presented with their prizes by Princess Christian.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck have left to visit the Royal Highnesses of Germany.

THE CORONATION IN NORWAY.

The English Prince Arthur, as our readers know, was present when the new King of Sweden and Norway, Oscar II., and his Queen, Sophia, were crowned in the old Cathedral of Trondhjem or Dronheim, as the name is sometimes written, on the 18th ult. Their coronation at Stockholm took place a few weeks ago. The two kingdoms of Sweden and Norway are united by the person of their one Sovereign, but there are two separate Diets or Parliaments, two armies and navies, and two national Governments. The administrative capital of Norway is Christiania; but Trondhjem, much farther north, retains its privilege, as the more ancient city, of having the crown of St. Olaf put on the King's head in its venerable Cathedral Church. A description of this place, with some notices of its history, may be read in Mr. J. S. Shepard's little book, "Over the Dovrefjeld," just published by Messrs. H. S. King and Co. Trondhjem is situated in latitude 60 deg. north, at the head of a fjord or inlet of the North Sea. It was founded in the tenth century by King Olaf Tryggvesen; but, having been often destroyed by fire, and rebuilt chiefly of wood, there are few appearances of great antiquity. The streets are very wide, paved with stone, and laid out at right angles. The population does not exceed 15,000 or 20,000, but there is some trade in the port, and many small merchant-vessels and fishing-boats lie there. The Cathedral, built in the thirteenth century, must once have vied with the finest examples of Norman and Gothic ecclesiastical architecture. Its length was 346 ft., and its breadth 84 ft., but 140 ft. at the west end; there were five towers and spires, the grand central spire 250 ft. high. These glories of the west front and central tower were long since destroyed by more than one conflagration; but the transepts, the choir, and the sacristy or chapter-house are still available for religious services. Two styles of architecture, Norman and Early Gothic, are mixed in some parts of the building, the round and the pointed arches being placed side by side in the north transept. The choir is richly and exquisitely decorated, with a most graceful structure of light pillars and open arches over the shrine where St. Olaf, the warlike missionary King, Olaf Haraldson, was laid sixty years after his death.

King Oscar and Queen Sophia arrived at Trondhjem on the 16th, Wednesday, about daybreak. They were followed in the evening of that day by the British Channel squadron, under the command of Rear-Admiral G. T. Phipps Hornby. But the British squadron had saluted their Majesties on the day before, while lying in Hordholm Bay. This squadron, which had come across the North Sea from Leith, consisted of the ironclads Agincourt, Hercules, Northumberland, and Sultan, with the Valorous as tender. It was joined on the Wednesday by the Admiralty yacht Enchantress, with his Royal Highness Prince Arthur. The King had journeyed overland from the North Cape, crossing the boundary mountains, to the seacoast of Norway, and had embarked in the Royal steamer St. Olaf, which conveyed him to Trondhjem. The Queen had come, meanwhile, from Christiania in the Swedish corvette Balder, meeting her Royal husband on the Monday, at Orland, near the mouth of the fjord leading into Trondhjem. Their Majesties here joined company on board the St. Olaf, and entered the winding channel of the strait, between the islands at the mouth of the fjord, thence passing up to the town of Trondhjem, where they were met with a loyal and affectionate welcome. They sojourned at the Stiftsgaarden, a comfortable two-storied mansion, but, not like a palace.

The streets of the town, on the day of the coronation, had a gay appearance with plenty of Norwegian flags, red bearing a white and blue cross, and with many figures of the heraldic Norwegian lion, holding a battleaxe in his paws. Troops, in dark green or dark blue uniforms, were posted on guard; the bells rang merrily; and the foreign war ships in the harbour, which were dressed with all their flags, fired a Royal salute at ten o'clock in the forenoon. The British ships have been named; the Agincourt bore the flag. The German Empire had sent four ships of war—the Hertha, on which Admiral Heldt's flag was hoisted, the Vineta, the Ariadne, the Arcona, and the tender-boat Nautilus. Denmark had sent one frigate, the Sjælland, on board which Prince Waldemar served as a naval cadet. The Swedish and Norwegian fleets were, of course, strongly represented; in the Swedish squadron was the Balder, on which the King's second son, the Duke of Gothland, served his apprenticeship as a sailor. The Royal procession left Stiftsgaarden at a quarter past ten, and proceeded through the Munksgården (the Monks' street) to the northern side of the cathedral. The head of the cortege consisted of lower court and state functionaries, who failed to excite much interest, as general attention was concentrated on the principal actor in this imposing ceremony. The King was on foot with the rest of the procession. As soon as his stern, manly face was seen, enthusiastic hurrahs burst forth, which did not end as long as a glimpse could be caught of the popular Sovereign. The Queen, also on foot, with her long white silk train, embroidered with silver, borne by three maids of honour, was greeted with the heartiest cheering. The King wore a General's uniform under his ermine cloak, with the chain of the Order of the Seraphim and the plaques of St. Olaf and Charles XIII. The Crown Prince, a handsome lad of fifteen, was dressed as a Norwegian chasseur, his young brothers wearing the uniforms of the artillery and light cavalry. Much attention was attracted by the presence of Prince Arthur of England, who wore the uniform of the Rifle Brigade. The procession took rather more than half an hour in passing.

On entering the cathedral the King was received by the Bishop of Trondhjem, supported by two other Bishops and surrounded by numerous clergymen. After several short prayers, he was conducted to an arm-chair placed on the right side of the altar, the bearers of the Imperial banner and of the Royal insignia ranged in a half circle behind him. The Queen was received in like manner, and conducted to her chair, opposite the King's. When all were placed, the organ ceased playing, and the King and Queen knelt in prayer in solemn silence. The Royal insignia were deposited on the altar and Divine service began, introduced by the first part of a coronation cantata, composed by Lindermann. After several hymns and prayers the Bishop of Hamar preached the sermon, which was well adapted to the occasion, and not too long. Then the King rose and went forward to the Royal throne placed upon some steps raised in front of the altar. The princely mantle was taken from his shoulders and the Royal mantle, with the gold embroidered crowns upon purple velvet and with borders of ermine, was put on him in its stead. The King knelt upon the footstool before him. The Bishop, dipping his finger in the Anointment horn, now made the sign of the cross on the brow, the breast, the temple, and the hand-joints, saying—"May the Almighty, Eternal God pour over you His spirit and grace, that you may with wisdom and strength and goodwill so rule over us that the name of the Lord be glorified, that right and truth prevail, that the weal of the land and of the people be furthered and confirmed."

Sitting upon the throne, the King had the crown placed upon his brow, and received from the hands of the Bishop the sceptre, the globe, and the sword, which had hitherto been carried lying in its scabbard on a cushion. It was now understood, and when returned by the King, was borne high up-lifted by General Røder. When all these ceremonies, each accompanied by an appropriate sentence, had been performed, the King-at-Arms lifted up his staff and exclaimed, "Now King Oscar II. is crowned King of Norway, he and nobody else." The cheers greeting the announcement and the flourishes from the trumpeters had scarcely begun before the Royal salute of 112 guns announced to the crowds outside that the solemn act had been accomplished. After a last prayer from the Bishop, the King rose from the throne and returned to the chair in the nave, and the Queen was conducted to the throne, there to undergo the same series of ceremonies, the anointment in her case being only on the brow and hand joints, followed by the announcement of the King-at-Arms that now Sophia Wilhelmina Marianne Henrietta had been crowned Queen of Norway, "she and nobody else." The concluding verses of the cantata brought the act of coronation to its close, and when all was over the procession formed again in the same order as before, and left the cathedral to return to the Stiftsgaarden. The King and Queen walked in full regal pomp, wearing their Royal crowns, carrying in their hands the sceptre and globe. The Queen, for whom the fatigues of the day had been almost overwhelming, looked pale, and evidently had to make the strongest efforts to collect her failing strength. At half-past one the last lines of the procession disappeared behind the gates of the Stiftsgaarden, and the coronation was over. At the Royal table, in the banqueting-hall of the Stiftsgaarden, covers were laid for 700 guests.

Our view of the ships at Orland, when the King and Queen met each other, in presence of the Norwegian and British squadrons, is from a sketch by Mr. C. F. M. Somerset, midshipman of H.M.S. Northumberland. The two views of the ships in the harbour of Trondhjem—namely, that of the British squadron entering the harbour, and that of the combined squadrons firing a Royal salute, are from sketches by Mr. G. H. Weeks, engineer of H.M.S. Agincourt. Mr. Somerset contributed also the sketch of the Coronation Ceremony in the Cathedral, which supplies the Illustration on our front page.

SKETCHES IN SPAIN.

The frequency of civil wars in Spain, like the ancient tribal feuds and faction-fights in Ireland before the English conquest, may perhaps be ascribed to a predilection for the exciting amusement of looking on at any sort of combat, whether or not connected with the rivalry of political parties. It may, indeed, be a kind of popular entertainment to see the Carlist guerrilla leaders skirmishing in the northern provinces, and the Red Republicans in the south and east, as well as to delight in the exhibition of a bull-fight, or even such a duel of pugnacious birds as is shown in our Artist's sketch of a favourite Sunday sport at Madrid. Cock-fighting, we lately saw, is a practice not yet quite extinct in England; but in Spain it flourishes and keeps a high rank among fashionable pastimes. Its code of rules is duly recognised and studied by a numerous class of professors, connoisseurs, and amateurs of this noble art and science; and a regular theatre is established for the display of gallantous valour, adjoining the arena of the well-known bull-fights. The men belonging to the bull-ring are commonly those who breed and sell, or bring into the cock-pit, the most highly-esteemed combatants with beak and claw, some of which are rated at very high prices, as much as £50 or even £100 being paid for a cock of superior prowess and renown. Those brought from the Canary Isles are considered the most valuable, and fetch the most money. At the appointed time for a grand cock-fight there is a crowd of eager spectators, very mixed company, who speak loudly of the merits of those birds which they choose to commend, the coloran or red one, the cola corta or short-tailed one, and lay bets on the issue of the fight. Every incident of its progress, every flying leap, dig of the beak, or scratch of the spur, is punctually noted by the sporting reporters, and becomes part of history for the instruction of future generations. So high a degree of enthusiasm prevails that the owner of a valiant cock, which died the death of a hero in the hour of martial victory, was seen to drink the blood pouring from a wound in its mangled head—a grateful tribute of admiring affection.

Cleethorpes Pier, at Hull, was opened, on Monday, amidst great local demonstrations.

The foundation-stone of a chapel in connection with the new Seamen's Orphanage at Liverpool was laid yesterday week, in Newsham Park, by Mr. Chas. M'Ever. The Mayor presided.

Mr. Boord, the Conservative candidate, has been returned for Greenwich, he having polled 745 more votes than all the other candidates put together. Those who voted for Mr. Boord, however, were 179 less in number than those who polled for the Conservatives at the last election. Only about half the electors on the register polled. The official return is as follows:—Mr. Boord (Conservative), 4525; Dr. Baxter Langley (Liberal), 2379; Mr. Angerstein (Liberal), 1063; Sir John Bennett (Liberal), 324; Mr. Pook (Conservative), 27; Mr. Coningsby (Liberal Conservative), 27.—Mr. Allsopp has been elected at Lichfield, the numbers being—Allsopp (Conservative), 2630; Jaffray (Liberal), 2693.—Dundee has declined the Parliamentary services of Mr. Fitzjames Stephen and Mr. Edward Jenkins in favour of those of its ex-provost, Mr. Yeaman. The latter polled 5297 votes, against 4010 given to Mr. Jenkins, while the Ministerial candidate (Mr. Fitzjames Stephen) got only 1086. All three candidates were Liberals.

It may be remembered that, in November of last year, we gave some account of the Swedish Arctic exploring expedition to the north of Spitzbergen, with a sketch of the two vessels in a harbour on the coast of that island, where they had last been seen by one of our correspondents. Much anxiety was then felt concerning the fate of the adventurous party, who were known to be insufficiently provided with food and other stores for a winter sojourn in that rigorous climate. We are glad now to learn, from the reports of Mr. Benjamin Leigh Smith's private expedition this summer, that the hardy Swedes were found on June 15 still living on board their ships fixed in the ice off Mosell Bay, on the north coast of Spitzbergen; and, as they have had a mild winter, only two men have died, though the food was reduced to half rations. They were, of course, greatly relieved by the arrival of Mr. Leigh Smith, who gave them a timely supply of provisions. This account, with other interesting particulars, is furnished by Mr. R. E. Potter, an Eton youth of seventeen, in a letter to his father, Mr. T. B. Potter, of Buile Hill, Manchester, M.P. for Rochdale. The young gentleman, with two friends, Mr. Chermiside and Mr. Eaton, is a guest and comrade of Mr. Leigh Smith in this expedition, the third undertaken and conducted by Mr. Leigh Smith at his own cost, to explore those remote parts of the North Sea. It was the Samson, Mr. Leigh Smith's vessel employed last summer, that had on board our correspondent, a naval officer, who made the sketch we engraved last November. Mr. Leigh Smith is a son of the late Mr. John Benjamin Smith, M.P. for Stockport and Norwich.

MINISTERIAL CHANGES.

Very considerable changes have been effected in the composition of the Ministry. The President of the Council, Lord Ripon, who has for some time desired to retire, will take the opportunity offered by the close of the Session and give effect to that intention. Very urgent private affairs have induced him to resign office.

Mr. Childers will also, and for the same reason, retire for a while from public business, but he will continue to discharge the duties of the Duchy of Lancaster so long as his services may be required.

Mr. Baxter, whose resignation we have announced elsewhere, retires without the slightest interruption of the personal or political relations which unite him with the party and the Administration.

Mr. Bruce will receive a Peerage and will succeed Lord Ripon as Lord President of the Council.

Mr. Bright will succeed Mr. Childers in the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Lowe, who will leave the Exchequer, will succeed Mr. Bruce in the office of Home Secretary.

The Chancellorship of the Exchequer will be held by Mr. Gladstone together with the office of First Lord of the Treasury. These offices have been frequently held by the same Minister, the latest instances being those of Mr. Canning in 1827 and Sir Robert Peel in 1834-5. The increase of business since that period will, however, require an addition to the staff of the Treasury. Mr. Dodson will, therefore, take the Financial and Mr. Arthur Peel the Parliamentary, Secretaryship, and Lord F. Cavendish will join the Board on a footing which will give him precedence over the junior Lords, and assign to him the duty of specially co-operating with and assisting the Financial Secretary.

Mr. A. Greville has been offered a Lordship of the Treasury.

Several other changes, including the appointment of a Master of the Rolls, are in contemplation.

Last week the new district Church of St. Paul, New Southgate, was consecrated by the Bishop of London, who also preached. The church was designed by Mr. Gilbert Scott.

The Rev. J. T. Fowler has been appointed Hebrew lecturer at the University of Durham.

The Rev. T. W. Sidebotham has received a gold watch and chain from the Dean and clergy of Guernsey, a drawing-room clock from the Guernsey Ladies' Educational Association, a cake-basket from the Ladies' College, and other presents.

Dr. Harold Browne, Bishop of Ely, is to be translated to the see of Winchester, vacated by the death of Bishop Wilberforce. A portrait of Dr. Browne will be given in a future Number. It is announced by the Guardian that the see of Ely will be filled by the Rev. Dr. Woodford, Vicar of Leeds.

On Tuesday morning the Bishop of London consecrated the new Church of St. Luke, in the Early English style, which has been built on the Redcliffe estate, South Kensington, at a cost of £16,000, to seat upwards of 1000 persons. The church has been built at the expense of the Vicar-Designate, the Rev. Mr. Handcock, and his friends. The architect is Mr. Godwin.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Rugby School closed its summer term on Thursday week. On the examination of the year being concluded, the names of the successful candidates for exhibitions in the sixth form were—Steel, Miller, Pearson, ma., Frankall, Hopkins, and Newall.

The Rev. H. E. Booth, M.A., who has long been known as an able master at Marlborough, has been appointed to the mastership of University College.

Mr. M. S. Forster, Head Master of the International College, Isleworth, has been appointed Head Master of Oswestry School.

The Rev. Edgar Sanderson, M.A., late Head Master of Stockwell Grammar School, has been elected Head Master of King Edward the Sixth's Grammar School at Macclesfield.

The Rev. Dr. Lowe has been installed as the first provost of Denstone College, near Alton Towers. The Bishop of Lichfield officiated at the ceremony, which was followed by a luncheon.

A pleasing instance of that generosity which has always been supposed to attend a liberal education was, yesterday week, notified in the distribution of prizes at University College School. Mr. Key, the Head Master, said that the Cook prize had been gained by Mr. Kikuchi, a Japanese, next to whom came Mr. White, who, but for his unselfish conduct, would probably have been first. Kikuchi, having to go up for matriculation at London University, lost some lectures; and White placed his notes at the disposal of his competitor.

Prizes have recently been distributed as follow:—At University College School, by Mr. R. N. Fowler, M.P.; at Malvern College, by the Rev. J. Gregory Smith, Vicar of Malvern and Bampton Lecturer; at Dover College, by Dr. Payne Smith, Dean of Canterbury; at Newton Abbott College, by the Bishop of Exeter; at St. Marylebone and All Souls' Grammar School, by Mr. Shirley Brooks; at St. Clement's High School, Notting-hill, by the Hon. W. Ashley; and at the King's School, Ely, by the Bishop of Ely. The schools were all stated to be in a flourishing condition.

The Extra Supplement.

MAP OF AUSTRIA AND GERMANY.

The Large Map, presented with this week's Number of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, displays all that part of the Continent of Europe which lies between London and the farthest provinces of the Austrian empire, in a south-easterly direction, or the Baltic provinces of Prussia, which are an important part of the German empire, towards the north-east. We have chosen this subject of geographical illustration as more especially suitable to the present season, when so many of our readers are leaving England for a tour in Germany and Austria, to be combined with a visit to the Great Exhibition at Vienna. As an additional provision for their convenience, we have inserted a Plan of the City of Vienna in one corner of the Extra Sheet; and we may again commend to their attention, for practical use, the Bird's-Eye View of that City, with the description which accompanied it, published at the time of the Exhibition opening, in the first week of May. To the departing tourists not bound for Vienna, but for Switzerland and the Tyrol, or to ascend the Rhine and plunge into the Schwarzwald of Baden, or to traverse the sunny plains of Burgundy and descend the Rhone, or to cross the Alpine passes to the Italian lakes, this comprehensive Map of Central Europe will prove equally useful. We take the opportunity of recommending for their service, on the routes just named, a handy little volume, newly issued by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, and Searle, called a "Guide to the North-East of France," including Picardy, Champagne, Burgundy, Lorraine, and Alsace, with Belgium and Holland, the Valley of the Rhine to Switzerland, and the south-west of Germany, to Italy by the Brenner Pass. The compiler of this Guide is Mr. C. B. Black, author of an excellent Guide to Paris; and there is an edition published containing the Paris Guide, together with the Guide to Eastern France and Western Germany. For the readers who prefer to invade the Austrian Empire and to see the Vienna Exhibition, we have before mentioned a little foreign-printed handbook—the London publishers of which are Messrs. Longman—called the "Handy Guide to Vienna; or, Wanderings through Vienna and its Neighbourhood," by B. Bucher and K. Weiss, translated from the German by Griffin. It supplies nearly all the topographical, historical, and practical information that an English visitor is likely to want in an ordinary brief sojourn at Vienna, with a minute description of the plan of the Exhibition. To this last we shall perhaps again have occasion to refer, as we propose next week to give an Engraving of the Plan of the Exhibition. In the mean time, what is now placed before our readers, aided by the study of the "Continental Bradshaw," will enable them to understand the railway and steam-boat routes and the interesting countries to be traversed on their way either to Vienna or to Berlin, or to the intermediate provinces of Saxony and Bohemia, which were but nine years ago the scene of a great military struggle, resulting in the most important political changes, between the Austrian and Prussian monarchies. It is a very satisfactory reflection that all parties seem now to have fairly acquiesced in the new arrangement, and that the Austrian and the new German Empire live at peace with each other.

THE VIENNA EXHIBITION.

VIENNA, Monday, Aug. 4.

Pesth, a week ago, was the scene of great rejoicings and festivities. On Thursday week the members of the international jury of the Vienna Exhibition were invited, with their families and friends, to take part in a trip to the capital of Hungary, organised by the Hungarian Exhibition Commission and the municipality of Pesth; and on the Saturday following they left Vienna on board two special steamers gaily decorated with flags and streamers in honour of the occasion, and having Zigeuner musicians on board. The journey down the Danube—past Lobau and the Marchfeld, the scene of many a desperate struggle between the first Napoleon and Archduke Charles; past Thelben, which forms, as it were, an entrance-gateway to Hungary; past Presburg, the walls of whose palace, now a shattered ruin, echoed some century and a quarter ago with that impulsive shout "Moriatur pro rege nostro Maria Theresia!" past sullen-looking Komorn, la pucelle; and picturesque Gran, with its imposing cathedral—was extremely enjoyable. At Waitzen the steamers were met by the Fiume, the decks and cabins of which were crowded with inhabitants of Pesth, who had come to escort us to their city; and it was amid a continuous shout of "Eljen! Eljen!" that the journey to Pesth was resumed, and where the steamers arrived about half past eight in the evening. The inhabitants of every town, of every village that was passed, had all turned out in gala attire, and, grouping themselves round the steam-boat jetty, invariably decorated with bunting, loudly cheered, and bade the guests of Hungary "God speed." The forts and castles which look down upon the "Schönen blauen Donau" had, moreover, each fired its salute of honour; but the scene at Pesth was impressive beyond description. The windows of the houses commanding a view of the landing-place were filled with people, and the broad footpaths of the streets were thronged with an excited crowd, kept back by a cordon of Hungarian cavalry and mounted police. The guests were received with boisterous "Eljens!" uncovered heads, and waving handkerchiefs; and after having been provided with rooms in the best hotels of the city, assembled the same evening in the large hall of the Redoute, where an excellent supper was served. The next day's round of sight-seeing included visits to the palace gardens, the view from which across the Danube is singularly grand, the great ironfoundry of Ganz, the Ráczfűrdő, the Kaiserbad, and the magnificent bathing establishment on the beautifully-wooded Margaret island through which the guests were driven in tramway cars to the large restaurant where luncheon had been prepared. On returning from the island the Pesth cattle market and abattoirs were inspected, and in the evening there was a magnificent banquet at the Hôtel Hungaria, to which it was estimated nearly a thousand persons sat down, including several members of the Hungarian Ministry. The Burgomaster of Pesth presided at the tables in the courtyard of the hotel, having on his right hand Baron Schwarzenborn, the director of the Vienna Exhibition, and on his left Dr. Banhaus, the Austrian Minister of Commerce. The banquet, at which numerous speeches were made, was followed by a torchlight procession of the Buda-Pesth fire brigade, accompanied by the spirited strains of Hungarian music—a magnificent and most exciting spectacle; and later in the evening by a reception at the residence of M. Joseph de Szclavy, the Prime Minister of Hungary, from the terrace of which the guests gazed down upon the illuminations of the city.

On Monday the visitors were conveyed by special steamer to Alt Ofen to inspect the ironfoundry, wharves, and docks of the Danube Steam-Ship Company, when a steam-boat was launched sideways into the river for their especial gratification. Returning to Pesth, the remainder of the morning was devoted to the Academy of Sciences, the Esterhazy picture gallery, and the splendid natural history collection of the National Museum, at which places guards of honour were posted, and bevy of beautiful ladies were assembled to meet us. Next came an excursion to the town park by tramway, followed by a déjeuner in the Zoological Gardens. In the afternoon the Steinbau establishment for fattening pigs and the Kobanya waterworks were visited by some of the guests, the remainder returning to town to take a little rest. At six o'clock another banquet was served at the Hôtel de l'Europe, at which Dr. Banhaus, the Austrian Minister of Commerce, made an important political speech in connection with the union of Austria and Hungary, to which M. de Szclavy, the Hungarian Prime Minister, very cordially responded. Representatives of almost all the nationalities followed with special toasts; and Lieutenant Anstey, official delegate to the international jury, returned thanks on behalf of the British Commission and jurymen for the cordial and hospitable reception they had received in Pesth, coupling his remarks with a toast to "Hungary and her King." The same evening the visitors left Pesth for Vienna by three special trains.

In England we are apt to plume ourselves upon our hospitality, but we might have profited much by a study of the magnificent and attentive reception given by the citizens of Buda-Pesth to their guests, who were relieved from the smallest trouble on their own account, from the moment they set foot on shore until they found themselves in the railway-train which was to conduct them back to Vienna. Carriages without limit were at their service during the whole of their stay; mounted police kept the way clear on the various excursions; members of the committee, comprising the principal inhabitants of Buda-Pesth, were stationed at every point, to direct and give explanations to their guests; while the Hungarian committee watched carefully over the table arrangements, and saw that the demands of their numerous visitors were scrupulously attended to, they themselves not sitting down to table until after the conclusion of the various repasts. No one who was a recipient of the generous hospitality of the city of Buda-Pesth on Sunday and Monday last can ever forget the marked attention of which he was individually the object.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, Aug. 7.

The oft-talked-of "fusion" of the Legitimist and Orleanist interests has again been brought forward. Time after time the settlement of this difficulty has been attempted; but, however favourably things were made to appear for the moment, some unforeseen occurrence was sure to arise and to destroy all hopes of a permanent reconciliation between the elder and younger branches of the Bourbons. On the present occasion a certain result has undoubtedly been so far achieved, though whether it will have any ultimate effect upon the destinies of France, or even of the two Royal houses, is as yet a matter of the merest speculation. Still, something has really been done this time; for a personal interview, said to be of a most satisfactory character, has taken place between the Comte de Chambord and the Comte de Paris, who left Paris for Vienna last Thursday evening, accompanied by the Prince de Joinville. It is impossible to arrive at any very just appreciation of the real importance of this interview; but, from a certain amount of cordiality expressed by the journals of both parties, it would seem that matters are looking favourable. Only the persons actually concerned are as yet aware, however, whether the reconciliation is of a political as well as of a family character. Whatever its actual nature may be, it has caused great commotion in the Republican camp, though M. Thiers, at a banquet which he gave before his departure for Switzerland, sought to reassure his party by reiterating his conviction that the fusion could never take place, and need occasion no uneasiness for the Republic.

Nancy was evacuated on Friday last by the Germans. Their departure took place in the quietest manner, and was unmarked by any incident worth noting. The orthodox display of tricoloured bunting at once followed, the theatre was reopened in the evening for the first time since the war, and bands of music paraded the principal thoroughfares. The French troops arrived on Sunday evening, and were warmly received. But though things passed off so quietly in the ancient capital of Lorraine, slight disturbances have taken place in other parts of that province. At Raon l'Étape a riot took place, resulting in the stoning of the sous-préfet and of an officer of gendarmes. Apropos of the departure of the Germans, it may be mentioned that the ladies of Mulhouse have presented M. Thiers with a gold locket and an accompanying address, commemorating the liberation of Belfort. Such a testimonial was certainly deserved.

We have an English theatrical company over here, under the management of Mr. Ryder, endeavouring to teach the Parisians the beauties of Shakespeare. Circumstances, however, are terribly against the success of such an effort. The weather is intensely hot, and though the Théâtre de l'Athénée, which they have selected as the scene of their labours, is built in a cellar, it is none the cooler for that; so that the pleasure-seeker finds the open-air concerts of the Champs Élysées far preferable. Besides, the members of the beau monde, who might have been induced by curiosity to patronise such a novelty, are already on the wing. Another visitor of far less pleasant character is announced in the shape of cholera, which has broken out, though comparatively in a mild form.

It is rumoured that a duel took place yesterday morning between M. Edouard Hervé, of the Journal de Paris, a warm journalistic partisan and personal friend of the Orleanist Princes, and the well-known writer, M. Edmond About. The latter is reported slightly wounded. The cause of the encounter is said to have been an article upon the fusion from the pen of M. Hervé.

The Government has decided to appoint a Special Commission to inquire into the practicability of making at Boulogne a new deep-water harbour, which shall be accessible at all hours of the tide to steamers of the largest size. Marshal MacMahon paid a flying visit to Boulogne yesterday in connection with this subject.

On Tuesday the new commercial treaty between England and France came into force, the ratifications having been exchanged on the previous day.

SPAIN.

At length the Government forces have made head against the insurgent Federalists. Seville, Cadiz, and Granada have surrendered. Telegrams from Madrid state that the energy displayed by the Government has produced a good impression, and that the troops are now fighting with valour and enthusiasm. The attack on Valencia was being carried on with vigour. A powder-magazine had exploded, by which some of the insurgents were killed. After the repression of these cantonal movements the Government promises to act with equal vigour against the Carlists. The Carlists, under Don Alphonso, have been defeated in a fight in Catalonia; but Don Carlos, it is reported, has succeeded in capturing the fortress of Estella, with all the garrison. The London Carlist Committee received the following telegram from Biarritz on Thursday:—"A great battle has just been fought at Elgueta, in which the Carlists were victorious. The Republican General Loma, and 600 men, were taken prisoners. General Lizarraga was wounded. The insurgent vessels Almansa and Vitoria have been taken by the English and German vessels and escorted to Carthagena. The Villa de Madrid, which has gone over to the insurgents, is being watched by a foreign man-of-war. The Vigilante has been restored to the Government."

HOLLAND.

The monetary commission has presented a fresh report to the King. Considering that Germany has adopted a monetary system based upon a gold standard, it recommends the introduction of the same system into Holland.

GERMANY.

The Emperor of Germany arrived at Gastein on Tuesday evening, and was very cordially received.

The Prince Imperial of Germany arrived on Tuesday at Christiania, on a visit to King Oscar.

The first detachment of the army of occupation in France arrived in Berlin on Wednesday, and met with a popular ovation at the railway station.

Archbishop Ledochowski, the refractory primate of Posen, has been summoned by the Prussian Government to appear before a criminal court for infraction of the new ecclesiastical laws. Professor Rensch, an Old Catholic, has been elected Rector of the University of Bonn. The mathematician Professor Weierstrass, a Roman Catholic, has been elected Rector of the University of Berlin.

RUSSIA.

The Ambassador from Kashgar had an interview with the Emperor on Tuesday, at Tzarsko-Selo, when he presented to his Majesty an autograph letter of the Khan, in a silver case. In reply to the speech of the Ambassador, the Emperor said he hoped that the good neighbourly relations which had been established between the two countries would be maintained and supported by the Khan in the same spirit as had been established by the treaty concluded in 1872. The Emperor then invited the Ambassador to be present at a review of the troops; and, after it was concluded, he dined with his Majesty in the Imperial tent, where he was introduced to and conversed with the Empress and other members of the family of the Czar. Advice from Khiva state that the Khan is living there in his palace, and that he is on excellent terms with the Russian Generals. The Russian troops are in a satisfactory state of health. The Czar has conferred on General Kauffmann an Imperial order of the second class in recognition of the skill he has shown in conducting the Khivan expedition. Medals are to be issued to all those who took part in it, and various promotions are to be made. The cross of the Order of St. George of the third class has been conferred upon Generals Werekfin and Golowatscheff. The Grand Dukes Alexis-Alexandrowitch and Nicholas-Constantinowitch have been promoted to colonelcies. Prince Eugene of Leuchtenburg has been appointed aide-de-camp to the Emperor, and Colonel Lomakin has been promoted to the rank of Major-General.

DENMARK.

Judgment was given, on Wednesday, at Copenhagen, on the Socialist leaders accused of organising the labouring classes of Denmark to overthrow by force, sooner or later, the existing Constitution of the country. They were condemned to periods of three to five years' penal servitude.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

The Shah passed Tuesday night in last week at Innsbruck, and then proceeded by rail to Salzburg, where a grand reception took place, the whole garrison being paraded to receive him. In the evening the mountains were illuminated. On Wednesday, at noon, he dined at Linz. He arrived at Penzing in the evening, where he was welcomed by the Emperor of Austria, who accompanied him to Laxenburg, where the Shah was received by the Crown Prince, the Archdukes, and the Ministers. Thursday and Friday were devoted in a great measure to repose, the Shah merely visiting the Palace of Hetzendorf and paying a couple of visits to the Emperor and Empress at Schönbrunn. On Saturday he went to Vienna, and, in company of the Emperor, visited the Exhibition. His Majesty was present, in the evening, at a state banquet given at Schönbrunn. The Shah took part in the Royal hunt, on Monday, and dined, in the evening, at Schönbrunn. On Wednesday the Shah witnessed a review of 25,000 troops. In the evening his Majesty attended a special ballet performance at the Opera. The Emperor and several of the Archdukes and Archduchesses were present.

On Monday the Emperor received the Count de Paris, Prince de Joinville, and the Grand Duke Constantine Nicolajewitch.

The festival committee of the Vienna Municipality has determined to celebrate the Exhibition on the 17th and 19th inst.

On Friday night a fire broke out in the Exhibition, by which the Alsace-Lorraine peasant dwelling was destroyed. By the bravery and ability of the fire brigade, the adjoining agricultural annex, which was seriously threatened, was saved.

The International Patent Congress at Vienna began its sitting on Monday. Baron von Schwartz was elected honorary president, and William Siemens acting president. A resolution has been adopted, almost unanimously, that the protection of inventions should be guaranteed by all civilised nations.

The International Corn and Seed Fair was opened in Vienna on Tuesday. The number of those exhibiting specimens amounts to 150.

TURKEY.

A Times special telegram from Constantinople says that the Turkish Government has concluded a new loan for 30 millions sterling, payable in thirty-three years, and bearing 6 per cent interest. The sum formerly announced was only 15 millions.

AMERICA.

The Government bonded warehouse at New York has been burnt down, the loss being estimated at £100,000. There has been a great fire also at Portland, in Oregon. Twenty-three blocks, containing 366 buildings, were burned to the ground. One hundred and fifty houseless families are encamped in the parks. The loss is estimated at 1,500,000 dols., a large amount of which will fall upon foreign insurance companies. The Standard Oilworks, at Hunter's Point, Long Island, have been destroyed by fire by the explosion of two tank-boats, causing loss of life.

A telegram from Washington states that the Government has decided to discontinue the Ku-Klux prosecutions, and to pardon the least culpable of the members of that association.

The total amount of the national debt of the United States, according to the monthly statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, is 2,147,448,195 dols., being a decrease of 370,573 dols. during the month of July.

INDIA.

A Calcutta despatch to the Times announces that Assam has been created a Chief Commissionership, under the Viceroy, including Cachar, Sylhet, Goalparah, and the hills; and that Mr. Henry Sutherland has been appointed mercantile member of the Viceroy's Council.

AUSTRALIA.

Mr. Kinderley is the Premier of the Tasmanian Ministry. Adelaide news to June 18 announces the arrival of Mr. Anthony Musgrave, the new Governor of the colony, vice Sir James Ferguson, transferred to New Zealand. His public reception was exceedingly cordial, and his term of administration has commenced very auspiciously. A large number of emigrants is required for the South Australian harvest.

The British steamer Benachie foundered off Tarifa on the 3rd inst., but all hands were saved.

The appointment of Mr. Alexander Campbell Lowe to be Receiver-General and Treasurer for the Bahamas is gazetted.

A Melbourne telegram reports the breaking out of a mutiny on board the William Tapscott Enderby, bound for Queenstown. The captain was wounded and placed in irons by the crew.

The Gazette notifies the appointment of Dr. John Kirk, British Vice-Consul at Zanzibar, as Consul-General at Zanzibar; of Mr. James Troup as Vice-Consul at Neegata; and of Mr. W. G. Lennon-Hunt as Vice-Consul at Madrid.

The Hamburg-American Company's steamer Alabama has run down a schooner, the Emily, off Salcombe. Only four persons could be rescued; and the captain, his wife, and two children, with two of the crew, are missing. It is said that the schooner had no lights at the time of the collision.

A Constantinople telegram to the Times says that Mr. Stefanos Xenos left that city last Saturday morning for Athens, with the concession of the canalisation of the Isthmus of Corinth, signed between the Greek Government and Theodore Lubini, London bankers.

Assisted passages are granted by the Government of Canada to farm labourers, navvies, female servants, and mechanics, by the magnificent steam-ships plying to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Quebec. Free grants of 160 acres are offered in Manitoba from the splendid prairie lands of that province; and from 100 to 200 acres in other parts of Canada. A prudent farm labourer in Canada can save enough money in three or four years to stock a lot of land and commence farming for himself. For farmers, tradesmen, and mechanics there are advantageous openings in almost all parts of Canada. Returns made to the Hon. John H. Pope, Minister of Agriculture of Canada, show that ample employment and high wages can be found for upwards of 180,000 labourers and mechanics yearly. Light taxes, free schools, with the utmost freedom of political and religious opinion. On arrival in Canada, emigrants are received in depôts and cared for by Government agents, who assist in finding them immediate employment. For any information required apply to the Canadian Government agent, Mr. William Dixon, 11, Adam-street, Adelphi, London.

A three-days' national conference of Spiritualists has been held this week at Liverpool, the president being Mr. T. Everett.

A supplement to Tuesday's Gazette contains an Order in Council promulgating the new scheme for the retirement of naval officers. It is intended to take effect from Oct. 1 next.

The annual congress of the Royal Archaeological Institute at Exeter, ended on Tuesday, is declared to have been the most successful meeting of the kind ever held.

The camp of the National Artillery Association opened on Monday at Shoburness, under circumstances which augur a great success. The shooting for prizes began on Tuesday, and to-day (Saturday) the prizes will be presented.

The Rev. J. G. Cazenove, Provost of the College of Cumbria, has been elected Bishop of Argyll and the Isles by the representatives, lay and clerical, of the diocese, though a protest has been made against the election as invalid.

The troops comprising the three infantry brigades at Aldershot, with five batteries of artillery, went through the evolutions of a sham fight, on Tuesday, under the direction of General Sir Hope James Grant.

The appointment of Sir Frederick Peel, Mr. Henry Tyrwhitt Jones Macnamara, and Mr. William Philip Price to be Railway Commissioners for the purposes of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, is announced in Tuesday's Gazette.

The death is announced of Mr. J. B. Owen, the secretary of the Great Eastern Railway Company, in his sixty-third year. Mr. Owen had been in the service of the company thirty-six years, and had filled the office of secretary twenty-two years.

Mr. Gladstone has written to the Mayor of Bradford to say that there is no likelihood of his being able to accept the invitation to open the Bradford Townhall, on Sept. 10. The right hon. gentleman adds that he has no strength to spare.

Mr. James Baird, of Auchmedden, the Scotch ironmaster, has paid over to a body of trustees, to be called the Baird Trust, the sum of £500,000, to be applied for religious purposes in connection with the Church of Scotland.—The Church Missionary Society and the British and Foreign Bible Society have received donations of £5000 each from an anonymous donor, as a "thank-offering for special mercies."—The Company of Fishmongers has granted 100 gs. to the London Diocesan Penitentiary at Highgate; and the Grocers' Company has added 100 gs. to the fund for the restoration of St. Alban's Abbey.

The annual meeting of the Bedfordshire Agricultural Society was held at Bedford on Thursday week, when there was a large attendance. The classes were well filled, particularly horses, cattle, and sheep. There were 157 entries of horses of all kinds.—Very successful exhibitions of cattle, horses, sheep, pigs, and implements were held on the same day in Aberdeen and Berwick by the Royal Northern and the Northumberland Agricultural Societies.—An important meeting of the agriculturists of North Devon was held at Barnstaple, yesterday week, for the purpose of receiving an offer from the committee of the Devon Agricultural Association, founded a few years ago by the Duke of Somerset and other gentlemen, for holding the meeting next year in Barnstaple. It was resolved that the offer be accepted, and about half the amount required in subscriptions was promised at the meeting. Addresses were delivered in support of the affair by Sir Bruce Chichester, Bart., Captain Williams, M.P., and other landowners.—The Yorkshire Agricultural Show was opened on Tuesday at Harrogate. The entries are quite up to the average, and the attendance was very large. It was decided to hold the next show at Sheffield.

THE AUTUMN CAMPAIGN ON DARTMOOR

The troops assembled on Dartmoor for the autumn performance of the prescribed military manoeuvres, under the command of Major-General Sir Charles Staveley, K.C.B., were reviewed, on Saturday, by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, who stayed three days at Maristow, the seat of Sir Massey Lopes, M.P. His Royal Highness first manoeuvred the Second Division, under the command of General Smith, at Ringmoor Down, for three hours, and then proceeded to Yennadon Down, where, accompanied by Sir Charles Staveley, K.C.B., and the Staff, he inspected the First Division, under the command of General Sir E. Greathed, and put them through similar exercises. On arriving at each division he was received with a Royal salute, and at the termination of each inspection expressed himself well pleased with the appearance and discipline of the troops. The force reviewed in the morning, on Ringmoor, belonging to the Second Division, consisted of nine regiments of infantry, two batteries of artillery, the hussars, Royal Horse Artillery, Army Service Corps, Engineers, and volunteers. After the inspection it had been intended that there should be manoeuvring; but the steepness of the hill on which the troops were drawn up made it impossible for this to be carried out with any effect, and what was done must merely be considered as showing off the troops. An attack was made to the front of the original line in which the troops had been drawn up, the first brigade of the skirmishers being covered by a field battery with its 16-pounder guns. This attack was supposed to fail, and the enemy was understood to advance on the left flank. The second brigade, which, with the second field battery, had been held in reserve, then pivoted on its left, the horse artillery and cavalry advancing towards the proper front to cover the retreat which it was seen would be made eventually. The whole army retired with the covering of the horse artillery and the cavalry, the latter charging in a manner which was much approved. The troops reviewed on Yennadon in the afternoon, being the First Division, were rather superior in numbers; and there was a large assemblage of spectators from Plymouth, Tavistock, and other neighbouring towns. On Monday the Duke of Cambridge again reviewed all the troops, and in the evening published a general order, expressing his approval of their condition and behaviour. Tuesday was granted to the men as a holiday, in honour of the visit of his Royal Highness. The performances of Wednesday were to be confined to the Second Division, the two brigades of which were to be pitted against each other. The second brigade, under Brigadier-General Herbert, C.B., would represent the advanced guard of an army marching south upon Plymouth; and the first brigade, under Brigadier-General Thackwell, C.B., the advanced guard of a defending army, with the support of the marines and a battery of artillery, under Brigadier-General Rodney. The execution, however, of these movements would depend on the state of the weather, which has been very unsettled in the cloudy climate of Dartmoor. Many of the soldiers are laid up with bad colds; and nearly a hundred have been sent to the Devonport Hospital.

The two camps of the First and Second Divisions are separated from each other by a deep valley, being placed on hills a mile and a half apart. The headquarters' camp is on Roborough Down. This place is situated on the border of Dartmoor, forming part of the high grounds between the upper vale of the Plym, with its tributary stream the Meavy, and the waters that flow into the river Tavy, a few miles north of this, situate east of the high road and railroad from Plymouth to Tavistock. It is the south-western corner of the great Dartmoor highland, overlooking Plymouth and Devonport and the Tamar. Dartmoor Forest, as it is termed in the legal language of antiquity, is a wilderness, with some cultivated oases, which extends twenty-two miles from north to south, and nineteen miles from west to east, rising on the average 1600 ft. above the sea-level. It is entirely composed of granite, covered with a thin layer of peat or barren loam. The surface is boldly waving, with very little flat; and many of the summits, in colour dull green or dingy brown, are crested with huge pinnacles of grey rock and scattered fragments of the same, which seem to have burst out of the scanty turf. These projecting crags on the hill-tops are called tors; they seem to have been worn and broken into a hundred fantastic shapes by the fierce storms and wintry frosts of many thousand years; and they mostly bear the Celtic names bestowed on them by an extinct race of British people, whose gloomy superstition, like that of the Gael in mountainous Scotland, invested Dartmoor with the terrors of a wild mythology, in keeping with the scenery of this strange western region. The most picturesque scenery is to be found not upon the moor itself, which has a stern and forbidding aspect, but in the deep winding ravines of its border, especially where the Dart and the Teign descend to the lovely country of the South Hams, as above Totnes and Ashburton, and in the neighbourhood of Moretonhampstead. Most of the rivers that water North and South Devon, except the Exe, which rises in Exmoor and belongs to a different geographical region, have their source in the heart of Dartmoor, in the morasses around Craumers Pool, encompassed by the loftiest moorland hills and tors, one of them 2000 ft. high. Hence flow the Taw, the Torridge, the Ockment, the Tavy, the Dart, and the Teign. But the Plym, the Yealm, and the Erme, which seek the coast of the English Channel in the most southerly part of Devon, come from the marshy flanks of that south-western promontory, marked by Sheepstor, Fox Tor, and Pen Beacon, which is conspicuous from near Plymouth. This last-mentioned part of the great West Devonshire highland is occupied by the military camp for the autumn manoeuvres. Our Artist's sketches present several views of the local scenery; a distant view of the Plym valley and Plymouth Sound, from Hessay Tor, near the Prince's Town convict prison; one of Sheepstor village church, which is the burial-place of Rajah Sir James Brooke; the tents of the 1st Somerset Militia, who have called their encampment, on Roborough Down, by the name of "Woodland Fort;" and the hills of Beliver Tor, Sheepstor, and Leather or Lither Tor, which are not, indeed, the most remarkable, but the nearest eminences within view of the camp.

Another page of engraved sketches presents different scenes of camp life and action in the field—the pet goat of the Welsh Fusiliers' regiment, the portable printing office attached to Sir Charles Staveley's headquarters, the ambulance wagon for the medical care of sick or wounded soldiers, the temporary workshop of harness-menders for the artillery train, and the helter-skelter pace of a battery of field-guns flying over the roughest country in the hour of mimic battle. These features of autumnal campaigning experience on Dartmoor have an air of rude reality, unlike the July meeting on Wimbledon-common, or the Easter Monday congregation of volunteers on the Brighton Downs.

With reference to the brief sojourn of the Duke of Cambridge in this neighbourhood, it should be stated that his Royal Highness on Sunday went to Prince's Town, where he attended worship in the prison chapel, with choral service, and sermon by the Rev. F. A. Gardiner, Chaplain. He afterwards inspected the prison, in company with the Deputy-Governor, Captain R. D. Burgoyne, 93rd Regiment, Major Nott, the Governor, being absent on leave. This huge pile of building on Dartmoor, under the shadow of Hessay Tor, was constructed in 1834, for the confinement of 10,000 French prisoners of war. It now contains 1100 convicts, under sentence of penal servitude, who are employed in the granite quarries.

We may mention that an excellent photographic view of the camps of the First and Second Divisions has been taken by Mr. D. Groom, of Union-street, Plymouth.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The victory of Uhlán in the Goodwood Stakes is one more proof that it is almost impossible for a light-weight jockey, however strong and clever, to ride successfully round the many turns of the winding course over which this race is run. Little Morbey, who steered the Hippias filly, is fully equal to any of his rivals, and no fault could be found with his riding, but the fact remains that Uhlán, who is by no means the best four-year-old in England, gave a fair three-year-old no less than 34 lb. and a head beating; while the successes of Gomera (9 st.), Paganini (8 st. 10 lb.), and Taraban (8 st. 5 lb.) also bear out our assertion. The cup-day was certainly the most brilliant we ever saw, the weather being perfect, and the scene on the lawn quite beyond description. The Royal party were again present, and it is scarcely too much to say that half the noble families of England were represented. The Colonel beat Tourbillon very easily over a mile and a half; and then, after an interval for luncheon, the three cup candidates appeared. Cremorne may be dismissed at once. There was none of the Ascot bloom on his coat; he looked dull and jaded; and we cannot regard it as worthy of a true sportsman to run such a grand horse apparently for the sake of winning a few bets about his starting, as it must have been well known that he did not stand the remotest chance of winning. Favonius pleased many people, though he did not seem to have laid on much muscle since last year, and it was plain that his preparation had been somewhat hurried; but Flageolet had improved marvellously even since Ascot, and Jennings looked the picture of confidence. Directly the flag fell, Huxtable sent the three-year-old to the front at a cracking pace, and took a long lead of Favonius, who was some lengths before Cremorne. The last named was out of the race before they had gone half way, and though Favonius made one or two feeble attempts to close with Flageolet, he was completely settled when they got into the straight, and "the Frenchman" cantered home some thirty lengths in front of him, thus winning a most uninteresting cup from the smallest field that has run since 1854, when that wonderful mare Virago beat two others. Wild Myrtle completely reversed her Tuesday's form with Chivalrous in one of the endless Memorials; and the ridiculously easy victory of Packington in the Molecomb Stakes proved that there was some truth in the report of his high trial, though he failed to extend the flying Eccosais in the July Stakes. Friday was rather a failure in point of racing, though M. Lefevre and Fordham will scarcely coincide in this opinion, as they won four races out of the seven. Drummond (8 st. 4 lb.) ran a great horse in the Chesterfield Cup, in which he was twice disappointed in getting through his field, and yet had something in hand at the finish; and the highly-bred Regal, by Saunterer—Regalia, carried off the Stafford Stakes, though from his previous running he is clearly very moderate. In summing up the results of the week, we must not omit to mention that the "blue, white, and red" came to the fore in ten races, including two out of the three cups, and that Fordham added nine to his previous long list of successes.

There was some very fine racing on the first day at Brighton, and the attendance, if not so select, was far more numerous than at Goodwood. Lilian (8 st. 7 lb.) won the Brighton Stakes with ridiculous ease from the Hippias filly (7 st. 9 lb.); and it is quite clear that Mr. Savile, who is in wonderful form just now, could have secured the Goodwood Stakes with either of his representatives. La Couraize, who won two races at Goodwood, performed the same feat again, though Desdichado made a bit of a race with her on each occasion, and will perform better later in the season. The race for the cup was exceedingly interesting, and would have been even more so had not a slight accident necessitated the withdrawal of Winslow, who would probably have defeated Uhlán. Queen's Scholar was started to make the running for Uhlán, and the two soon held a long lead of Flageolet, whom Fordham was obliged to ride very tenderly, as he was meeting the four-year-old with so much the worst of the weights. Three quarters of a mile from home Queen's Scholar was beaten, and left Uhlán with the lead, and, in spite of every effort of Fordham, who came with a tremendous rush in the last hundred yards, he was never headed, and won cleverly by a neck. Flageolet ran wonderfully well; but it was expecting too much to ask him to beat a horse like Uhlán at a difference of only 6 lb. for the year.

The great Canterbury cricket week commenced on Monday last, under the most favourable auspices, with the usual match between North and South. The weather on the opening day was magnificent, and the attendance, if anything, larger than usual. The North, having won the toss, went to the wickets, and ran up a total of 270, to which Pinder contributed a finely played 78; eight of the wickets fell to Lillywhite, who bowled exceedingly well. Thanks chiefly to Mr. W. G. Grace (33), Jupp (80), and Mr. W. Yardley (49), the South made 369, Emmett being credited with six of their wickets. The second innings of the North fell short of their first by 73 runs, Lillywhite again proving very destructive; and the South finally secured an easy victory by seven wickets.

The champion golf-match at St. Andrews ended, last week, in favour of Strath, who defeated Morris by two holes.

The annual regatta of the Royal Yacht Squadron opened on Tuesday at Cowes. Her Majesty's cup for all yachts belonging to the squadron was sailed for by seven craft, the winner being Count Batthyany with his cutter Kriemhilda. The race for Doggett's coat and badge was rowed yesterday week. There were six competitors, and the victor was Henry George Messum, of Richmond.

Mr. Paxter has resigned the Secretaryship of the Treasury.

Succeeding to the late Sir Thomas Western, Mr. Chichester Fortescue has been appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Essex.

The Anglesey Choir Eisteddfod and Musical Festival has been held this week at Menai Bridge, in a large and elegantly decorated pavilion, capable of accommodating 2000 persons, erected near the suspension-bridge.

The Select Committee on the Civil Service writers has reported in favour of the restoration of a system of progressive payment as likely to best meet the requirements of justice and promote the efficiency of the service.

Since the printing of our Supplement, which contains the Chess article, we have received the following score of the Chess Tournament at Vienna:—Anderssen, 4 matches; Blackburne, 4; Steinitz, 3; Bird, 2½; Paulsen, 2½; Rosenthal, 2½; Scharz, 2; Cellfuhs, 1½; Herzl, 1½.

THE AUTUMN MANŒUVRES ON DARTMOOR.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

It may often be now have been reasonably asked whether the grotesque ceremonial of proroguing Parliament by Commission was worth waiting to witness. However that may be, according to individual taste and powers of endurance, the patience of those who had to partake of that formality was decidedly tried on Tuesday last. The hour of meeting in the House of Lords, on the final day of the Session, was, as usual, shortly before two o'clock. At that hour Lord Redesdale took the woolsack, the Lord Chancellor being behind the scenes, in order to form part of the procession of the Lords Commissioners, attired in their scarlet and ermine robes, and crowned with those absurd cocked hats which Peers are obliged, by a vital rule of the Constitution, to wear when the Commons are in their presence. Two patriotic Peers were there and formed the House; half a dozen ladies, looking uneasy, if not frightened, as they sat on the Peers' benches on the Opposition side, were visible; while in the diplomatic gallery General Schenck, the United States Minister, was apparent, accompanied by a party of ladies and gentlemen from his country. A more depressing condition of things for a waiting for two mortal hours cannot be conceived, even a third-class remote station on a branch line of railway, with its one porter and boy-clerk, being joyous and cheerful by comparison. Nevertheless, such was the fate of the select party assembled. The expected Royal Commissioners did not appear. In fact, the Royal Commission, which had been sent down to Osborne that morning to receive the Queen's signature, had not arrived.

And why not? Imagination could picture a scene—namely, the Cabinet sitting in solemn conclave, and “to them,” as the stage directions in old plays have it, comes a missive from the Queen's messenger to say that he cannot answer for his passage to Osborne and back by two o'clock unless he has special means of conveyance, and he suggests that a telegram should be sent to the Port Admiral at Portsmouth ordering one of her Majesty's despatch-boats to be ready at a certain hour to take the messenger over to Osborne. The presuming of a sub-subordinate official to give advice to the inner council of the realm naturally causes great indignation, and what is to be done is seriously argued. At the proper moment the Chancellor of the Exchequer raises the question of expense, and lays down that in the outset there would be a shilling for the telegram. This, however, might be borne; but then arose the matter of consequential outlay. In the first place, there would be lighting the fires and getting up steam on board the despatch-boat, besides allowances for wear and tear in the transit from Portsmouth to the Isle of Wight. Then most probably the messenger would insist on having luncheon and a whole bottle of wine on board, which the captain of the vessel would charge, and an item of at least seven-and-sixpence appear in the Miscellaneous Estimates next year, which Mr. Alderman Lusk would detect and Mr. Rylands rave over, so that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would be badgered, a process which he would be unwilling to undergo, regard being had to recent castigations to which he has been subjected. In the event it is decided that the messenger must go by the ordinary conveyances, third class by train, and fore-cabin by steamer. Accordingly the official charged with that precious document, the Royal Commission, starts by South-Western Railway, which, as is well known, can be relied on always to keep time within an hour and a half or so, and proceeds across the Channel to the Isle of Wight, in one of the ordinary steamers, probably under the command of one of those captains in the service who leave passengers, luggage, and mails behind, and does not care a—well! a farthing, for the directors of their company. The result was that at half-past three o'clock the Commission had not reached the Palace of Westminster, and the occupants of both Houses were kept in a situation akin to that of the enchanted Princess and her suite in the fairy tale, in a state of torpor until the apposite moment when the splendid young Prince comes to waken her and them.

As usual, the Speaker took the chair in the Commons at half-past one, and there were then present some fifty or sixty of those wonderful Parliamentary “continuers” who come first and stay last in the Session. Amongst them the Prime Minister was not; only two members of the Cabinet being there besides the Home Secretary, who is deputy leader in the absence of his chief, and so was obliged to be present. Let it be told that one of this chosen band was Mr. Henley, who sits more in the House, and certainly takes more hours of apparently sweet sleep in his place in Parliament, than any other member. There was a regular “paper,” and on it was one order of the day, which happened to be one of the numerous legislative failures of the Attorney-General this year; but he came forward, with a manner unabashed and a countenance even cheerful, to perform upon it the sacrificial operation of withdrawal. Not a few notices of motion for next year were given, and there were plenty of questions—notably one by Mr. Boord, the new Conservative member for Greenwich—who had only taken his seat the night before. This implies activity and mobility in him; and in truth the hon. member seemed to look about him a great deal, and especially during the long waiting above mentioned he occupied himself with a minute examination of the Mace; perhaps his Conservative instincts stirring him to wish, mentally, that he might be in his place on the day when Sir Charles Dilke moves to “Take away that bauble!” There was, of course, a development of babbling, Mr. Macfie trying to have the last word, but Mr. Montague Chambers achieving that distinction, while Mr. Callan nearly succeeded in getting up an Irish row. At a few minutes to two the talk by common consent ceased, and everyone prepared to hear the mystic three knocks on the great door by Black Rod; but in vain. Nearly half an hour passed; members went out and came in, and some took their final departure; the Speaker slipped out of the chamber, and sought his retiring-room; the clerks left their places at the table, and moved about the floor conversing with the few members that remained. Such was the situation, relieved only by the occasional arrival of intelligence that everything was yet at a standstill. At length, about half-past three, came news that the Commission had arrived; but still no change was made in the position of things, and the Speaker did not appear. Anon there went a thrilling whisper about to the effect that all was ready; the Lords Commissioners, robed and cocked-hatted, and ranged in procession-order in the Prince's Chamber, when, lo! it was discovered that one of them, and he a principal one, was missing. Here was a dilemma; his name was in the Commission; to him, on his name being called during the process of reading that instrument, would the Clerks make reverence, bowing low and genuflecting solemnly, and without his presence the proceedings, if they went on, would be null and void, and the Constitution violated. Fleet messengers were dispatched, the telegraph was set in motion, but the missing Secretary of State was not to be found. At a quarter to four, however, he made his appearance voluntarily and uncalled. By this time the Speaker had resumed the chair in the Commons, but the attendance of members had dwindled down to just eleven, so the right honourable gentleman was followed to the Lords by but a scanty train. When he returned in that denuded plight which is customary—that is, without the mace being borne before him, and without his high title being loudly announced to the House as he is about to enter—he had been joined by a few more members; but still the number of those who remained to assist in the closing scene was so comparatively small that, perhaps, the greatest of all the labours of the Speaker during the Session—that of shaking hands with every gentleman before the dispersion—was, happily, much curtailed. But the mishaps of the day had not yet ended. It is the custom, when the Commons have returned to their own House from the Lords on the day of prorogation, for the Speaker to read to those present the Queen's Speech, which they have just heard delivered by the Lord Chancellor. Now, when the Speaker took his place at the table, and smilingly extended his hand to Sir Erskine May to receive the copy of the Speech which ought to have been provided for him, behold! it was not in the hand of that admirable official—no copy had been sent to him. There was, of course, a laugh, and another waiting for ten minutes or so, during which there might have been used, if no other resource was available to supply the omission, any of the evening newspapers, which had published the Speech nearly three hours before. Of course, a copy of the Speech was obtained; but the impression remained that the last incidents of a Session of mishaps were a succession of blunders.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

The Endowed Schools Act Amendment Bill was read the second time yesterday week, the Marquis of Salisbury, however, notifying that he would, in Committee, propose amendments limiting the operation of the measure to twelve months, and providing that no scheme should be submitted for the approval of Parliament later than June 15 next. The Education Act Amendment Bill passed through Committee. The Conspiracy Law Amendment Bill was read the second time, their Lordships agreeing, on the motion of Lord Cairns, to amendments limiting the application of the measure exclusively to cases of breach of contract between masters and servants.

There was a short special sitting on Saturday, more for the purpose of business than debate, at which the following bills were passed the final stage:—The Penalties (Ireland) Bill, the Endowed Schools Act Amendment Bill, the Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment Bill, the Defence Acts Amendment Bill, the Conspiracy Law Amendment Bill, the Public Health Act (1872) Amendment Bill, the Constabulary Force (Ireland) Bill, the Expiring Laws Continuance Bill, the Railway Regulation Bill, the Royal Navy Artillery Volunteer Force Bill, and the Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment Bill. The Telegraphs Bill and the Militia Pay Acts Amendment Bill were read the second time and passed through Committee, and the Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity Bill and the Appropriation Bill were brought up from the other House and read the first time. The Commons' amendments to the Slave Trade (Consolidation) Bill and to the Elementary Education Bill were agreed to.

The standing orders were suspended on Monday for the purpose of passing the Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity Bill and the Appropriation Bill through all their remaining stages. The Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland) Bill, the Telegraphs Bill, and the Militia Acts Amendment Bill were also read the third time and passed. The Commons' reasons for disagreeing with certain of the Lords' amendments to the Turnpike Acts Continuance Bill were considered, and their Lordships' objections withdrawn. The Commons' amendments to the Gas and Water Facilities Acts (1870) Amendment Bill were agreed to. On the second reading of the Appropriation Bill, Lord Redesdale finally protested against the payment of the three millions awarded by the Geneva Arbitration to the United States, his objection being that, as the Northern States had again amalgamated with the Southern, they would be receiving money in their own wrong. The Lord Chancellor observed that, after the arbitration on the subject, the objection came too late. The bill was then read the third time and passed.

The House met at half-past two o'clock on Tuesday, but nearly an hour and a half elapsed before the concluding ceremony of the Session began. About four o'clock the Royal Commissioners appointed to prorogue Parliament took their seats in front of the throne; and, the members of the House of Commons having been summoned to attend, the Royal assent was given by Commission to the Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity Bill and several other bills, after which the Lord Chancellor read her Majesty's Message on the close of the Session. Her Majesty thanked the two Houses for the loyal promptitude with which they had voted an annuity to her son the Duke of Edinburgh, adding that she trusted his marriage would “form a new tie of amity between two great empires;” and afterwards alluded in terms of satisfaction to some of the principal measures passed during the Session. The Commission for proroguing Parliament was next read, after which the Lord Chancellor, in obedience to her Majesty's commands and in virtue of the Royal Commission, declared Parliament prorogued until Oct. 22.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Another futile attempt was made, yesterday week, to alter the terms of the proposed grant to the Duke of Edinburgh. Mr. Anderson, one of the members for Glasgow, moved that, in the event of his Royal Highness becoming Duke of Saxe-Coburg, the annuity should cease; and that the grant of £6000 to the Grand Duchess should only take effect if the Prince die before succeeding to the Duchy of Saxe-Coburg; but, in deference to the feeling of the House, the amendment was withdrawn and the bill passed through Committee. It would appear that there is more than one inspector of schools who considers that the National Anthem partakes too much of the nature of religious teaching to be sung during the hours devoted to secular instruction. Lord George Hamilton, having heard of a second inspector who has been discouraging the singing of “God Save the Queen,” asked Mr. Forster to issue a circular on the subject. The Vice-President of the Council undertook to inform the inspector referred to, on receipt of his name and address and the particulars of the case, that he was wrong if he forbade the singing of the National Anthem during any part of the school day; but declined, for the present at least, to send out a general circular to that effect. The debate on the finances of India was resumed, and again adjourned. The evening sitting lasted barely half an hour, the House having been counted out.

The Duke of Edinburgh's Annuity Bill and the Consolidated Fund Appropriation Bill were on Saturday read the third time and passed, after which the adjourned debate on the Indian Budget was resumed and concluded. The House then went into Committee on the Indian accounts, and the usual resolution was passed.

Lord Enfield stated, on Monday, what instructions had been sent to the commanders of British war-ships on the coast of Spain. The Lords' amendments to the Conspiracy Law Amendment Bill having been brought up for consideration, Mr. V. Harcourt moved that the amendments should be considered that day three months. After some discussion the motion was agreed to, and the bill withdrawn, on the understanding that the subject should be further considered during the recess, and a more complete measure introduced next Session. The adjourned debate on the second reading of the Factory Acts Amendment Bill was resumed by Mr. Hughes, who warmly supported the bill. Mr. Leith also spoke in favour of it. Mr. Mundella then announced his intention to withdraw the bill, and in doing so complained of the difficulties he had encountered in finding an opportunity for having it discussed. The bill would, however, be brought forward again. Mr. Bruce thought Mr. Mundella had exercised a wise discretion in withdrawing the bill, and urged him, before reintroducing it, to weigh carefully the objections which had been made to it, especially as regarded its effect upon the employment of women. The bill was then withdrawn. The new contract for mails between the Cape and Zanzibar and that for mails between Zanzibar and Aden were agreed to without discussion.

There was a fair attendance of members at the hour of meeting on Tuesday. Several questions were put and notices given for next Session. There was even a desultory discussion about a return which was moved, which had not long concluded when the “Black Rod” summoned the House to the Lords' Chamber. On their return the Speaker read the Speech, when all the members present took leave of the right hon. gentleman, shaking hands with him, and then slowly dispersed.

There were in the late Session 346 Acts passed—91 public, 253 local, and 2 private. Last year the number was 305—98 public, 200 local, and 7 private.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The election of an Alderman for the ward of Cordwainer terminated, yesterday week, in favour of Mr. John Paterson.

The Corporation have agreed to pay the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral £20,000 for a portion of the land fronting the cathedral. It is intended to remove the railing further back, and so materially to widen the thoroughfare.

The programme of the London International Exhibition of 1874, which is described as the fourth of the series, has been issued. It contains full directions for the guidance of intending exhibitors.

Writing from Geneva, the Grand Vizier of the Shah of Persia conveys the thanks of his Majesty to the Lord Mayor for the magnificent hospitality of the city of London, and intimates that the order of the Lion and the Sun of the second class has been conferred on his Lordship.

The bank holiday, on Monday, was generally observed in all parts of the metropolis, and the number of excursionists to the seaside and elsewhere was unusually large. The various public institutions and places of amusement in and near London were all visited by large numbers of persons, many of them excursionists from the country.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 98,072, of whom 33,102 were in workhouses and 64,970 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the years 1872, 1871, and 1870, these figures show a decrease of 3462, 21,493, and 29,256 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 451, of whom 291 were men, 129 women, and 31 children under sixteen.

A conference on the objects of the Trades Guild of Learning took place, at the Privy Council Office, Downing-street, yesterday week, where the Marquis of Ripon and Mr. Forster received Sir Antonio Brady, the Rev. H. Solly, and other gentlemen connected with the movement. After the necessity of better technical education for the English artisan had been discussed at some length, the President of the Council promised to give the proposals of the deputation the fullest and most careful consideration.

A presentation dinner was held on Wednesday at the Albion Tavern for the purpose of giving a testimonial to Mr. W. Newton, deputy chairman of the works committee of the Metropolitan Board of Works. The testimonial, which consisted of a purse of 1000 gs. and a valuable service of plate, was subscribed by the inhabitants of Mile-end, Wapping, Whitechapel, Limehouse, Bethnal-green, and other East-End parishes, as a recognition of his services in connection with metropolitan improvements.

The fifty-first annual meeting of the British Medical Association was begun, on Tuesday, in King's College. In the morning many members of the association attended service at St. Paul's Cathedral, and afterwards there were meetings of the committee of council and of the general council. The general meeting was held in the afternoon, under the presidency of Mr. Alfred Baker, who, after congratulating the association on their unparalleled prosperity and success last year, resigned the chair to the new president, Sir William Fergusson, who then read his opening address. In the evening the Lord and Lady Mayoress held a reception at the Mansion House, which was attended principally by medical gentlemen and their wives and daughters. More than 3000 were received. The Hastings gold medal has been awarded to Mr. Lawson Tait, of Birmingham, for his essay on diseases of the ovaries.

The last weekly meeting of the London School Board before the autumn vacation was held on Wednesday, Lord Lawrence being in the chair. In reply to a deputation from the Trades Guild of Learning, seeking assistance, his Lordship said the board fully recognised the importance of the object, but the subject was a large one, and they must well consider the cost before taking any step. A long discussion ensued in reference to the establishment of industrial schools; but the question was ultimately postponed till after the recess. A financial statement for the past half-year was submitted, showing that the current expenditure exceeded £40,000. Of this £24,604 was expended on schools, including maintenance, apparatus, and teachers' salaries. The outlay on capital account during the same period appears to have been £163,044. The outstanding liabilities of the board have increased to £432,164.

Last week 2299 births and 1508 deaths were registered in the metropolis, the former being 36 above and the latter 295 below the average. “With a declining mortality,” the Registrar-General says, “the deaths from diarrhoea were 375, and the deaths from simple cholera are increasing; but, while cholera has been fatal to twenty-one children, it has been only fatal to one adult, a needlewoman of the age of twenty-eight, living at 26, St. Anne-street, Limehouse, and to the daughter, aged nine, of a labourer, who was a passenger in the Rhin. London is still free from epidemic cholera; nor, with due precaution, has this great city much to dread from a disease which in the years 1849, 1854, and 1866 was fatal to 14,125, 10,733, and 5596 of its inhabitants.” Two deaths last week were referred to sunstroke, and eight were caused by street accidents. There were 28 deaths from measles, 1 from smallpox, 8 from scarlet fever, 3 from diphtheria, 41 from whooping-cough, and 22 from different forms of fever. The deaths from whooping-cough, fever, scarlatina, and measles declined, and those from measles, scarlatina, and fever were below the average.

LAW AND POLICE.

The Guardian states that the Mastership of the Rolls has been offered to the Attorney-General.

Viscount Monck has been sworn a Lord Justice of Ireland in place of the Master of the Rolls.

Judgment has been given by the Lords Justices on the appeals of Earl Delawarr and the Hon. C. C. Sackville, in reference to the Dorset estates which have formed the subject of dispute, the decision of the Vice-Chancellor being affirmed.

The Lords Justices, on Tuesday, delivered their reserved judgment upon the appeals from Vice-Chancellor Malins's decision in the suit instituted by the National Bank against three of its directors—namely, Mr. Harvey Lewis, M.P., Mr. Frazer Bradshaw Henshaw, and Sir Joseph M'Kenna—seeking to make them liable for the losses of the bank arising out of discount transactions with the limited company of Charles Lafitte and Co. The Vice-Chancellor's decree was, with certain exceptions, discharged.

Sir James Hannen has granted a rule for a new trial relative to the opposed will of the late Miss Mary Brooke. The original trial, which occupied the Court several days, ended in the jury finding for the defendant, in favour of the will propounded. The Judge thought there was ground for further consideration.

Sequestration against Mr. George Elliott, the member for North Durham, obtained during his absence in Egypt, has been set aside by the Lords Justices of the Court of Chancery, the case having come before them on appeal. Their Lordships stigmatised the order as a serious abuse of the procedure of the Court, and discharged it with costs.

Sir Robert Phillimore, sitting with the Trinity Masters, has pronounced judgment on the claim of the owners of the Batavier against the Khedive, as owner of the Charkieh. His decision is that the Batavier was to blame for the collision; but, as she had a pilot on board and his orders were obeyed, she was exempt from damages.

An action for breach of promise of marriage was tried at York on Saturday. The plaintiff, Miss Calvert, who is about twenty-seven years of age, is a cousin of Mr. Brown, the defendant, and lived at Yarm with her mother. An engagement was entered into between them, and the day was fixed, when suddenly the defendant refused to have any more to do with the plaintiff. Great laughter was caused by the reading of the defendant's letters, which were of a remarkable character. The plaintiff, however, acknowledged that she wrote to the defendant telling him that her heart was "dead, dead, and cold to all but one love." That remark, she added, did not apply to the defendant, and thereupon her counsel elected to be nonsuited.

At the Chester Assizes, on Monday, an action for breach of promise was tried before Mr. Justice Keating. The plaintiff, who is nineteen years of age, was Martha Bebbington, the daughter of a farmer living at Elton, near Sandbach, Cheshire; and the defendant, John Hitchen, lived with his father, a farmer, at Cholmondeston. The plaintiff's birthday, last February, was fixed for the wedding, and the dresses were chosen. She went home in November, 1872, to prepare for the wedding, but heard no more of the defendant, who, it is said, in the meantime met with a widow, married her, and became landlord of the Pig and Whistle, at Wattenhall. The jury found for the plaintiff—damages, £200.—At the Limerick Assizes, on Wednesday, a verdict was given in a breach of promise case. Miss Elizabeth Sheehy, daughter of a Limerick magistrate, was the plaintiff, and Major John Evans O'Leary, a nephew of Sir De Lacy Evans, was the defendant. Damages were laid at £5000. The courtship had lasted eight years. At one time the plaintiff had released the defendant from his promise, but their engagement was subsequently renewed, and the marriage was to have been solemnised on the death of Sir De Lacy Evans. The jury awarded £1875 damages.

Miss Hodgson has obtained £320 damages against Mr. Sydney Langdon, a tailor in New Burlington-street, for false imprisonment. He had charged her, at Brighton, with stealing a purse from him, and she had been committed to trial.

Miss Alice Stuart has obtained, at the Croydon Assizes, a verdict for £900 damages against the Great Western Railway Company for injuries sustained by her in a collision that took place, in September last, between a passenger-train and a goods-train, at the Westbourne Park station. The plaintiff had been attending the Worcester Musical Festival professionally, and was returning home, with her father, when the accident happened. An action by the father arising out of the same accident was settled without a trial.—Several actions for compensation for personal injuries sustained in railway accidents have been tried at Manchester, the plaintiffs receiving, respectively, £160, £450, £650, and £950.

The trial of the Tichborne claimant for perjury, which was adjourned, at the close of the sitting on Thursday week, over the bank holiday, for the purpose of enabling the jury to recruit, was resumed on Tuesday morning. Dr. Kenealy continued his speech on behalf of the defendant, commencing with what he termed a dissection of the mental character of Roger Tichborne corresponding with the previous elucidation of his moral character. In addressing the Court on Wednesday Dr. Kenealy again commented on the failure of counsel for the prosecution to put any of the Orton family in the witness-box. He denied that there was any evidence of a copy of the Illustrated London News containing an account of the Tichborne family having reached the defendant. Proof of identity was deduced from the similarity of handwriting in the defendant's later letters and those of Roger Tichborne. Being asked by a jurymen why he selected the later letters, Dr. Kenealy propounded a theory that, having lost his style during his "desert life," the defendant would have to begin again afresh, as in his early youth. Both the fact and the theory were, however, dissented from, the foreman affirming that there was no proof that the defendant had ever left off writing. His statements to Mr. Hodgson during the voyage home were sifted to show what was credible and what was incredible. The confession of having had St. Vitus's dance was thrown aside as absurd, but the statement that Jules Berrault had been left behind at Rio was cited as a fact utterly beyond the knowledge of Arthur Orton. The learned counsel concluded by contrasting the evidence of Captain Hall with that of Mr. Childers as to the difficulty of finding sailors at Melbourne in 1854. The chief topics dealt with on Thursday were the defendant's visit to Wapping; the "virulent opposition" he met with at the hands of the Tichborne family; his first interview with Lady Tichborne; the Abbé Salis's statement that Lady Tichborne attempted to bribe him to recognise the defendant as her son; and Sir Joseph and Lady Radcliffe's interview with the defendant at Croydon. Photographs taken in Paris, January, 1867, of Lady Tichborne and the defendant were shown—that of the latter showing, as was contended, the same peculiarity of thumb which the defendant now possessed.

At the Manchester Assizes there has been tried an action for assault brought by the acting manager of the Prince's Theatre, Manchester, against Mr. Bandmann. The assault complained of arose out of a disagreement respecting the terms of a contract. There was a fight on the stage, and the combatants were ultimately separated by the stage carpenters. A verdict of £5 damages for the plaintiff was given, the Judge refusing to certify for costs.

Mr. D'Eyncourt decided, at the Marylebone Police Court, on Saturday, that a grocer could not be convicted under the Adulteration of Food Act for selling cocoa that had been mixed with sugar, arrowroot, and sago. There was no fraud at all, he said, in selling that which had been recognised in the trade for fifty years as cocoa.

At Marylebone, on Saturday, a clergyman, professedly of St. Colomb, Cornwall, was fined 10s. for drunkenness; and at the Thames Court a general dealer, who had sought to increase his gains by fortune-telling, was sentenced to six weeks' imprisonment. Five male and two female housebreakers were committed, yesterday week, at Lambeth, on eight charges of theft, robbery, and housebreaking. Several pawnbrokers who had taken marked articles in pledge were reprimanded and their expenses refused.

Mr. Baron Pigott passed sentence, on Tuesday, on the two young ruffians who so brutally assaulted Mr. Grey, at Kennington, and smashed his finger in attempting to wrench off his gold ring. He condemned them to ten years' penal servitude, plus five-and-twenty lashes.

A labouring man named Lee was tried yesterday week, at the Croydon Assizes, for the murder of his wife. It was during a drunken affray that the woman received the injuries of which she died; but, it being apparently doubtful precisely how she was injured fatally, the jury returned a verdict of "Not guilty."—The wretched woman, Eliza Hewlett, who drowned one of her children at Reddish last month, and attempted to drown another as well as herself, has been tried for murder, and acquitted on the ground of insanity.—Mary Ann O'Neill, charged with having feloniously killed Charles Rogers, at an orphanage kept by her in Grosvenor-street, Manchester, was found guilty, but sentence was deferred.—At the Leeds Assizes, on Monday, Thomas Green was sentenced to twelve years' penal servitude for the attempted murder of Mary Paver, whom he had courted for some time.—At Donegal Assizes, last Saturday, Bernard and Charles McCallag were convicted and sentenced to penal servitude for life for wounding with intent to murder Owen McFadden on the night of Aug. 21, 1871. They had been twice tried before for the murder of McFadden's wife on the same occasion, but were acquitted.—Benjamin Hudson was hanged at Derby, on Monday, for the murder of his wife at Hanley, and for a similar one Henry Evans was hanged at Aylesbury.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

Several Illustrations of the conflict, on June 13, at Elmina, between the British naval and military forces in the neighbourhood of Cape Coast Castle and the invading army of the King of Ashantee have been given in this Journal. A letter from Freetown, Sierra Leone, furnishes intelligence from Cape Coast down to July 3. The expected assault by the Ashantees on Cape Coast Castle had not then been made. It was believed that the Ashantees, by means of their spies, obtained information that their plans had been discovered, and that a warm reception had been prepared for them, and hence they abandoned, or at least deferred, their attack. The headquarters of the Ashantees were, according to the latest accounts, about twelve miles from Cape Coast, and their forces were still so disposed as to menace both Cape Coast and Elmina. The Ashantee who had commanded the force engaged in the attack on Elmina was to be beheaded. The military headquarters for the West Coast had been fixed at Cape Coast Castle, and not at Elmina. A good deal of sickness prevailed at Cape Coast Castle, and there was some scarcity of provisions there. We have described the Ashantee country and nation, in reference to the subjects of former Illustrations. The two sketches now presented show the ordinary aspect of daily household life among these savages, whose habits are like those of other negro populations, in Guinea, except where Mohammedan craftsmen, from the more civilised countries north of this region, have introduced some useful arts. Their houses, indeed, as seen in our view of an Ashantee village, are rather neatly constructed of bamboo wicker-work, with a thatch of palm-leaves, rising to the height of 15 ft. at the central ridge, from eaves 4 ft. 6 in. high. A woman is observed pounding maize in a wooden mortar; others strip the fibre off plantain stalks; and one is cooking, while a man lies sleeping on a mat under the tree. Goats and pigs, fowls and ducks, run about the place; while vultures are perched on the house-roof, and other birds have made their nests of grass in the tree. To the right hand is a fetish-house, a sort of temple for their abject heathen superstition, which has been defined as "the worship of everything but God." In the second Illustration, showing the interior of an Ashantee cottage, the man, as usual, is reposing on a bamboo bedstead. The women of the family do not seem very busy; two of them, with a young man, are seated on the floor eating their breakfast; one smoking her pipe. Another is about to go out at the door. The food is dumplings, served on plantain leaves. The lady of the house lies on the floor, to have her hair combed by the lady's maid. Among the household utensils are a large basket for corn, a roll of mats, and a bag of charms, to avert the anger of some malicious demon. A musket, as well as a shield, with spear and sword, is hung on the wall behind.

The annual exhibition of plants and flowers grown by the working men of Edinburgh took place in the Corn Exchange, Grassmarket, last Saturday. Over 300 prizes were competed for; and the Scotsman says that, in all respects, the show was superior to that of any preceding year.

The fund for raising a memorial by the corps of Royal Engineers to the late Field Marshal Sir John Burgoyne has nearly reached £1800, and the Burgoyne committee has determined that the memorial shall consist of a bronze statue of the late Field Marshal, to be erected at the School of Military Engineering at Chatham—probably in front of the new Halls of Study.

The Ross and Monmouth Railway was opened for traffic yesterday week.—The Liverpool Extension Railway, by which the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, Midland, and Great Northern Companies obtain a new and independent access to Liverpool, was opened for passenger traffic yesterday week.—The formal opening of the Devon and Somerset Railway, from Wiveliscombe to Dulverton, took place, on Tuesday, at the latter place. A large stock market was opened, for which the land had been given by the Earl of Carnarvon. A great number of the nobility and gentry of the county sat down to a dinner, at which his Lordship presided. The line extends from Taunton to Barnstaple, a distance of forty-three miles.

THE CHADWICK MEMORIAL, BOLTON.

The cotton-manufacturing town of Bolton-le-Moors, in Lancashire, which lately had its new Townhall opened by the Prince and Princess of Wales, has just done honour to a local benefactor. Dr. S. T. Chadwick, M.D., long a medical practitioner there, has conferred great benefits on the poorer classes by his efforts and gifts to establish charitable institutions. He retired from practice in 1863, when he offered £1000 towards the erection of a new Infirmary, and proposed that the old Infirmary buildings should be purchased, with the aid of another sum of £1000 from his purse, for a town's Library and Museum. These proposals, in which Mrs. Chadwick participated, did not meet with sufficient support; but, in 1868, the doctor and his wife found an outlet for their benevolence in schemes for Model Dwellings and an Orphanage. Towards the first Dr. and Mrs. Chadwick placed the sum of £10,000 in the hands of Messrs. Rushton and Armitstead, solicitors, Bolton. The dwellings were required by the founders to be "commodious and well-ventilated dwellings, in open and airy situations, to conduce to the sanitary, social, and moral influences which were so absolutely required after the exhausting daily toil to which working men were subjected in an overheated and impure atmosphere." Towards the Orphanage £7000, and afterwards £5000, were handed over by Dr. and Mrs. Chadwick, in addition to the rents of the model buildings, which were required to be devoted to the maintaining, clothing, and educating orphan children belonging to the Bolton Poor-Law Union. The Orphanage buildings are being built on land given by the Earl of Bradford, and will form a street to which the Corporation give the name of Peabody-street.

In gratitude for these benefactions the people of Bolton have erected a statue of Dr. Chadwick during his lifetime. This memorial was unveiled on Friday week. The day was observed as a holiday, and a procession of the public bodies of the town, in carriages, and the trades and friendly societies, carrying their insignia, walked the principal streets before the ceremony. There was a large display of colours, and, though the crowd was of course much more local, the general demonstration was not much less imposing than on the recent Royal visit. The statue, which stands in the Townhall square, fronting an angle of the new Townhall, was unveiled at five o'clock by Mr. James Barlow, an ex-Mayor and chairman of the Memorial committee. The Mayor (Mr. W. W. Cannon), Colonel Gray, M.P., Mr. Hick, M.P., and others were present. The statue is in bronze, and is the work of Mr. C. B. Birch, of London. It is 10 ft. 1 in. high, and stands on a pedestal of 12 ft., in the centre of which is a bas relief design in bronze, representing Mrs. Chadwick directing some poor children to the Orphanage. Speeches were delivered, a peal of bells in Trinity Church (an old gift of the doctor's) was rung in his honour, and a luncheon was afterwards given in the new Townhall. The board of guardians, who were indebted to Dr. Chadwick for their workhouse organ, also had a luncheon in celebration of the occasion.

STATUE OF LORD DOWNSHIRE.

A bronze statue of the late Marquis of Downshire has been erected on his estate at Hillsborough, in the county of Down, Ireland. The sculptor is Mr. S. F. Lynn, of Belfast, an Associate of the Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts. The model of this statue was one of the few works of merit in the sculpture-gallery at the late exhibition of our Royal Academy. The late Marquis, who died just five years ago, was esteemed a good Irish landlord. He was fourth Marquis, the Most Honourable Arthur Wills Blundell Sandys Trumbull Windsor Hill, K.P., born Aug. 6, 1812, who succeeded his father, the third Marquis, in April, 1845; bearing also the titles of Earl and Viscount Hillsborough, Viscount Kilwarlin, and Baron Hill, of Kilwarlin, in the Peerage of Ireland; Earl of Hillsborough, Viscount Fairford, and Baron Harwich, in the Peerage of Great Britain; and hereditary constable of Hillsborough Fort. He was married to a daughter of the first Viscount Condemere, and had three children, the eldest of whom, Arthur Wills Blundell Roden Hill, born in December, 1844, is the fifth and present Marquis of Downshire. The founder of this noble family was Sir Moyses Hill, Knight, who went to Ireland in 1573 with the Earl of Essex, to serve Queen Elizabeth in putting down the O'Neil rebellion.

THE DROVERS' HALL AND ASYLUM.

This institution, which is situated on the north side of the Metropolitan Cattle Market, at Islington, between two of the large buildings of the City Corporation, now used as dwellings, will shortly be opened by the Lord Mayor. It consists of fifteen sets, each of three rooms, on two floors, for fifteen aged and infirm drovers. There is also a committee-room, with offices, and in the rear is a hall 63 ft. long by 30 ft. wide and 27 ft. high, intended for a reading-room and club-room, where the men who are occupied in the adjoining market may hold their meetings. The interior of the hall is lighted by circular-headed windows, under an arcade, formed of ornamental pressed brick, resting in coupled pilasters of white brick, with stone foliated caps and bases, these again resting upon a dado of ornamental tiles, between a plinth and subbase of Portland cement, executed by the Architectural Pottery Company. The ceiling is wagon-headed, in stenciled panels, and partly open timbered; it is stained and varnished, each truss supported by the coupled pilaster. A raised dais at one end will afford an opportunity for the delivery of lectures and other means of improving the minds of this class of our fellow-countrymen, who need it not a little. The architects are Messrs. Lander and Bedells, of John-street, Bedford-row; the contractors are Messrs. Mansbridge, of Camden Town.

A meeting of clergy and laity of the diocese of Argyll and the Isles entitled to elect a Bishop was held at Lochgilphead on Thursday week, when Provost Cazenove and the Rev. A. G. Douglas, Rector of Stapwick, Dorset, were proposed. A number of representatives declined to vote; and, as neither of the candidates had a majority of those present, the matter was referred to the College of Bishops.

The 1st Battalion of Berkshire volunteers were reviewed yesterday week in Windsor Park, where they had been encamped during the week. The regimental prizes were distributed by the Princess Christian, whose husband is the honorary Colonel of the battalion.—The 3rd Administrative Battalion of Staffordshire Rifle Volunteers has been in camp this week, at Sandwell Park. The camping ground, which is both picturesque and central, has been lent by the Earl of Dartmouth.—On Saturday evening last the annual inspection of the 1st London Engineer Volunteers took place in Tufnell Park—the inspecting officer being Colonel Murray and the officer in command Major Stillwell.—The Dorsetshire volunteers have been encamped at Swanage during the past week, under the hon. Colonel, the Earl of Eldon. At the review Colonel Hankey, of the Dorchester dépôt centre, expressed himself highly pleased with the performance and the military bearing of the battalion.

The difficulty experienced by Trustees in ascertaining the scope of their powers of investment, and the securities of which they may prudently avail themselves, have induced me to prepare this publication; nor can I doubt that a practical and concise guide in plain words will be indulgently accepted by the public. The Tables of Securities have been made as complete as possible, with the view of rendering them useful to everyone—Trustee or otherwise. No pains have been spared to test the accuracy of the information afforded, although it has been considered unnecessary to enumerate the book with references to authorities, Acts of Parliament excepted.

EXTRACTS FROM NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"Under the title of 'The Trustees' Guide,' Mr. Cracroft has just issued as one of his series of 'Investment Tracts' what promises to be a publication of great practical utility. One part consists of directions to trustees in the matter of investment, and these are very brief and clear, and embrace apparently every important point trustee should attend to, stress being very properly laid on such matters as the strict limitation of their powers, and the necessity of acting on legal advice in all important variations of investment. Mr. Cracroft states in his preface that the object of this part of the work has been 'advised upon' by good lawyers, and it contains intrinsic evidence of extensive care having been used. The larger part of the work consists of a 'Table of Securities,' which possesses a value of a different kind. The securities, with a few exceptions, are those which are to be found in the official list of the Stock Exchange, and the information concerning them, including the variations in price for several years—in some cases twenty years—is tabulated in a convenient form for reference. The tabulation is not only complete, but the arrangement of the securities is such that they are easily accessible, and the majority of trustees are restricted from investing; but the powers of trust-deeds vary greatly, and the object has been to enable the trustee to see at a glance what the history of each group of investments may be permitted to select from has been, and he may thus obtain quickly a general knowledge of the class of investment before he makes any particular selection under the guidance of his solicitor. A dictionary of this nature will be extremely useful to solicitors themselves, who have to be the advisers of trustees, and to whom, therefore, some learning in the matter of investments is also necessary. The compilation of this part of the work has also been made with great care and accuracy."—Economist.

"Contains a useful summary, expressed in plain and concise language, of the effect of recent statutes, and many of the cases on the subject. The tables are not only carefully compiled, and cannot fail to prove useful to all investors."—Solicitors' Journal.

"Full and clear. . . . A monument of labour. Needs but to be known to be appreciated."—Bullionist.

"Invaluable as a guide to investments by trustees."—Globe.

"Represents with carefully compiled tables. . . . Valuable as a means for general reference."—Birmingham Morning News.

"A very valuable guide to trustees and investors in securities."—Post.

"A useful manual of directions for persons who have to deal with trust property."—Hour.

"The Tables of Securities are elaborate and useful. The whole publication is probably the most important that Mr. Cracroft has yet issued."—Conservative.

"We question if there is a more useful or more satisfactory shilling worth in the whole range of modern literature. It is an admirably-compiled work, comprehensive, accurate, and of great reference."—English Churchman.

"The best and the cheapest handy-book of the kind. In every way worthy the attention of those who have money to invest either for themselves or for others in trust."—The Press and St. James's Chronicle.

THE VIENNA EXHIBITION, 1873.

The principal event in connection with Art that has distinguished the present year is the Exhibition opened at Vienna on the 1st of May.

This Exhibition may be regarded as a direct descendant of the great original held in London in 1851. Paris, Manchester, Dublin, Birmingham, and New York have already entered and passed in London's competition, and now, after a pause, Vienna presents her claim to be included in the list of those who have engaged in these "fruitful struggles and rivalries of peace" which have already done so much to advance the interests and elevate the tastes of people of all classes in many lands.

THE ART-JOURNAL.

includes a series of Articles, carefully and minutely illustrated, which commenced in the Number for the 1st of May, and will be continued in the Number for December next. These Articles are supplied by Gentlemen who have formed a Commission for the purpose in Vienna, and who have connected with them an Artist who has undertaken to furnish all those special details which belong to the province of Art proper.

The Publishers assume their Subscribers that no effort shall be wanting to render this Illustrated Record as complete as possible in every particular.

The "Art-Journal" (price 2s. 6d.) is published on the 1st of every month, and is beautifully illustrated with Steel Engravings and Woodcuts.

THE RAILWAY ACCIDENT AT WIGAN.

BY THE WAY.

MM. Stephanos Xenos and Theodore Lubini send us to Dr. William Smith, who informs us that the favourable position of Corinth between two seas, the difficulty of carrying goods round Peloponnesus, and the facility with which they could be transported across the Isthmus, raised Corinth in very early times to great commercial prosperity, and made it the emporium of the trade between Europe and Asia. MM. Xenos and Lubini have the splendid idea of restoring Corinth, and they propose to cut the Isthmus and build a new city. The Greek Government has made them grand concessions of land and of mine and water privileges, and a grant of shipping dues. Who shall say that in half a century, or less, a new Corinth will not have arisen, to become a proverb for enterprise, luxury, and naughtiness, another lumen totius Græciæ? It would be almost as wonderful a reusucitation as that expounded by the Apostle to the Gentiles in his Epistle to the Corinthians of old days. The one thing against the scheme is the fact that what was left of Corinth was nearly obliterated by an earthquake within the recollection of all of us who "took notice" in 1858, and unless M. Xenos and his friend can assure us, or rather their projected city, against another such catastrophe, the wealthy of all nations may hesitate before giving orders for the erection of Æolus villas, Sisyphus houses, Bimaris mansions, Timandra terraces, Lais cottages, and other residences, which would commemorate the history of the district beneath "Acrocorinth's lonely brow."

A Roman Catholic Government must have some difficulty in knowing how to deal with pilgrimage, a fanaticism which has lately come strongly into favour with the more ignorant classes of Continental Catholics. To repress, by police measures, proceedings which tend to disorders and scandals (somewhat akin to those of love-feasts with which we used to be troubled in England and Wales, but which seem extinct), would be the obvious course; but, on the other hand, a Catholic is bound to believe that miracles may be wrought at any time, and a great many of the pilgrims in France are prepared to swear that they have seen preternatural cures of diseases. Such witnesses are no doubt of the class that is always ready with credence when a wild story is told; but there they are, and their priests do not tell them to hold their silly tongues and go to work. A Catholic statesman must feel the situation to be rather awkward. However, there is plenty of precedent for dealing with miracle-mongers, and the eldest daughter of the Church has herself afforded one, as the readers of French memoirs will recollect. In a churchyard in Paris wonders were worked at the unreasonable hour of midnight, so the authorities very sensibly ordered that mobs should not be allowed to congregate at that time, and thence came the famous epigram, De par le Roi, &c.—de faire miracles dans ce lieu. The King of Italy has taken the hint, and upon a great batch of pilgrims presenting themselves at the gates of Rome, in defiance of proclamation, they were sent about their business. But in France the pilgrims are very numerous and rampant, and there is something to be said about reaction, for the savage fanaticism of the atheistic Communists most naturally excites counter-demonstration. A "Pilgrim's Progress" in the nineteenth century might be made into a good book, though it would not eclipse the work of the immortal tinker—a book which we rejoice to read is now to be had for a penny. Sold in French, for two sous, Bunyan's story might prevent some of the sham pilgrimages.

Le divin Villains has again made his appearance in Paris, we read, introduced by an excellent English company, led by Mr. Ryder and Miss Cooper. "Hamlet" has been performed to the Parisians. But we also read that the theatre (the Athénée, near the new opera) is so small that it is quite impossible that the tragedy can have any fair play. When three or four persons are on the stage, says the correspondent of the Standard, they are cramped for room. The French, who understand the fitness of things theatrical, have perceived the absurdity of this, and do not seem to attend the house. We are sorry that meritorious artists, who could do justice to the play if they were permitted, should be placed in so unfavourable a situation. But, as Hamlet has been set to music, the intelligent French audiences understand something about him; and, though the present attempt may be a failure, they comprehend (thanks to M. Ambroise Thomas) that he is not a "barbarian," like his creator. The same correspondent says that somebody had spread the report that a gigue (jig) forms part of all properly-constructed English plays, and that the scanty audience were disappointed that Hamlet did not have such a dance with Ophelia. Well, there is warrant for it in the third act—

Ophelia. You are merry, my lord.
Hamlet. Who, I?
Ophelia. Aye, my lord.
Hamlet. O, your only jig-maker. What should a man do but be merry!

A meeting has been held in Hyde Park, under the presidency of a person whose motto we suppose may not comprise certain words about "fear, and honour," and the assembly voted an address to the Queen, requesting her to grant the Duke of Edinburgh money out of the bequest made to the Crown by the miser Neild. Most people had forgotten this piece of eccentricity on the part of James Camden Neild, but reference informs us that his will was proved in October, 1852, and that he bequeathed all his real and personal property to the Queen for her Majesty's private use and advantage. Therefore, if there were no other reasons, the Sovereign is precluded by the terms of the will from applying the money to a public purpose, which it is the recognised duty of the State to perform. It would be as reasonable to ask her to pay the expenses of the reception of the Shah. Such nonsense as that talked in the park we allude to only, of course, as matter of amusement. Mr. Bradlaugh, the president, waxed exceeding snappish at an interpolated suggestion by one of his audience, and exclaimed that if the man knew so much he had better come up and make the speech. He reminds us of the dreary but irascible Scotch preacher who was droning over the story of Jonah. "And what fish was it, my brethren? Aiblins (perhaps) it was a shark. Na, my brethren, it was not a shark. Aiblins it was a porpoise. Na, my brethren, it was not a porpoise. Aiblins it was a cod. Na, my brethren, it was not a cod;" and so on, until an old lady near the pulpit, perhaps a descendant of Jenny Geddes, could bear it no longer, and said, "Aiblins it was a whale." The minister pulled up sharp, and exclaimed, in a fury, "Aiblins ye're an auld beast, to tak' the word out o' the mouth of an ordained minister." Demagogue or preacher, nobody likes his dignity interfered with.

Catholics and Protestants should join in "raising the festal cup" (the phrase is germane to the subject), this 9th of August, to the "glorious," pious, and immortal memory of John Dryden, who was born on this day in the year 1631, at the parsonage-house of Aldwinckle, All Saints', in Northamptonshire. We of the Prepapal faith and they of the Papal faith may cordially unite in paying homage to the memory of one of the grandest of English poets; and, if our friends will forgive him for having once been a Protestant, we will forgive him for having afterwards become a Catholic, and we will gladly throw in utter renunciation of the charge that the change was mainly produced by any other cause than conviction. Let us add from the poem, the Medal, which was suggested to "Glorious John" by "Gracious Charles" (second of that name), a few lines which are to the purpose. Speaking of religious belief, he says:—

In doubtful questions 'tis the safest way
To learn what unsuspected ancients say,
For 'tis not likely we should higher soar
In search of Heaven than all the Church before:
Nor can we be deceived, unless we see
The Scripture and the Fathers disagree.
If, after all, they stand suspected still (For no man's faith depends upon his will),
'Tis some relief that points not clearly known,
Without much hazard may be left alone.

GREAT RAILWAY DISASTER.

A most terrible accident, causing the death of twelve passengers and serious hurts to many more, occurred on the London and North-Western Railway, at the Wigan junction station, to the tourists' night express train from London to Scotland, leaving the Euston-square terminus at eight in the evening yesterday week. Two illustrations of this disaster, from sketches drawn on the spot very soon afterwards by our own Artist, are given in this Number. The manner in which the shocking event came to pass must here be described.

The train, which was an unusually heavy one (consisting of two engines, twenty-two carriages, and three vans), left Euston station at 8.5 p.m., five minutes after the advertised time. When, at eighteen minutes past one p.m., the train (more than fifteen minutes late), approached Wigan, the signals showed "All right." Within a few yards of the down platform, and opposite the south box, a pair of "facing" points work in connection with the main down line and a single-line siding which runs along the back of the down platform for a distance of about one hundred yards, and again into the down line at the extreme end of the platform. The two engines (both of which were at the head) and seventeen or eighteen of the carriages passed the facing points in safety at the usual rate of from thirty-five to thirty-eight miles an hour. Owing to some cause as yet unexplained, the remaining six or seven carriages and a guard's van were jerked from the body of the train and the main line at the facing points, and rushed up the siding. Having lost their equilibrium, they veered over against that portion of the platform abutting on the siding, and ploughed up the flags and earth a length of twenty or thirty yards. The leading carriage, which was of composite construction, was overturned and broken to pieces, the wheels and flooring being all that remained. The other carriages sprang from the metals to the platform and fell over upon their sides. One or two others turned almost completely over, a few yards beyond, blocking the siding; and these, too, were knocked to pieces.

The shock was tremendous with which the carriages that parted from the train came against the station buildings, as shown in our page Engraving. One corner of the wall from which springs the roof of the station was knocked out of plumb along several yards of its length, to the extent of six inches. One of the iron pillars on the roof, which stood midway on the platform, was struck down by the extraordinary leap of one of the carriages against it, and by three or four of the carriages running right on the top of each other. The telegraph-wires were caught and dragged asunder. A length of thick brick wall adjoining, built between the railway and Queen-street, which is five or six yards below the level of the railway, was partly knocked down. A large fragment of one of the carriages, with a lady passenger inside it, was hurled over the wall and fell upon and through the slated roof of a portion of Mr. Walker's foundry. A number of men working a "night turn" on the premises escaped injury, but the lady was killed.

The leading portion of the train, which kept to the main line, was brought to a standstill at Turner's siding, several hundred yards from the scene of the accident. Except the conductor, who received some bruises, nobody in these carriages was injured; but the Perth van, occupied by him, which was at the extreme end of those which kept on the main line, jumped from the metals when the separation occurred at the facing points, and ran, half in the four-feet space and half in the six-feet, as far as the pointsman's post at the north box, where it was guided back to the metals. The van was much damaged, one side being completely torn away. How the conductor escaped as he did is surprising. The footboard of a saloon carriage which ran next in order was broken off and an axle-box damaged.

The officials in charge of the station sent messengers to the town for medical and other assistance, and people living near were roused from their beds by the shrill whistles and cries of the porters. A "night-shift" of men on duty at the adjoining foundry came quickly to render aid. Very soon a numerous party of assistants, including the police, were endeavouring to extricate the sufferers from the broken carriages. Some were rendering the air with shrieks and moans. At first there was much delay for want of tools. A saw was in urgent request, but was not immediately procured. A fire was made of carriage remnants to give the workers light. The stifling glare fell upon the mangled and bruised remains of the dead and dying; but all the passengers who had not been disabled by their injuries laboured to help the injured. Poignant cries were heard from two carriages, or rather the remains of them, which were heaped together across the siding.

Beneath the carriage which was thrown wheels uppermost on the platform the dead bodies of four passengers, one being that of a woman, were found. Some of the bodies were fearfully crushed and mangled. Two ladies were got out alive from other carriages, but died shortly after being taken into the first-class refreshment-rooms. Another passenger, Sir J. W. Anson, Bart., died at the Royal Hotel two hours after the accident. His two daughters were with him. There were several miraculous escapes from death. A saloon-carriage, which was occupied by a young lady and her brother, with a lady's-maid, was driven into the carriage immediately before it. The saloon-carriage and its passengers sustained little, if any damage. Several members of one family (that of Mr. Andrew Wark, of Highgate) were in the next, a first-class carriage, and two of the children and a domestic servant were killed. The father escaped uninjured, but his wife was seriously hurt. Another of their children was jammed at the bottom of the carriage among the woodwork, but was got out alive. The passengers in three of the carriages escaped without anyone being killed among them. The guard who was on duty in the van at the end of the carriages which ran on the siding had a narrow escape. He was stunned for several minutes, but came out comparatively uninjured. Some of the passengers, although severely shaken, were not prevented from continuing their journey northwards at a later hour in the morning. About thirty of the passengers who were more seriously hurt were conveyed to the Victoria, Clarence, and Royal Hotels, the Wheatsheaf Inn, and the Ropemakers' Arms, where they were kindly tended, and surgical aid secured for them as early as possible. Messrs. Roocroft, Shepherd, White, Unwin, Jackson, Barnish, Monks, and Stuart, with their assistants, were the medical gentlemen who, at an early hour, rendered aid to the sufferers both at the station and the several hotels.

Inspector Grundy, of Southport (Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway), and a number of assistants happened to be in Wigan at the time of the disaster, making arrangements for a cheap trip, and he, with his men, was at the scene of the accident soon after it occurred. Inspectors Burton and Liptrop, with a staff of police constables, were also soon on the spot, and usefully exerted themselves. Mr. James Shaw, of Liverpool, district superintendent, had notice of the accident telegraphed to him, and arrived at Wigan about five o'clock. He immediately did all that was possible under the circumstances.

The body of an elderly lady, thrown over the wall into Mr. Walker's foundry, was identified as that of Mrs. Roberts, of Weymouth, who was being taken by her son to Carlisle to visit her daughter-in-law. The son, a native of Annan, Scotland, and Master of the Carlisle Industrial Schools, was also among the killed; his injuries were so great that he only survived a little while after being taken to the Clarence Hotel. A third child of Mr. Wark, a boy named Andrew Alexander, died on Monday night. The following is a list of the dead:—

Sir John Anson, Bart., 32, Portland-place, London, aged fifty-six.

Thomas C. Wark, aged ten years, son of Andrew Wark, Old Hall, Highgate, and the Stock Exchange, London.

Maggie R. C. Wark, aged eight years, daughter of the same.

Andrew Alexander Wark, son of the same, aged three years and six months.

Alice Minette, aged twenty-three, nurse to the above.

Mr. John Foster, woollendrapery, High-street, Oxford, and Regent-street, London.

John Phillips, Lord Murray's chamberlain, of Aberdour, Fife, aged seventy.

James Fagg, valet to Sir John Anson, aged nineteen.

Martha Alett, aged twenty-two, waiting-maid to Miss Anson.

Thomas Waddell, solicitor, Wellington-street, Ayr, aged twenty-five.

Zachariah Roberts, of Morrall-hill, Carlisle, schoolmaster at Carlisle Industrial Schools, aged thirty.

Mary Roberts, widow of Daniel Roberts, of Weymouth, and mother of the last named, aged seventy-three.

In the list of injured appear:—

Mrs. Wark, Highgate, fractured leg.

Mr. Robert Goodman, commercial traveller for the firm of Messrs. Walter Macfarlane and Co., Glasgow; compound fracture of the right leg.

E. Vassilopulo, commercial agent and shipper, South-parade, Manchester; fracture of collar-bone, bruised head and leg, and severely shaken.

Mr. Hugh Ker Love, Bieth, Ayrshire; injury to head and internally.

Mr. F. A. Fraser, artist, 10, Boscobel-place, Alpha-road, London; fracture of collar-bone and bruised head.

Mrs. John Foster, wife of Mr. John Foster, Oxford; badly bruised and shaken.

Joseph Paulett, ship carpenter, Aberdare; compound fracture of elbow joint, injury to hand, and severely shaken.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Shindler, Palgrave House, Lee, Kent; cut, shaken, and bruised.

Mrs. Phillips, wife of John Phillips, of Aberdour—whose name appears in the list of dead—bruised about the head, back, and face, and severely shaken.

Mrs. Still, wife of Mr. J. T. Still, county magistrate, Mountfield, Musbury, near Axminster; severely bruised about the face and shaken, and supposed concussion of the spine.

An eye-witness of the disaster has recorded the following particulars about the occupants of two carriages which were lying heaped together across the siding when the dreadful task began of extricating the dead and the wounded from this hideous wreck. It was found that a saloon carriage which was occupied by a son and daughter of the Hon. S. W. Palmer, who, accompanied by a lady's-maid, were journeying to Ballymena, Stranraer, had been driven into the end of a carriage in front, the two end compartments of which were occupied by the family of Mr. A. Wark. The carriage consisted of two second-class compartments, one at each end, two first-class compartments, and a luggage compartment in the centre. Mr. Wark and family, consisting of Mrs. Wark, a governess, a maid, and four children, occupied the first and second compartments at one end. Mr. and Mrs. Wark, the governess, and eldest son, a boy of twelve years, occupied the first-class compartment; the maid and three children the end second-class one. Mr. Wark's account of the accident is that a violent oscillation of the carriage occurred after passing the points, and then the carriage knocked against some heavy substance. The two sides of the compartment were partly crushed. Mr. Wark and two of his companions escaped apparently uninjured; but Mrs. Wark's leg was jammed between the seats, which nearly met each other, and it was a long time before she could be extricated. This difficult task could only be accomplished by sawing up the carriage. The unfortunate maid and three children in the next compartment fared much worse. The two sides of the second-class compartment were forced together, and the poor girl and the two elder children were killed. The bodies were so entangled in the broken timber that it was more than an hour before they could be got at. The third child, a little fellow of three years and a half old, was pinned fast down by the buffer of the carriage, and his cries were heartrending, while the men were perspiring at every pore in their strenuous efforts to remove the heavy mass inclosing him. One of the foundrymen, whilst his fellows were so exerting themselves, was engaged in moistening the child's lips with brandy and water. At last they reached the little fellow, and it was found that his thigh was fractured. He is since reported dead, as he had also sustained severe internal injuries. The entreaties of some of the women who were imprisoned in the wreck were heartrending, one lady pleading to be saved for the sake of her husband and little ones. Sir John Anson, who was among the killed, occupied a first-class compartment with his two daughters. The account which the young ladies, who escaped uninjured, give is that they were awakened from sleep by the violent oscillation of the carriage, and as they started up found the carriage going to pieces, and they were thrown out on the ground. Sir John Anson was struck on the head by a portion of the carriage. He was not killed on the spot, but was mortally injured. He was removed to the Royal Hotel, where he died about an hour afterwards. The injuries which some of the dead sustained were frightful.

Among the passengers who, being in the foremost part of the train, escaped uninjured, were the daughter of the Duke of Sutherland, who was travelling in his Grace's private carriage; and the children of Mr. Baillie, the late Secretary of Legation at Darmstadt. The Hon. A. Kinnaird, M.P., was also in the train.

The official inquiry into the causes of this disaster was opened in the council-chamber of Wigan Townhall, on Tuesday, by Captain Tyler, R.E., inspector for the Board of Trade. The engine-drivers and guards of the train, the station-master, signalman, pointman, inspector, and two porters, were examined, and one or two passengers. The inquiry was adjourned to Friday. An inquest has been opened at Oxford on the body of Mr. Foster. Our two Illustrations give a view of the station-yard, the lines of rails, the paved platform, and adjacent buildings; and of the position into which the carriages were thrown when they parted from the train, with the havoc that was wrought by the violent concussion.

More than one railway accident has taken place this week. On Monday afternoon a London and North-Western Company's train, from Leeds to Liverpool, came into collision with a coal train near Ashton, and many of the passengers were severely bruised. On Saturday afternoon an up train to London, on the South-Eastern Railway, near the Redhill station, fell foul of a goods-train, but the passengers were only shaken, though both engines were thrown off the line and the rails were broken.

MISCELLANEOUS SKETCHES.

The abundance and variety of subjects for our Illustrations at this time will justify the method adopted in a page of the present Number, which presents several Engravings of small size bearing reference to different matters of passing interest.

One shows the boat-race on the 28th ult., at Newcastle-on-Tyne, contested by the two famous scullers, Kelley and Taylor, which was recorded in our last weekly chronicle of sporting events. The prize was no less than £400, and was easily won by Kelley, who came in 150 yards before his competitor. The High Level Railway Bridge, from which they started to row over the champion course, is a conspicuous object in this sketch; behind it is a wooden bridge of no great pretensions. To the right hand is the steam-boat which carried the umpire or referee, with another steam-boat for privileged spectators.

The lamented death of the Bishop of Winchester, by a fall from the horse he was riding, on the Surrey Downs, near Dorking, has not yet ceased to occupy the public mind with a sad interest, which will extend to the view of his grave, in the village churchyard of West Lavington, Sussex. Here the mortal remains of Dr. Samuel Wilberforce were laid, a fortnight ago, in the presence of his most reverend and right reverend brethren the Archbishops of Armagh and Dublin and the Bishops of Peterborough, Rochester, and Oxford, with a large number of other friends, lay and clerical, amongst whom were several persons of distinction. It was proposed to inter this accomplished prelate of the English Church in Westminster Abbey; but he had expressed a wish to be buried, whenever he should die, in the place where his wife had been laid, thirty years ago, and in the neighbourhood of his rural home, which is not far from Petworth.

Another English Bishop, of very different character and calling, was suddenly removed from earth, by a more tragic ending of his life, something less than two years ago. It was on Sept. 20, 1871, that the missionary Bishop Patteson, while cruising in his little yacht the Southern Cross, among the isles of the Pacific Ocean, on the holy and blessed errand of teaching their savage people to adore the God of Christian Faith, was slain at Nukapu, one of the Swallow group, in mistaken revenge for the cruel wrongs perpetrated by lawless slave-traders and kidnappers who disgrace the English name. For the most recent and complete information on this subject we recommend a perusal of Captain Albert Hastings Markham's new book, "The Cruise of the Rosario," lately published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, and Searle. It affords more correct knowledge than can elsewhere be obtained concerning the actual state of the so-called Melanesian groups of islands, the New Hebrides, the Santa Cruz, and the Solomon Isles lying north of New Caledonia, which have become the scene of detestable practices for the supply of forced labour to the Fiji cotton plantations. The late Bishop Patteson, a man of truly evangelical piety and charity, had the see and headquarters of his mission at Norfolk Island, much farther south, between New Zealand and New South Wales. A small church is to be erected there as a memorial of his noble example, which is almost that of a martyr; for he had indignantly denounced the practices above referred to, and he chose to visit those islands in the course of his duty, with a consciousness of the risk to his life from the temper of the natives, as they would make no distinction between one white man and another. The architect of the Memorial Church is Mr. John O. Scott.

Returning now to a scene very near home, we have to notice the late meeting of the Surrey Archaeological Society, at Wimbledon and Merton. They visited the remains of an ancient military intrenchment on Wimbledon-common, usually called "Caesar's Camp;" and it was curious to observe that the camp of our modern Volunteer Riflemen was within sight and hearing of this old temporary fortification of a warlike host, assembled there perhaps two thousand years ago. Mr. W. H. Peek, who resides in the neighbourhood and who gave the members of the society a very hospitable entertainment in his mansion, has during three or four years past made laudable efforts to secure the preservation of "Caesar's Camp." While they remained on the ground, Mr. Godwin-Austin read a paper explaining all that was known about the camp, and the various theories respecting it. There was no doubt it was not one of the Roman camps, not having the quadrangle peculiar to them. His impression was that it was built by the original Celtic population, and not by Romans, Danes, or Saxons, though it might afterwards have been possessed and used by some of them. How it got the name of Caesar's Camp was uncertain; the same name was given to others where it was very unlikely he ever went. It had been suggested that Caesar captured and occupied it when in England; but there was every reason to infer he did no such thing, as the inhabitants of Surrey appeared to be favourable to his conquest rather than otherwise; and, although he might have come there when he crossed the Thames, he did not mention the place in his writings. The party walked round part of the camp before returning to the carriages. We hope that Mr. Peek and the Surrey Archaeological Society will be successful in protecting this monument of antiquity from being demolished and effaced.

Sir Thomas Fremantle, chairman of the Board of Customs, laid the foundation-stone of a new custom-house at Grimsby on Thursday week, and in connection with the ceremony made a speech, in which he set forth the marvellous progress made by the port within the last few years.

At the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, lately held in Newcastle, it was announced that the Wesleyan day scholars had increased from 110,004 in 1868 to 171,372 in 1873, and the Sunday scholars from 582,020 to 666,766 in the same period. The increase of day schools has almost entirely ceased since the Education Act came into operation, but last year seventy-seven new Sunday schools were opened. The Wesleyans propose to raise a quarter of a million sterling to provide further accommodation for the worshippers of the sect. The Conference has decided to meet next year at Camborne, Cornwall. We intend to give, next week, a Portrait of the Rev. G. T. Perks, the present President of the Conference.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed "To the Editor of the Illustrated London News," &c., and have the word "Chess" legibly written on the outside of the envelope.

J. G. W. - We shall be pleased to see a few specimens whenever you choose to send them. J. G. W. - Very many thanks for the Tour; but, at the moment, we are overstocked. W. C. CROOKER - Among the thousands of letters received by the Illustrated London News how is it possible to know in what order they come? The best plan for readers is to wait and see by the published solution whether they have discovered the key of the Problem. C. F. NASH - You will find competitors of all degrees of strength at the St. George's Chess Club, King-street, St. James's. D. G. WHITLEY, Truro - Our space for chess is too limited to admit of our giving lessons on the openings. You should procure a treatise on the game. Without such assistance you will never make much progress in the game. GLAUCUS - Suppose you have that portion of the paper which contains the Chess of one week, printed a week or two in advance, how, then, could you "keep pace"? D. S. H. - There is a very interesting chess column in the Glasgow Weekly Herald, and one equally so in the Manchester Weekly Times. QUICK'S KNIGHT, Wien - Safely, though tardily, received. Many thanks for your consideration. In your next be good enough to send the names of the players in game marked "S. July 33," and the termination of the drawn game. PROBLEM No. 1537.

By C. W. of Sunbury.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and give mate in three moves.

THE VIENNA CHESS MEETING.

This international assemblage of chessplayers was duly opened on the 1st ult., and gives every promise of fulfilling the purposes for which it was convened. There were twelve entries for the grand tournament, comprising, as will be seen from the following list, some of the most eminent of living players:—

Anderssen, of Breslau.
Bird, of London.
Blackburne, of London.
Flessig, of Vienna.
Gulbuhls, of Vienna.
Herul, of Vienna.
Meitner, of Vienna.
Paulsen, of Nassengrund.
Pillsch, of Dessau.
Rosenthal, of Paris.
Schwarz, of Vienna.
Steinitz, of London.

By the conditions of the tournament each combatant must play a match of three games with every other combatant, and each match must be concluded in three days.

Upon the termination of the contest we propose to give a table showing the result of every combat; at present we can only give a general view of the play. The following is the latest score we have received:—

Anderssen	2	Paulsen	1
Bird	1	Rosenthal	2
Blackburne	1	Schwarz	1½
Herul	1	Steinitz	1

We have been favoured with several of the games, but have not yet had time to examine them. The following consultation partie was played by Messrs. STEINITZ, BIRD, and BLACKBURNE, against Messrs. ANDERSEN, PAULSEN, and ROSENTHAL, before the tourney began, for a prize given by Mr. Kollisch.

THE COURT.

The Queen held a Council at Osborne House on Saturday last, at which were present the Right Hon. H. Bruce, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, the Right Hon. R. Lowe, and the Marquis of Ripon. Previously to the Council the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone had an audience of her Majesty. The following Ministers had likewise audiences:—The Marquis of Ripon, to take leave of her Majesty on his resignation; the Right Hon. H. Bruce, to deliver up the seals of Secretary of State for the Home Department; and the Right Hon. R. Lowe, to deliver up the seals of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In Council, the Right Hon. H. Bruce was declared Lord President of the Council; the Right Hon. R. Lowe received the seals of the Home Office; and the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone received the seals of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Mr. William Patrick Adam was introduced at the Council and sworn in a member of the Privy Council. Sir Arthur Helps was Clerk of the Council. Prince Arthur left Osborne for Aldershot. On Sunday the Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service, performed at Osborne by the Rev. George Conor, (Vicar of Newport. On Monday the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Baden arrived at Osborne from Eastbourne, on a visit to her Majesty. The Duke of Edinburgh also arrived at Osborne. The Queen's dinner party included the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Baden, the Duke of Edinburgh, Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, and the Prince and Princess of Leiningen. The band of the 79th (Queen's Own Cameron) Highlanders played under the direction of Mr. McDonald. The Queen during the week has driven to Ryde, Cowes, and other places within a short distance of Osborne. Her Majesty has entertained at dinner the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Grand Duke Cesarewitch and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna, the Princess of Oldenburg, the Dean of Westminster and Lady Augusta Stanley, Lady Frances Baillie, and the Rev. George Prothero. Princess Beatrice, accompanied by the children of the Prince and Princess of Wales, and of the Grand Duke Cesarewitch and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna, was present at the Cowes Regatta, on board her Majesty's yacht Alberta. Prince Arthur and Prince Leopold were out sailing on board Prince Arthur's yacht Alix.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, has left Osborne for Balmoral Castle.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales continue at Osborne Cottage, Isle of Wight. An officer of the Prince's household has arrived at Peth for the purpose of selecting a villa for his Royal Highness's residence during his forthcoming visit. The Prince will join the Hungarian foxhunt. The Grand Duke Cesarewitch and the Grand Duchess Cesarevna, with their children, took leave of the Prince and Princess on Wednesday, and left Osborne Cottage upon their return to St. Petersburg. Their Imperial Highnesses embarked from Osborne on board the Russian Imperial frigate, attended by Countess Apraxine and General Sturler. Princess Kourakine, Mistress of the Robes, General Zinovieff, Count Olsouvieff, and Dr. Hirsch, who have been in attendance upon their Imperial Highnesses, preceded the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess to St. Petersburg.

The King of Denmark has appointed Prince Arthur a Knight of the Order of the Elephant.

Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne have arrived at Inverary Castle.

The Duke of Cambridge has left Gloucester House for Germany.

The Empress Eugénie has returned to Camden House, Chiselmhurst, from Switzerland.

His Excellency Count Munster has left Prussia House, Carlton House-terrace, for Cowes, Isle of Wight.

The Duke and Duchess of Wellington have left Apsley House for Strathfieldsaye.

The Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch left Montagu House, Whitehall, on Saturday last, for Haynes Park, Bedford, on a visit to Lord John Thynne.

The Duke of Manchester and his son, Lord Mandeville, have arrived at Quebec.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Westminster have arrived at Eaton Hall, Cheshire, from Cliveden.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne have left Bowood, Wilts, for the Marquis's seat in the county of Kerry.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Hertford and the Ladies Seymour have left town for Ragley, Warwickshire.

The Marquis of Ripon has left Carlton-gardens for Studley Royal, Yorkshire.

The Dowager Marchioness Townshend, Lady Audrey Townshend, and Lady Elizabeth St. Aubyn have left town for Raynham Hall, Norfolk.

Earl and Countess Cowper have left Panshanger for Scotland.

Viscount and Viscountess Sydney have left their residence in Cleveland-square, St. James's, for the Continent.

The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P., accompanied by Mrs. Gladstone, has left his residence on Carlton House-terrace for Hawarden, Flintshire.

The Right Hon. Hugh C. E. Childers, M.P., has left town for Eastbourne, to join Mrs. Childers.

The coming of age of Viscount Tarbat, second son of the Duke of Sutherland, and heir to the Cromartie estates and representative of the earldom, has been observed with great demonstrations of joy in the districts of Easter and Wester Ross. The Duchess of Sutherland will give a fête on the 21st inst. at Tarbat House, in honour of Lord Tarbat's majority.

Duncombe Park, the seat of Lord Feversham, has for the past week been the scene of continued festivities, in celebration of the coming of age of Lord Helmsley.

His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland and Countess Spencer returned to Dublin, on Monday morning, after a brief stay on the Continent, during which the Viceregal party visited the Vienna Exhibition. His Excellency and her Ladyship immediately proceeded to Piltown, in the county of Waterford, the seat of the Earl of Bessborough, as guests of the noble Earl during the continuance of the annual show of the Royal Agricultural Society at Waterford.

A committee of homœopathic physicians in Prussia, speaking for their branch of the faculty, have addressed a formal petition to Prince Bismarck requesting that professorial chairs for homœopathy may be added to the universities, and that medical inspectors may be appointed to ensure proper supervision of the homœopathic practice.

MINISTERIAL CHANGES.

A portion of our issue last week contained some account of the considerable changes which have been effected in the composition of the Ministry.

The President of the Council, Lord Ripon, who has for some time desired to retire, takes the opportunity offered by the close of the Session to give effect to that intention. Very urgent private affairs have induced him to resign office.

Mr. Bruce will receive a peerage and will succeed Lord Ripon as Lord President of the Council.

Mr. Lowe, who leaves the Exchequer, succeeds Mr. Bruce in the office of Home Secretary.

The Chancellorship of the Exchequer will be held by Mr. Gladstone, together with the office of First Lord of the Treasury. These offices have been frequently held by the same Minister, the latest instances being those of Mr. Canning in 1827 and Sir Robert Peel in 1834-5.

Mr. Childers retires for a while from public business, but he will continue to discharge the duties of the Duchy of Lancaster so long as his services may be required.

Mr. Bright will succeed Mr. Childers.

The post assigned to Mr. Ayrton in the rearrangement of the Government is that of Judge Advocate-General.

Mr. Baxter, whose resignation was announced last week, retires, we are informed, without the slightest interruption of the personal or political relations which unite him with the party and the Administration.

Mr. Dodson will succeed Mr. Baxter as Financial Secretary to the Treasury; and, in consequence of the extra work which will be thrown upon his office by the combination of the offices of First Lord and Chancellor of the Exchequer, will be assisted by Lord Frederick Cavendish, who will join the Treasury Board in a position superior to that of the Junior Lords. Mr. Arthur Peel has accepted the office of Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury, in succession to Lord Wolverton; and Mr. W. P. Adam's services have been recognised by his appointment as First Commissioner of Public Works, in place of Mr. Ayrton. Mr. Greville has been asked to succeed him in the post of Junior Lord of the Treasury.

The office of Master of the Rolls has been accepted by Sir George Jessel; but his successor as Solicitor-General has not been appointed.

THE AUTUMN CAMPAIGN ON DARTMOOR.

The troops assembled, under the command of Major-General Sir Charles Staveley, for the military manoeuvres of this autumn, left, on Monday last, their camping-grounds of Ringmoor and Yennadon, near Roborough Down, between the Plym and the Tavy, to advance ten miles north-east, farther into the highland wilderness of Dartmoor. The First Division, under General Sir E. Greathed, moved to a position chosen for it on Beardown, near Two Bridges and Prince's Town, overlooking the upper glen of the West Dart, not far from the high road leading from Exeter to Tavistock and Plymouth, which branches off at Two Bridges to those different towns. The place is about eight miles from Tavistock and eighteen from Plymouth; it has many remarkable features of scenery and local antiquities in the neighbourhood. One of these is a very singular natural phenomenon—a grove of dwarf oaks, called Wistman's Wood, that seems growing out of a heap of granite blocks close to the river; the branches, wonderfully twisted and distorted, are entirely covered with a prodigious thickness of moss; the foliage is extremely scanty. This grove may be five or six centuries old, but tradition ascribes it to the ancient Druids, though it is not certain, we believe, that the Celtic inhabitants of Damnonium, before the Roman Conquest of Britain, had any Druids among them. Some avenues and circles, formed of stones arranged on the ground, are referred to the same priestly order, and are supposed to have belonged to their temples, or places of worship. Even the rude bridges of stepping-stones, like that shown in our Artist's sketch, laid in the bed of the Blackbrook near Two Bridges, has been ascribed to such pontifical architecture of the Druids; but the fact is very doubtful. It is much better known that the modern bridge close by it was constructed by the labour of some of the French prisoners of war, confined in the great gaol of Prince's Town, in 1814. Crockern Tor, which is a hill near the Two Bridges, was the seat of a Stannary Court appointed by Edward I. for the Dartmoor tin-mining districts.

The Second Division of the troops, under General Smith, marched some miles farther, descending the valley of the West Dart towards Dartmeet, where it is joined by the East Dart; but they stopped short of Dartmeet, at Brimps and Hexworthy. In the strategic idea of these movements it was supposed that the Second Division, having got more to the eastward, was threatening the position held by the First Division near Prince's Town, while the First Division was trying to effect a right-flank movement, sidling down to the south-east, to join an allied force coming up from Buckfastleigh, on the Ashburton and Plymouth high road, by way of Holne to Two Bridges, up the valley of the Dart. The Second Division was posted so as to intercept this line of march. A battle took place on Tuesday afternoon, under the heights of Belliver Tor and Lofty Tor, where nearly 12,000 men were actively engaged in mimic fighting, which was renewed on Wednesday morning, but the rain and fog have not permitted much enjoyment of this military spectacle.

The Illustrations given in this Number belong to an earlier series of performances, while the two opposing Army Divisions, in their original positions of Yennadon and Ringmoor, were skirmishing against each other across the vale of the Meavy, around the village of Sheepator, and over the sides of the neighbouring hills. To this period of their harmless warfare do the incidents appertain of the Royal Engineers making a clear practicable breach through a wall of loose stones in the fields, and the 42nd Regiment (Highlanders) storming the fortress of the pigs and poultry in the farmyard at Yellowmead. The ordinary scenes and habits of camp life are represented in another series of sketches, which together occupy a page of our Journal.

In the Midland campaigning district, that of Cannock Chase, as well as on Dartmoor in the West of England, military exercises will this autumn be conducted with great spirit, under the command of Major-General Lysons. The camp has been formed this week, and on Monday actual work will commence. From the 18th to the 31st the troops will be employed in brigade drill; from the 1st to the 6th of September, and from the 6th to the 10th, in manoeuvres. The march past will be on the 12th. In reaching the camp some very long marches have been made by some of the troops already arrived. The cavalry have not come in yet. When they do they will be encamped in front of the head-quarters camp, and just above them, on the hills, will be the several batteries of artillery. The autumn manoeuvres at the Curragh, in Ireland, began on Tuesday with a divisional field-day. About 12,000 troops were engaged.

Bradford Townhall will be opened on Sept. 9, by Mr. Thompson, the Mayor.

DESTRUCTION OF A DHOW.

In recent notices of the East African slave trade, upon the occasion of Sir Partle Frere's diplomatic mission, and the treaty which has since been exacted of the Sultan of Zanzibar, for the suppression of that inhuman traffic, we have described the "dhows" or small vessels used by the Arab slave dealers from the Red Sea and Persian Gulf to the Mozambique Channel. A series of illustrations of their different shapes and rig, borrowed from Captain G. N. Sullivan's new book, "Dhow-Chasing in Zanzibar Waters," has also been published in this Journal. The reader of that book will be prepared for such an incident as is shown in the sketch this week engraved, which is sent us by Mr. Thomas Mitchell, Assistant Paymaster of H.M.S. Magpie, at Zanzibar, on the 4th ult. Mr. Mitchell writes to us as follows:—"When steaming to the southward, along the Arabian coast, on our way to Zanzibar to join the Admiral, we sighted, off Cape Madraka, a dhow, which on seeing us immediately began making for the shore. Of course we gave chase, knowing what her game was, and steaming as hard as we were able; but we did not succeed in cutting her off, and she beached, through a tremendous surf, in the only sandy bay near. We then saw some of the crew land, and those left on board threw the slaves overboard, while those on shore assisted them to land as they were washed up. About 150 slaves were landed in this manner, and then the dhow broke up, and the slaves were conveyed in a long straggling line away towards the hills. Where they went, and how they lived, it is impossible to imagine, as there is no water for twenty miles round, so far as we know, and it is an uncommonly thirsty-looking spot. The object of the captain in wrecking his vessel in this extraordinary manner was to save as much of his cargo of slaves as possible, though his chance of saving many was very doubtful. But slavers will always endeavour to do the like, if they can; and many fine prizes are lost in this way, especially where the surf on the beach is sufficient to prevent the possibility of our landing and following. The sketch represents the dhow just before she struck the beach. Her stern was seen to be lifted high up in the air at the same time she lowered her sail. The headland in the distance is Ras or Cape Khashaim. The Magpie is represented with her topmasts hoisted, and her lower and top-sail yards on deck, as she was steaming against the monsoon."

MICHAEL ANGELO'S DAVID.

Anyone who has visited Florence within the last two years may remember the disappointment it has been to find Michael Angelo's noble statue of David, which stood guard by the portal of the Palazzo Vecchio, boxed up, or rather housed in, with planks. The fact is that the guardians of Florentine relics of art and antiquity, finding that this grand work was in great danger from the action of the weather, had decided to remove it to some place of safety and shelter. It is said that the difficulty of deciding on its future resting-place has been the cause of its being so long closed in. Of late this unsightly hut and the imprisoned David became the subject of daily satire and ridicule in the Florence journals. Finally, the gallery of the Academy of the "Belle Arti" was decided upon for the reception of David. On the 30th ult. the great slinger was himself slung, with great security, by the ingenuity of Professor Cavaliere de Fabris and the engineer Cavaliere Porra. It was done in such a manner, by an arrangement of iron rods and rubber car-springs, as to resist, or rather to counteract, all the effect of jarring. The figure is about 15 ft. high, and of the most exquisite proportions, though by some it has been thought the head is too large, yet this may arise from the treatment of the hair. It was placed in its late position, at the left hand of the principal entrance of the palace, in the year 1504. The view given in our Illustration shows the arrangement of the car and the temporary railroad track (about fifty feet of which is laid at a time) crossing the Piazza Signoria. The Palazzo Vecchio is on the right, in front of which still remains the wooden house in which the statue has been imprisoned during two years past. To the right is the Loggia di Lanzi, while in the intermediate space appears a small corner of the Gallery of the Uffizj. A few years since the celebrated bronze founder Pappi was commissioned to reproduce the figure of David in bronze, the original being in marble. This fine piece of casting appeared in the Paris Exhibition of 1863. About a month since it was erected as the central attraction of the Piazza Michael Angelo, which may well be called the most beautiful portion of that exquisite drive outside around the wall of Florence Oltrarno. The sculptor Dupré has been commissioned to produce a duplicate, in marble, to replace the original statue before the Palazzo Vecchio.

AGRICULTURAL SHOWS.

The annual show of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland was held last week in the King's Park, Stirling, beginning on Tuesday morning and concluding on Friday evening. According to the Scotsman the exhibition was one of the best ever held under the auspices of the society, both as regarded the number of entries and the quality of the stock. The number of cattle shown was 406; horses, 297; sheep, 532; swine, 96; poultry, 534; implements, 1915. The premiums amounted to £1860. The total amount realised for admission, catalogues, &c., during the four days of the show amounted to £3140 15s. 6d., the largest sum collected at any show of the society since that at Edinburgh in 1869. At the president's dinner the Earl of Dunmore occupied the chair, and Sir William Stirling Maxwell was croupier. There were about 200 gentlemen present.

The annual exhibition of the Worcestershire Agricultural Society was opened at Evesham on Tuesday. The short-horned stock was exceptionally good, comprising several animals which have taken honours at the Royal Agricultural Show. The Toddington challenge cup, fifty guineas, was awarded to Mr. W. Linton, of Sherrif Hutton, for the best short-horned bull aged four years, an animal which has once carried off the second prize at the Royal show, and has earned for its owner over sixty prizes. The stock of horses was a full average one, and the animals exhibited were of a first-class order of merit. A keen competition took place in the pig department, which was also well supplied. National as well as local politics were discussed at the dinner, on Wednesday, under the chairmanship of Mr. Edward Holland. The chair had been reserved for the president of the society, the Duc d'Aumale; but his official duties at Versailles prevented his attendance. The principal speakers were Sir John Pakington, Lord Lyttelton, Mr. Dowdeswell, M.P., Sir E. A. Lechmere, the Marquis of Hertford, Colonel Bourne, and Lord Coventry.

The annual show of the Irish Royal Agricultural Society was opened on Wednesday, at Waterford, by the Lord Lieutenant. His Excellency was accompanied by Countess Spencer, the Earl and Countess of Bessborough, and Lord Charles Cavendish. The Viceregal company, upon arriving at Waterford by the midday train, were escorted to the Townhall, where they were presented with several addresses. Subsequently they visited the show, and remained a considerable time inspecting the various sections and witnessing the jumping contest for horses. The show of cattle, sheep, and horses was good.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, Aug. 14.

"La fusion est faite!" Such is the song of triumph sung by the Legitimist party throughout France. The great-grandson of Philippe Egalité, who symbolises in himself alike the Monarchy and the Revolution, has journeyed to Frohsdorf, and humbled himself before his cousin, the Count de Chambord, who has graciously returned him his visit at the Palais Cobourg, at Vienna. At both interviews, we are told, great cordiality prevailed; and "Henceforth," exclaim the Legitimist organs, "there exists but one Maison de France!" The Gazette de France and the Union, which publish accounts of the interviews, recite that the Count de Paris informed his august relative that, not only did he salute in him the head of the house of Bourbon, but also the sole representative of the Monarchical idea in France. "In the Princes of Orleans," he added, "he would find no competitors." The telegraph flashes the news to France, where the ardent and devout champions of the Altar and the Throne receive it with enthusiasm, and the more sensible Orleanists with profound regret, feeling that the Count de Paris, in abdicating absolutely as he has done at the feet of the Count de Chambord, has simply dishonoured himself, repudiated the traditions of his family, and solemnly admitted his grandfather to have been a usurper.

The Count de Chambord, to the credit of his honesty and honour, has, on more than one occasion, emphatically declined to make the slightest concession to modern ideas, either with regard to the colour of his flag or his so-called Divine right to govern the kingdom of his ancestors, and he has all along remained true to his principles. It is far different with the Count de Paris, who in his eagerness to reign has alike forsown the tricolour flag, the principles of '89, and the Parliamentary title of his own dynastic inheritance. That the visit to Frohsdorf was counselled by his uncles appears certain; but that it was either advised or approved by the leading political men of his party does not seem at all probable, for we find them to-day bitterly complaining of the foolishness of the step. The members of the Right Centre of the National Assembly are Orleanists simply because Orleanism represents the Constitutional Monarchy, and they are not likely to forswear their principles merely out of affection for one who has proved himself a renegade to them. A leading Orleanist statesman expressed his belief the other day that the whole business would lead to nothing, and that when November comes round the fusion will be found just where it was in July. The Count de Chambord's white flag, he observed, which implies a host of incompatibilities, will be found an invincible obstacle. There is one voice, however, that should have been heard on the subject, which has been as yet completely ignored. That is the voice of France itself. It is doubtful in these days, when the nation has begun to realise the benefits of a moderate Republic, whether the house of Bourbon will succeed in disposing of France with the same facility as Catherine II., Maria Theresa, and Frederick the Great did a century ago of unhappy Poland.

Ever since the retirement of M. Thiers the Legitimist, Orleanist, and more especially the Bonapartist, journals have been constantly questioning the Government concerning the detention of M. Henri Rochefort at the Iles Ste. Marguerite, and the necessity for sending him to New Caledonia with all possible despatch. To-day we learn that the brilliant but misguided writer, who, more than any other individual, save Napoleon III. himself, contributed to the downfall of the Second Empire, has been embarked on board the frigate La Virginie, bound for Noumea. Some few weeks ago he was examined by a medical commission, which reported, contrary to the physicians who visited him during the presidency of M. Thiers, that he was in a fit state to undertake the journey. It would appear that it is mainly owing to the efforts of M. Victor Hugo that Rochefort has remained so long in France. Shortly after his condemnation the illustrious author of "Les Misérables" had an interview with M. Thiers, and, in spite of the President's well-founded animosity for Rochefort, succeeded in persuading him to do everything in his power to mitigate the punishment of the ex-editor of the Mot d'Ordre. Yesterday the Rappel published a letter addressed by Victor Hugo to the Duc de Broglie on the subject of Rochefort's transportation, in which the writer appeals to the Duke, as a man of letters as well as a member of the French Academy, to prevent Rochefort's departure. The Duc de Broglie's concise reply mentions that Rochefort has been examined by a medical commission, which has expressed the opinion that the voyage to Noumea will in no wise hasten his death, while, with regard to the indulgence which Victor Hugo solicits for the intellectual gifts of the prisoner, the Vice-President of the Council observes that, in his opinion, these intellectual gifts only increase his culpability, and that the unfortunate ignorant ones whom his writings led astray are far more worthy of pity than he is. Most unprejudiced persons, however, will consider that the carrying out of the sentence of transportation after this long interval has been actuated, not by sentiments of rigid justice, but purely by those of revenge.

M. Odillon-Barrot, Vice-President of the Council of State, died last Thursday morning at Bougival, at the age of eighty-two years. At his funeral, which took place on Saturday, with a certain amount of pomp, the cordons of the coffin were held by MM. Buffet, Ernoul, Charles Lévesque, and Daréste, the hearse being followed by several members of the Cabinet, deputations from the Institute of France, and a crowd of deputies, among whom was M. Thiers. The Duc de Chartres also followed the deceased to the grave, a somewhat singular circumstance, when one reflects that none were more instrumental in bringing about the revolution of 1848 than M. Odillon-Barrot, who organised the famous Reform banquet. It is announced that he will be succeeded in the vice-presidency of the Council of State by M. Dufaure, formerly M. Thiers's Keeper of the Seals.

It would seem that we shall have anything but an abundant harvest this year in France. In the north the yield is below what was expected both as regards quantity and quality, while in the south wheat is extremely high in price, on account not merely of its scarcity, but also of its excellent quality. The stock on hand becoming scarcer and the cultivators bringing hardly anything to the markets, the millers are obliged to have recourse to foreign corn. To complicate matters the streams are extremely low, owing to the recent dry weather, and the mills in many parts will soon have to stop working. No decline in the present high prices appears therefore possible.

An inquiry set on foot by the Préfet of the Seine has resulted in the fact being ascertained that up to the present time no case of cholera has occurred in Paris.

M. Pascal, the author of the press circular, has been appointed Préfet of Bordeaux.

The Academy has decided that its annual public sitting shall take place on the 28th inst., under the presidency of M. Camille Rousset, who will pronounce the address on the prizes of virtue. M. Latin, perpetual secretary, will read his report on the prizes of literature and history, and M. Ernest Legouvé an unpublished fragment of his own composition.

The Association for the Advancement of Science will hold its second congress, this year, at Lyons, from the 21st to the 28th inst.

GERMANY.

The German Emperor has addressed to General Manteuffel an order of the day to be communicated to the late army of occupation in France. The Emperor says that the military tact and discipline required of that army have been displayed by the troops to his complete satisfaction. His Majesty expresses his acknowledgments to the generals, officers, officials, and men, and his special gratification at the manner in which the divisional commanders have fulfilled their duties.

Prince Bismarck's voluntary exile from Berlin is to be relaxed for a day, on Sept. 2, when he will be present at the unveiling of a statue in honour of the German victories in the late war. This over, he will repair to his Lauenburg estates.

The seventh German Protestant Assembly was opened on Wednesday morning, in the hall of the University, Leipzig, in the presence of a large number of people. Professor Raebiger presided. After a long debate, a resolution containing five propositions was adopted, recognising the necessity for the introduction of obligatory civil marriage. A committee was appointed to take proper steps for giving effect to this resolution.

Dr. Rinkel and Professor Reinkens were consecrated at Rotterdam, on Monday, Old Catholic Bishops of Haarlem and Germany respectively, by Mgr. Heycamp, the Old Catholic Bishop of Deyenter. This ceremony, says Reuter's telegram, created a great impression. Fourteen Dutch curés, seven foreign pastors, forty clergymen and missionaries, and several scholars of the Amersfort seminary were present. A pastoral issued by Dr. Reinkens lays down a doctrine of episcopal duty which will disgust the Ultramontanes. He holds that a bishop is a traitor to his office who does not teach obedience to the secular authorities as a religious and conscientious obligation.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

The Emperor has left Vienna for Ischl, where he spends his birthday, returning on the 27th. His brother, Archduke Charles Louis, patron of the exhibition, will distribute, in his place, the prizes on the 18th.

The list of Royal visitors to the Vienna Exhibition next month will include the King of Bavaria, who intends spending a fortnight incognito amongst the Viennese.

The farewell festivity in honour of the Shah was a brilliant fête given at the Schönbrunn Palace on Thursday week. It was attended by the Empress Elizabeth, and proved a great success. The Shah left Vienna on the following day.

According to the Viennese papers, the Comte de Chambord has formally declared to the Legitimist deputation that waited upon him his acceptance of the crown of France. The report that the Austrian Government had used its influence to bring about the Bourbon fusion is repudiated in Ministerial circles.

Mr. Jay, the American Minister at Vienna, has concluded his inquiry into the charges of corruption made against the American Commissioners at the Exhibition, which led to their being superseded. His report severely censures the conduct of the Commissioners.

The International Patent Congress at Vienna has concluded its sittings. As to the desirability of encouraging invention by granting patents the congress was nearly unanimous; but there was a protracted debate on the compulsory granting of licenses by patentees. The principle was opposed by the American members, but was carried, after ten days' discussion, by 42 to 17. A permanent committee has been appointed. It has elected as its president Baron von Schwarz, the manager of the Universal Exhibition; Herr Preper, from Dresden, as the general secretary; and Councillor Rosas, of Vienna, as treasurer.

The National Economic Congress was opened at Vienna on Monday. Dr. Barum, of Wiesbaden, was elected to the chair. Baron Schwarz welcomed the assembly.

ITALY.

Cardinal Antonelli has taken occasion, in acknowledging a letter addressed to the Pope by a number of Catholic priests in America, to say that his Holiness is deeply affected by the sympathy shown towards him by "distant children of the Church."

The Shah of Persia arrived at Bologna early on Monday morning, and was received by the civil and military authorities. The prefect delivered to his Majesty a despatch from King Victor Emmanuel which appeared to afford him great satisfaction. The Shah has gratified the Bolognese by visiting their university and museum, and manifesting great interest in their municipal history. After devoting the best part of Tuesday to this intellectual recreation, he started in the afternoon for Prindisi. There he was received by the civil and military authorities, to whom he expressed his appreciation of the kindness he had experienced at the hands of Victor Emmanuel and his people. After resting an hour or two, he went on board the Turkish yacht Sultane for Constantinople.

TURKEY.

The Shah was expected at Constantinople on Friday afternoon. The Grand Vizier was to receive his Majesty at the Dardanelles. The Persian residents at Constantinople are preparing to give several large fetes there in honour of their Sovereign.

The Khedive took farewell of the Sultan of Turkey on Saturday, and left Constantinople for Egypt on Sunday, arriving at Alexandria on Thursday morning. In the evening the city and harbour were illuminated on a grand scale. His Highness has invited the Shah to include Egypt in his tour.

Three newspapers have been suppressed at Constantinople. Yacoub Bey, the Envoy from Yarkand, has left Constantinople for Bombay.

RUSSIA.

On the 4th inst. the Emperor reviewed the troops in camp at Kranevo Selo. The troops consisted of 55 battalions of infantry, 40 squadrons of cavalry, 88 field-pieces, and 34 guns of the horse artillery. The Emperor arrived at the camp at eleven a.m., and, having inspected the lines, went to meet the Empress, who drove between the lines in an open carriage and proceeded to the Imperial tent, before which the troops defiled.

At St. Petersburg it is affirmed that Khiva is returning to its normal condition, the mail being re-established, and a caravan of 800 camels, with Khivan merchandise, having started for the Fair of Novgorod, under the leadership of the Khan's brother. The Russians have withdrawn their troops from Atiek, and are reducing their garrisons in the Steppes.

The Russian officers and men engaged in the Khiva campaign are to receive money grants to compensate them for their loss of baggage. In the case of officers the compensation will frequently amount to a full year's pay.

SPAIN.

Valencia has unconditionally surrendered, and General Martinez Campos occupies the town.

The dictatorship of General Contreras at Carthage has come to a sudden and inglorious end. He was marching on Madrid, in the hope of taking it by surprise, when the Government, learning his intentions, dispatched a column of 1000 men to meet him. Though they were outnumbered by two to one they routed the insurgents and captured 400 of them, dispersing the rest. It is expected now that Carthage will yield, and that its submission will terminate the Republican insurrection.

At a meeting of Republicans, held on Tuesday, in the hall of the Council-General at Barcelona, it was determined to request the Government at Madrid to establish a junta armed with civil and military powers to provide for the public safety of Catalonia. On the other hand, local and provincial committees have protested against any such step, declaring that what is wanted is a capable General, with adequate powers for the re-establishment of discipline, the maintenance of order, and the suppression of the Carlists.

The Carlists have captured Vergara and have blockaded Bilbao.

In the midst of its double conflict with Carlists and Intransigentes the Government has found time to publish a Budget and to decree the establishment of a School of Fine Arts.

The Intransigentes of Madrid attempted on Saturday to make a public demonstration on the Prado and in several of the streets, ostensibly against the Carlist party; but the inhabitants, not approving of the form of the proceedings, put a stop to them, tore down the red flags, and drove away those who carried them.

AMERICA.

Telegraphic advices from New York hint at a gigantic scheme of railway amalgamation—namely, the merging of the two through Pacific lines into one company. This idea is countenanced by the election of the president and vice-president of the Pennsylvania Central Railway to the directorate of the Atlantic and Pacific.

One of those dreadful catastrophes to which the steam-ships that ply on American rivers seem to be specially liable has taken place on the Potomac. A steamer named the Wawusett, with a crew and passengers on board numbering 117, took fire, and was burned to the water's edge. Seventy lives were lost.

Two of the docks of Portland (Maine), with three steamships and a large quantity of goods, have been burned, entailing a loss of about £150,000.

Under the heading of "Brigham Young's Matrimonial Troubles," the New York World contains the following from Salt Lake City, dated July 30:—"The papers in the case of Ann Eliza Webb Young, praying for a divorce from Brigham Young, were personally served yesterday. The prophet seemed undisturbed, and passed the documents over to his secretary. The plaintiff sues for divorce on account of neglect and bad treatment, and states that her husband has an income of 400,000 dols. a month. She prays for lawyers' fees of 20,000 dols., of which 6000 dols. are to be paid down as a preliminary fee, and the balance on the termination of the suit, she meanwhile to receive 1000 dols. per month for support. She finally prays that the sum of 200,000 dols. be set aside from the defendant's estate and paid to her as alimony."

CANADA.

A telegram from Ottawa states that the Dominion Parliament was prorogued on Wednesday by the Governor-General, who in his speech announced the immediate appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the Pacific Railway scandal, and promised to summon Parliament as soon as the commission shall have presented its report. Black Rod entered the House to announce the prorogation whilst Mr. Mackenzie, the leader of the Opposition, was speaking on a resolution protesting against the course of the Government. The Speaker of the House quitted the Commons amid loud cries of "Privilege!" and groans from the Opposition.

"Lord Gordon," who has caused so much trouble in both the United States and Canada, has escaped from Fort Garry towards the Rocky Mountains.

INDIA.

Lord Northbrook has nominated eleven natives of India, seven of whom are Hindoos, three Mohammedans, and one Christian, as members of the Finance Committee of the Indian Government; and Mr. Campbell, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, has appointed several ryots as honorary magistrates.

Calcutta advices state that five native Bengal officials have been selected from seventy-five candidates to give evidence before the Indian Finance Committee.

Some miscellaneous items are telegraphed by the Calcutta correspondent of the Times:—The Rent Union is spreading in a modified form. The landlords have difficulties in Dacca and Tipperah, where the tenants declare themselves to be the Queen's ryots. Preparations for the road cess are progressing well, at half rates or less. The Afghan Envoy's business with the Viceroy has been concluded satisfactorily. Khelat is still disturbed since the subsidy ceased and the political agent left. The Attalik Ghazee is at Kashgar. Mr. Shaw reports all well. The Viceroy invites specially-qualified native witnesses to attend the Parliamentary Committee. The Sultan still remains at Zanzibar.

The death of Mr. Chisholm Anstey, aged fifty-seven, is announced by telegraph from Bombay. From 1847 to 1852 he represented Youghal in Parliament, and was afterwards Attorney-General at Hong-Kong. He has been subsequently engaged at the Bombay Bar. In 1865 he acted as a Judge of the High Court of Bombay during the temporary absence of Sir Joseph Arnould.

A telegram from Calcutta states that the Yarkund Envoy has been instructed to leave Constantinople for India immediately; and we learn from that city that he has left.

Krystianopol, in Galicia, has been destroyed by fire.

The Universities of Göttingen and Heidelberg have resolved not to admit any female students.

Cholera has broken out at Hamburg, and vessels arriving at Copenhagen from that port have been subjected to a strict quarantine.

The Iron and Steel Institute of Great Britain having accepted an invitation from the ironmasters of Belgium, a meeting of that society will be held at Liège, beginning on Monday, Aug. 18, and ending on the following Thursday.

The proposal to transfer the Russian female students who have practically been compelled to leave Zurich to one of the larger German universities has been negatived by the authorities of Heidelberg University, to whom it was first addressed.

The Swiss Times states that a family festival of rare occurrence recently took place in Fischenthal, Canton Zurich, when M. Knecht, district judge, and his wife celebrated their diamond wedding. The pastor who joined the couple sixty years ago was present on the occasion.

It is announced in a positive manner from Zanzibar that the Sultan would leave his capital for Europe in August. His Highness, it is said, requires rest and change after the crisis through which he has passed in connection with the abolition of the slave trade, and wishes to escape for a time from the odium which his acceptance of the treaty negotiated with him for that purpose by Sir Bartle Frere has thrown upon him. Dr. Kirk will probably accompany him.

THE CHURCH.

The Convocations of Canterbury and York stand prorogued until Oct. 23.

The Temple Church is closed for the long vacation. It will be reopened on Sunday, Oct. 5.

We regret to announce the death of the Rev. Edward Meredith Cope, Senior Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

The Principalship of Bishop's College, Calcutta, has been conferred upon the Rev. R. M. Stewart, M.A., of Worcester College, Oxford.

The Venerable Archdeacon Jones has been appointed to the resident canonry in York Minster, vacant by the resignation of Archdeacon Creyke, who was appointed in 1857.

A new bishopric has been formed for British Kaffraria; and the Rev. Mr. Callaway, a missionary of the Church of England, at Spring Vale, Natal, has been named as the first occupant.

"A Needy Incumbent with a Young Family" writes to the Standard that he has been presented with a small Incumbency worth £89 a year, and that the fees for institution cost him close upon £20.

Archdeacon Kaye presided, on Tuesday, at the sixteenth annual meeting of the Poor Clergy Relief Corporation, when it was reported that the amount distributed during the year was £4088—an increase of £600 on the benefactions of last year.

Yesterday week Lord Wenlock, accompanied by Lady Wenlock and the Hon. Miss Lawley, opened a bazaar in the Public Rooms, Selby, in aid of funds for the restoration of Selby Abbey Church, which is being restored under the direction of Sir George Gilbert Scott, R.A.

The preachers at the evening services in St. Paul's Cathedral for the rest of the month of August will be—Aug. 17, the Rev. E. S. Talbot, Warden of Keble College, Oxford; Aug. 24, the Rev. W. Walsh, secretary to the Diocesan Home Mission; Aug. 31, the Rev. W. Carpenter, St. James's, Holloway.

The Right Rev. William George Tozer, D.D., has resigned the Bishopric of Central Africa, to which he was appointed in 1863, on the death of Bishop Charles Mackenzie, D.D. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel will recommend a successor for the approval of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Bangor Cathedral was reopened yesterday week, after having undergone partial restoration at a cost of £20,000. The works have extended over eight years, and Lord Penrhyn is a contributor of nearly £7000. In the morning there was an early choral celebration of the holy communion, and a sermon was preached in English by the Bishop of Bangor; in the evening a sermon was preached in Welsh by Dr. Hughes.

The application for license to erect a baldachino in the parish church of St. Barnabas, Pimlico, has encountered opposition from a considerable number of parishioners. One of them has entered a strong protest before the chancellor of the diocese, in course of which he declared that the mode of conducting the services at St. Barnabas's was distasteful to a large number of the congregation. Dr. Tristram granted a week for the statement of objections.

The final programme of the forthcoming Church Congress, to be held at Bath early in October, has been published. Among the subjects to be discussed are "Foreign Missions," "The Union of Church and State," "Lay Helpers," "The Church and the Temperance Movement," "The Increase of the Episcopate," "The Means of bringing the Influence of the Church to bear on the Masses of the People," and "The Religious Wants of Children."

Three windows of richly-stained glass have been inserted in the parish church of Illingworth, Yorkshire. They are respectively the gift of Mrs. Akroyd, of Bank Field, Halifax; Mrs. Hartley, of Taunton; and Mr. T. Holdsworth, of Spring Hall, Halifax. The subjects are "The Last Supper," "The Good Samaritan," and "Abraham offering Isaac." They have been executed by Messrs. Ward and Hughes, who have now placed twelve windows in this church, so chastely restored at the close of last year.

A handsome monument to the memory of the late Professor Conington has been erected in St. Botolph's Church, Boston, by Messrs. Farmer and Brindley, of London, from the design of Sir George Gilbert Scott. The work generally is executed in veined alabaster, the subject being sculptured in white alabaster. The monument bears the following inscription:—"To the beloved memory of John Conington, eldest and last remaining son of the Rev. Richard and Jane Conington; and Corpus Professor of Latin in the University of Oxford. As a classical scholar and literary critic he had few equals among his contemporaries. As a son and friend he will be long and lovingly remembered for his Christian principles, and for his rare simplicity, truthfulness, tenderness of sympathy, wise counsels, and perfect filial devotion. Born at Boston, Aug. 10, 1825; died at Boston, Oct. 23, 1869."

The parish church of the Holy Cross, Weston Bampfylde, near Ilchester, Somerset, was reopened by the Bishop of Bath and Wells on the 7th inst., after having been closed for reparation and additions for a period of about two years. The building, though small (it accommodates about one hundred), is of an interesting character, the tower not being of the usual Somersetshire type, but square at the base and octagonal above; a peculiarity, however, shared by one or two other churches in the neighbourhood, at Somerton and Podimore. No vestry formerly existed, but one has been built on the north side of the chancel. The total cost will probably be about £700, which has been contributed by the Rev. J. S. Hellier, the Rector, and his family, Mrs. Blandford, and Miss Blandford: a good deal has been raised, too, in the small parish itself. Mr. E. B. Ferrey has been the architect.

The Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Lyonshall, Herefordshire, was reopened on the 2nd inst., after rebuilding and restoration from the plans of Mr. G. F. Bodley. The church, which occupies a most picturesque position on an eminence adjoining the ruins of the ancient castle of Lyonshall, consists of chancel, nave, with north and south aisles and transept, and tower containing a fine peal of bells. It dates chiefly from the thirteenth century, the font and beautifully-fluted arches of the north aisle belonging to the earlier part of that century; while the tower arch and west window, both of which are Norman, seem to bespeak an earlier building. In consequence of their decayed condition, the north and south outer walls, the south arcade, and upper part of the tower have been entirely rebuilt, and the restoration includes two entirely new arches with four columns, fifteen new windows, and new stone floors, new roofs, altar, stalls, reredos, screen, pulpit, seats, and handsomely carved porch, all of oak. The cost of rebuilding and restoration, exclusive of specific gifts and sums specially raised for certain purposes, is upwards of £2700. The chancel, too, has been partially rebuilt and restored by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, under the direction of their architect, Mr. Christian.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Drovers' Institute, of which we gave an Engraving last week, was opened by the Lord Mayor in June last.

The bridge which has been erected across the river Thames at Chelsea will be opened to the public to-day (Saturday).

The council of the Charity Organisation Society has received 50 gs. from the Drapers' and £50 from the Goldsmiths' Company.

Nearly half a million in gold, part of a heavy arrival from Australia, was sent into the Bank of England on Wednesday.

The first of what is intended to be a series of annual meetings of members of athletic societies in London and its neighbourhood was held at the Alexandra Palace grounds on Saturday last.

The medical schools in connection with the great metropolitan hospitals will be opened for the winter campaign on Wednesday, Oct. 1, when addresses will be delivered to the students by distinguished professors.

The return of "deaths from starvation" for the year 1872 specifies eighty-three cases in the central division of Middlesex, thirteen in the eastern division, and one in Westminster. None was reported in the City or in Southwark.

The second term of the Crystal Palace school of practical engineering has terminated, and on Saturday last the successful students received their certificates of efficiency in the drawing office, Mr. C. H. Gregory, F.R.G.S., past-president of the Institution of Civil Engineers, presiding at a meeting of the students and their friends.

The Metropolitan Asylums Board has received a recommendation from the Local Government Board to provide accommodation for cholera cases at the Homerton and Stockwell Asylums, and to report on the expense that may have to be incurred. The half-yearly financial statement showed a balance at Michaelmas of £23,721, and the estimated expenditure for the next half year is £68,537.

The total number of paupers in the metropolitan districts last week was 97,924, of whom 33,097 were in workhouses and 64,847 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the years 1872, 1871, and 1870, these figures show a decrease of 3245, 21,109, and 29,312 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the first day of the week was 553, of whom 364 were men, 142 women, and 47 children.

Several owners of property who are about to be ousted by the Metropolitan Board of Works have obtained very substantial compensation. Mr. Greenwood, watch and clock manufacturer, in St. John's-square, was awarded by a special jury £7500 for his freehold and leasehold premises. In another case the award was £1950. These properties are required for the thoroughfare from Oxford-street to Shoreditch.

The court of assistants of the Drapers' Company has presented 100 gs. to the Seaside Convalescent Hospital, Seaford; 50 gs. to the Society for Organising Charitable Relief and Repressing Mendicity; 20 gs. to the Home for Gentlewomen in Reduced Circumstances; 10 gs. to the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools; 10 gs. to the Metropolitan Drinking-Fountain and Cattle-Trough Association; and 10 gs. to the Whitechapel Baths and Washhouses.

The Duke of Cambridge having extended the bathing hours in the Serpentine, Hyde Park, till ten a.m. on Monday morning next, the London Swimming Club will offer their thirty-guinea silver cup for competition open to all comers. The present holder is J. B. Johnson, of Leeds, who, should he win on this occasion, will become the absolute proprietor of the cup of champion of England. The races will begin at eight o'clock, the championship being fixed for nine.

Colonel Henderson, in his annual report on the metropolitan police, states that the strength of the force has been raised to 9761 men, that more than twenty miles of new streets were placed under police supervision during the year, and that the number of persons taken into custody again shows a considerable increase on previous years. The aggregate given is 78,203, against 71,961 arrests made in 1871. Drunk and disorderly cases account for more than the entire increase, these having grown from 23,007 to 33,867.

The members of the British Medical Association dined together on Thursday week, in the hall of Lincoln's Inn, under the presidency of Sir William Fergusson. Mr. Gladstone responded to the toast of "Her Majesty's Ministers." The meeting was brought to a close yesterday week. Sir William Fergusson, the president, described the meeting as "the greatest gathering of medical men that has ever been held." Making holiday on Saturday, the association dispersed itself far and wide, one party going to Hampton Court, another to Windsor Castle, another to Clifden, another to Brighton, and so forth.

Welcome was heartily and earnestly given, on Monday evening, by the Sunday School Union, to about 150 ladies and gentlemen from America, who have devoted their energies to the task of teaching, and who are now making holiday in "the old country." Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., occupied the chair; and among the principal speakers were Mr. Groser, the senior secretary of the union; the Rev. Mr. Bullocks, of New York; the Rev. Mr. Baker, of Virginia; and Mr. Cook, the excursionist, by whom the American party has been conducted to England and Vienna.

About 600 children and friends of the northern schools of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, accompanied by the clergy and churchwardens, marched, on Wednesday, from their schools in Castle-street, Long-acre, with flags and banners waving, to Waterloo station, and a special train conveyed them to Worcester Park, which had been kindly lent for the occasion. The children were amused with games, and supplied with a substantial dinner and tea. The drum and fife band of old scholars, which has arrived at a high state of proficiency, played at frequent intervals. The day's enjoyments terminated by an ascent of fire-balloons and a successful display of fireworks.

The Clothworkers' Company has resolved to found and place at the disposal of the School Board for London a scholarship of an average value of £30 for a period of four years, subject to the same qualifications (as to candidates, award, and tenure) which are provided in the case of the Mortimer Memorial Scholarship, which is open to all candidates under the age of thirteen from the public elementary schools of the metropolitan district. The first award of the Clothworkers' Scholarship will be made at midsummer, 1874. The Mortimer Memorial Scholarship will not be vacant till 1876. Two more scholarships are, therefore, required to make the competition an annual one.

The valuable collection of printed books and manuscripts formed by the late Sir Frederic Madden, keeper of the MSS. in the British Museum, for many years, recently sold by auction by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson, and Hodge, produced £1519. The principal features of the library were Sir F. Madlen's own collection, for the history of his native county, Hampshire, which sold for £138; his extraordinary collection of 27,500 single halfpenny songs and ballads, printed during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries for street singers, which realised £413; and his glossographical collection for a dictionary of early English words, which brought £19 10s. The library was also remarkable for possessing nearly every known work in English dialects and a very extensive series of publications respecting chess, all which brought remarkably high prices. Many of the works were enriched with MS. notes by Sir Frederic, and these were eagerly contested for.

The annual meeting of the Royal Botanic Society was held, on Monday, at the museum in the gardens—Mr. J. Heywood in the chair. It appears from the secretary's report that during the year 114 new subscribers were added to the list, that the total number of fellows and members now on the books is 2502, and that the receipts for the past twelve months were £7104, of which sum £3767 was from subscriptions, and exhibited an improvement of £250 in this item. The evening fête proved highly successful, the total number of visitors being above 10,000, and the produce £1525, giving a good margin of profit to the society. The council has not lost sight of one of the principal objects of the society, the study of botany in its relation to medicine, the arts, manufactures, and domestic economy. Free orders of admission to the gardens for study for periods of from one to six months had been issued to 210 medical and other students, and to twenty-five artists; and 29,006 cut specimens of plants distributed to medical schools of the principal metropolitan hospitals, schools of art, and other educational institutions. The portion of garden devoted to the cultivation of economic plants has been remodelled and enlarged, and a new range of greenhouses 150 ft. long added to this special department. The lectures have been fully attended.

Last week 2174 births and 1711 deaths were registered in London. After making due allowance for increase of population, the births were 68 and the deaths 3 below the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 28 from measles, 13 from scarlet fever, 5 from diphtheria, 44 from whooping-cough, 25 from different forms of fever, 470 from diarrhoea, and not one from smallpox; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 535 deaths were referred, against numbers increasing steadily from 129 to 478 in the seven preceding weeks. This increase is entirely due to the great fatality from diarrhoea, principally infantile. The fatal cases of the other zymotic diseases were not more numerous than in the middle of June, and were 104 below the corrected average number in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The fatality from diarrhoea continues to increase rapidly. In the last week of June only 22 deaths were referred to this disease within registration London; in the five following weeks the numbers rose rapidly to 375, and during last week they further increased to 470, and exceeded by 169 the corrected average number in the corresponding week of the last ten years. To simple cholera and choleraic diarrhoea 16 deaths were referred, against 12 and 23 in the two previous weeks; all were of infants, except four adult cases certified as choleraic diarrhoea. To different forms of violence 64 deaths were referred; 54 were the result of negligence or accident, including 24 from fractures and contusions, 3 from burns and scalds, 11 from drowning, 2 from poison, and 7 of infants under one year from suffocation. The deaths of an adult and an infant were directly referred to the heat of the sun; and the death of a painter resulted from "lead colic." Four cases of suicide, 2 of infanticide, and 2 of manslaughter were registered. Six deaths were caused by horses or vehicles in the streets.

A thunderstorm passed over Manchester on Saturday last and caused considerable damage to property.

Nearly 1500 millworkers struck work at Montrose on Tuesday for an advance of wages.

An Industrial Exhibition on a large scale was opened on Tuesday, at Whitehaven, by Mr. G. Beutnick, M.P., in connection with the Working Men's Reading-Room and Library.

Notice is given in the Gazette that a new writ for the northern division of the West Riding will be issued on Monday next, Lord F. C. Cavendish having accepted the office of one of the Commissioners of the Treasury.

A State Church difficulty has arisen in Brazil. The Bishop of Pernambuco having refused obedience to his temporal superiors, a prosecution has been instituted against him. The Government has, at the same time, declared to the Chambers its determination to enforce its authority among the Episcopate.

An excursion of managers and others interested in gasworks took place, on Tuesday, from London to Chichester, to examine the works fitted up there for the manufacture of water-gas. The city is lighted with a mixture of water-gas and coal-gas, and the working of the new patent is spoken of in high terms.

The anniversary of the relief of Londonderry was celebrated with more than usual enthusiasm on Tuesday, the procession being the largest ever witnessed; but perfect order prevailed. The foundation-stone of the Apprentice Boys' Hall was laid by Alderman Millar.

The report current at the Hague last week, which was reproduced in a part of our issue last week, asserting that Mr. J. Lothrop Motley was seriously ill, is unfounded. Mr. Motley was invited to the King's palace, but was unable to accept the invitation owing to an attack of neuralgia, from which he is recovering.

The application of the Rev. Mr. O'Keeffe to be restored to the management of the Callan Schools has again been brought before the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland. A proposition to remove the interdict from the Callan Schools was rejected, and the further consideration of the case was postponed to Oct. 7.

A batch of girls and boys, numbering in all seventy-two, sailed, on Tuesday, from Liverpool in the Allan steamer Hibernian for Nova Scotia under the care of Mrs. Birt, superintendent and secretary of the Liverpool Home for Destitute Children. The children, whose ages ranged from three and a half to thirteen years, have been rescued from the streets of Liverpool, having for the most part had no home and no one to care for them. During the past four years 1700 children from London and elsewhere have been comfortably provided for in Canada by various societies in the metropolis and other towns.

Lord Cairns has issued his second award in the Albert arbitration. The shareholders in the Family Endowment Society will receive each £3 10s. per share; those in the Western Society, 5s.; those in the Metropolitan Counties, 7s. 6d.; and those in the Anchor, 10d. £1 per share is to be returned to the Albert contributors, and no further call will be made on them. Attention is drawn to very large sums paid for compensation, commission, and otherwise, on amalgamation, amounting to £167,000 altogether; but the arbitrator comes to the conclusion that, though the largeness of the amounts may be considered as affording ground for observation, it is not his duty to direct proceedings to be instituted in respect of any of these payments.

A SKETCH IN ROTTEN-ROW

STERS.

DURING THE PAST SEASON.

"AN INVALID," BY E. F. BREWTHALL.

FROM A WATER-COLOUR DRAWING IN THE LATE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

The Extra Supplement.

"THE SISTERS."

Everybody knows who are the two fair gentlewomen—"Royal Highnesses" is not a higher title, nor one half so pleasant to give or to hear—the two beloved sisters, whose portraits appear in our Engraving, side by side, as we have often seen them, seated in an open carriage, to take the air of a summer evening in Hyde Park. They are the Princess of Wales and the Czarévna, or Princess Imperial of Russia! The constant companionship of these illustrious ladies, during the recent visit of the Czarévitch and his amiable wife to their relatives at Marlborough House, was one of the most agreeable signs, to be witnessed by every Londoner, that all ranks and classes of people in Christendom—it is not so, we are told, in Islam, or among the heathen—enjoy the same precious blessings of family affection. This, indeed, is a truth which has long been made familiar to the English nation by the example of all domestic virtues in the person of our gracious Queen, her lamented husband, and her sons and daughters, now all grown up, and most of them happily married. But there have been times, even in this country, when it seemed to be the doom of Royalty to forego the dearest earthly possession of humanity—that of sincere and devoted love for those united with one by the ties of kindred, or by the still more binding tie of wedded life. Reserve and restraint, if not more positive causes of estrangement, were imposed on Princess and Princesses by considerations of political interest, by the intrigues of factious parties at Court, or by the interference of foreign connections. We believe it is not so with those who surround Queen Victoria in this secure realm of constitutional freedom. There may be jealousies of over-reaching or distrustful state-manship between the Russian and the British Empires; diplomats and journalists, on each side, may carry on a paper warfare for a barren controversial victory, or with a remote prevision of more serious conflicts. But when Dagmar, or Maria Feodorovna, as she is now named, the wife of the Czar's son and heir, comes to see her sister Alexandra, the wife of him who is born to inherit the crown of Great Britain, these ladies are just as free to love each other as any other pair of sisters. They may chat about their husbands and children, their papa and mamma in Denmark, and the members of both the august Sovereign houses into which they are adopted by marriage. All that they have to say will be good and true and kind, like themselves; womanly as their sweet faces and manners, which we have so often beheld with pleasure, and which will be recognised, in our Engraving, by the readers of this Journal. The Grand Duchesses and Czarévna, Princess Maria Feodorovna, formerly named Maria Sophia Frederica Dagmar, fourth child of King Christian IX. of Denmark, was born Nov. 26, 1847, and is three years younger than the Princess of Wales. She was married to the Imperial Prince and Grand Duke Alexander, Czarévitch of Russia, Nov. 9, 1866; and she has two children, boys, four and five years old.

"AN INVALID."

This drawing, by a very promising young painter—Mr. E. F. Brewtall—which we have engraved from the Water-Colour Room of the late Exhibition of the Royal Academy, may be considered not unseasonable; though "the season," in the fashionable sense, is already dead as the latest leaf of autumn. "All the world is away," "Everybody is at the seaside," are now the observations of the few loiterers who, in reciprocated wonder, more or less genuine, chance to meet in the West-End. No account can, of course, be taken of the toiling millions of "nobodies" who form no part of the migratory "world" to which we allude. To those millions Cornhill and Shoreditch and Whitechapel are very much the same in or out of the "season"; nevertheless, at this moment Pall-mall and Bond-street and "the Row" are certainly deserts compared to what they were. For various periods, from "three hours" to several months, countless myriads of the teeming population of London and other of our chief cities are visiting, or will visit, the watering-places which literally fringe our sea-girt isle. Many may go for mere fashion's sake; many more for rest from labour and care, and to recruit exhausted energies; while not a few go in the hope, desperate it may be, to recover the priceless boon of health. In this drawing the artist, with much taste and pathetic suggestiveness, represents, we will suppose, one such case. The scene is a garden overlooking some pretty bay of, say, our undulating southern coast or the lovely Isle of Wight. A sick and delicate girl, too infirm to walk, is wheeled in an invalid-chair to an opening amongst the fragrant shrubs and climbers and flowers, where she may drink refreshment from whatever air is wafted from the calm sea, and where her eye may repose on the placid waters, the softly-gliding boats, and the serene evening sky. The self-effacing consideration and sympathy of true affection are indicated in every position and expression of her attendants. A stalwart young fellow, brother or lover, himself full of robust strength and health, has wheeled her there, and now stands aside not to disturb her enjoyment of the view, yet with an air of anxious solicitude. A sister, gentle and retiring, leans on the back of her chair; an elder female, her mother perhaps, sits behind, pensive yet watchful and alert; and all are hushed in silence. An invalid could have no better conditions for recovery; and should not such loving heedfulness be rewarded?

The Belgian Jockey Club has resolved to request the Count of Flanders to become its president, and to celebrate on the 29th of next month by races at Spa the centenary of the introduction on the Continent of horse-racing after the English manner, which took place at Spa in 1773.

An earthquake is reported to have occurred at Valparaiso on the morning of July 8. The shocks, of which there were five or six, exceeded in intensity those felt in 1867. Many families passed the night in the streets. The damage inside the houses was very great in the public as well as private edifices, and many people suffered fractures and contusions. The statue lately put up in memory of Lord Cochrane was turned half round on its pedestal. The shocks were felt over an extensive area.

According to a notice recently issued from the General Post Office, the next mails for Australia and New Zealand will be dispatched from London, via Southampton, on the morning of Thursday, the 28th inst., and via Brindisi on the evening of Friday, Sept. 5.—Another circular, dated Aug. 6, says:—"An alteration having taken place in the arrangements for the mail service to Constantinople, via Austria, notice is given that for the present mails for that place will be made up in London only twice in each week (instead of three times)—viz., on every Tuesday and Friday evening. Supplementary mails will be dispatched on the mornings of Wednesday and Saturday, on the chance of their arriving in Vienna in time."

FINE ARTS.

The exhibition of the pictures and drawings selected by the subscribers to the Art-Union of London who have won prizes during the current year is now open at the Gallery of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, 53, Pall-mall. The prizes include ninety-seven oil paintings and thirty-two water-colour drawings, the principal of which have been selected from the exhibitions of the Royal Academy, the Society of British Artists, the New British Institution, and the Old Water-Colour Society. The average merit of the collection is perhaps somewhat superior to that of former years, though an improved selection is still much to be desired. The annual income of the Art-Union of London is over £10,000; it is therefore an important artistic agency, and it has done much to diffuse a taste for art by the engravings which it has produced. But the large sum set aside for the purchase of prizes would be more satisfactorily expended if many of the prizeholders procured the assistance of an artist when making their choice, or intrusted the selection to the council of the Art-Union. The following works represent the principal prizes:—"The Monks' Walk," by J. C. Thom (the first prize of £200), "Gretchen Leaving Church," R. Thorburn (£150); "In the Lledr Valley, North Wales" (159), J. Syer; "Baron Munchausen Relating his Adventures," R. Hillingford (£150); "Early Morning Effect on Ben Nevis," H. Brittan Willis (£150); "The Ballad," J. J. Hill (£150). Other works deserve mention for their merit, particularly "The Tamar at Ennsleigh," by A. B. Collier; "Emissaries of the Long Parliament Searching a Royalist's House," by E. Opie; "Folkestone Beach—November," J. Sampson; and those by Messrs. Redgrave, J. Danby, J. Peel, J. O'Connor, J. B. Smith, G. C. Stanfield, the late G. Shalders, &c.

The peculiar dimness in patches which has long injured the effect of Mr. Macleise's large wall-painting of the "Meeting of Wellington and Blücher at Waterloo" in the Royal Gallery of the Westminster Palace, has been for some time past becoming very visible on the companion picture of "The Death of Nelson." Opinions differ as to the causes and nature of the decay or injurious effect; but it is generally believed to be an efflorescence caused by atmospheric changes acting on the surface of the pictures, or by damp penetrating through the plaster and intonaco from the back. The mischief showed itself during Mr. Macleise's lifetime in the Waterloo picture, and he believed it to arise from a too free application of the water-glass solution in the process of "fixing" the picture. Much less of the solution was, we know, used in the other and more recently painted Nelson picture; yet the evil is becoming equally apparent. Moreover, a similar "efflorescence" is showing itself on Mr. Herbert's painting, in the Peers' Robing-Room, of "Moses Bringing Down the Tables of the Law from Mount Sinai," although this picture was said to be effectually cut off from the wall and a less porous intonaco was spread to receive the colours. Mr. Dyce's true fresco in the Queen's Robing-Room, seen after the reparations by Mr. Cope, to promise to be more permanent than the water-glass paintings, notwithstanding the claim of indestructibility made in favour of the latter. We think it probable that the efflorescence may be detached without bringing the underlying colours with it.

A memorandum issued by the Science and Art Department connected with the South Kensington Museum states that the examination of students' works from night classes for drawing and from schools of art, submitted in competition for payments and prizes, has just been concluded; that 76,943 works have been received from night classes and 93,672 from schools of art, making a total of 170,615, which is an increase over 1872 of 41,566 works. It is also stated that the prize works, together with as many of the other competing works as space could be found for, will be exhibited there until September.

Communications have taken place between the Government and the trustees of the British Museum with respect to a proposal to transfer the control of the South Kensington Museum to the latter. No change, however, has yet been made.

Sir George Gilbert Scott has made public a suggestion to restore the ancient Church of St. Mary Overy, now known as "St. Saviour's, Southwark," as a memorial to the late Bishop of Winchester. The church is situated within the southern portion of the metropolis, which belongs to that diocese. It is in scale the third in London, coming next in importance to Westminster Abbey. The church has been ruined by the destruction of the ancient nave. It now consists of the "conspicuous" modern nave, "pretty much like an average church in a watering-place of forty years old, attached to a transept, choir, and lady chapel almost on a cathedral scale, both in size and beauty." Sir George suggests that "this vile nave shall be rebuilt according to the ancient designs, the ancient choir fitted up as that of a great collegiate church, and the whole dealt with as the mother church and quasi-cathedral of London south of the Thames." The ancient design of the lost nave has just been traced out by Mr. Frederick Dollman; and little, if anything, is left to conjecture. The appropriateness of the restoration as the proposed memorial is "enhanced by the fact that the London palace of the Bishops of Winchester stood in close proximity to this church, the remains of its noble hall having been destroyed only within the last few years."

Mr. Mitchell, of Old Bond-street, has published an engraving from the excellent portrait of the late Bishop of Winchester executed by Mr. Richmond, R.A.

Mr. W. Bradford, the celebrated American painter of Arctic subjects, some of whose works are already known and highly esteemed on this side the Atlantic, has lately brought over from New York about a dozen of his pictures of the Polar region, and we trust that they will shortly be exhibited.

The Vernon collection of pictures, which was presented to the nation in 1847 by Mr. Robert Vernon, will shortly be removed from the South Kensington Museum to the new wing of the National Gallery, Trafalgar-square.

The Civil Service Gazette states that, by the courtesy of the British Museum authorities, visitors from the country and abroad, whose stay in town is brief, are allowed to view the collections on days when the museum is closed to the public.

The Town Council of Liverpool has had under discussion a proposal for the erection of a Fine-Art Gallery, at a cost of £15,000, the money to be provided by the ratepayers under the Free Libraries Act.

On dit that a very fine portrait of some savant by Holbein has been discovered at St. Petersburg.

A second picture by Gentile da Fabriano has been acquired for the Louvre.

Galignani states that the painter Winterhalter has left a fortune of four million francs.

Rinaldo Rinaldi, sculptor, died on the 23th ult., at the age of eighty. He was a pupil of Canova.

We have received a set of photographs (published by Marion and Co., Soho-square) from landscape drawings by the late G. Wallwyn Shepherd. Some of them are suitable studies for amateurs who desire to acquire dexterity in pencil drawing.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

It is as yet almost too early to say whether the general rumours of the great scarcity of grouse are correct or not. Comparatively few sportsmen were out on "the twelfth," and from the number of dead birds which have recently been found we fear that the season will not be a brilliant one. Reports from Perthshire and Forfarshire are decidedly gloomy; but in the north birds seem more plentiful.

Lord Coventry has given notice that at the next general meeting of the Jockey Club, which will take place at Newmarket during the First October Meeting, he will move "that, on and after Jan. 1, 1784, no horse of the age of three years old and upwards shall run in any race which is of a shorter distance than one mile." The result of this motion will be watched with great interest by all racing men, and we cannot doubt that it will be rejected by a large majority. It seems altogether too sweeping a measure. The immediate effect of it would be to abolish all "fly" races, like the Spencer Plate at Northampton, the Stewards Cup at Goodwood, the Portland Plate at Doncaster, and the Great Eastern Railway Handicap at Newmarket. Then the interesting races in which two-year-olds are pitted against older horses—such as the Fernhill Stakes at Ascot, the County Cup at Lewes, &c.—would be done away with, and speedy animals like Blenheim, Visor, Chopette, and Tangible, who cannot stay a mile, and yet have a terrific turn of speed over a short course, would, like Othello, find their "occupation gone." No one will dispute that there should be more races over a distance of ground than there are at present; but we think that the disease does not call for such a "root and branch" remedy as Lord Coventry proposes.

The racing on the Brighton Club day was not particularly interesting. Lemnos, in spite of a 12 lb. penalty, had no trouble in beating four very moderate opponents; and in another race for juveniles Selsea Bill carried 11 lb. over weight, and merely started to enable him to claim a maiden allowance at Lewes. There is no doubt that his owner had a perfect right to do this, and, moreover, did it in an open manner, which prevented anyone losing money on the horse; still, the affair occasioned some comment, and is likely to lead to the abolition of allowances to beaten horses, a system which is unquestionably open to much abuse. Two capital days' sport at Lewes wound up the Sussex fortnight in brilliant fashion. The performance of Winslow in securing the Lewes Handicap under 9 st. 2 lb. was unquestionably the greatest achievement of the year. It is now clear that, but for meeting with an accident on the eve of the race, Winslow would have been a most dangerous opponent of Cremorne in last year's Derby, and he is by far the best Lord Clifden we have yet seen, as, though Hawthornden and Wenlock both won the St. Leger, the former beat perhaps the worst field that ever contested that race, and the latter was exceptionally fortunate in not having to meet any of the placed horses in the Derby. To secure the Royal Hunt Cup and the Lewes Handicap, carrying the top weight in each race, is a feat almost unrivalled in the annals of handicaps, and proves Winslow to be possessed of a wonderful combination of speed and stamina; and a contest between him and Prince Charlie over a mile or a mile and a quarter would excite a wonderful amount of interest. Uhlan fairly walked in for the Queen's Plate, though it is now clear that, had Winslow started for the Brighton Cup, it would not adorn Mr. Savile's sideboard; and the County Cup produced one of the most exciting struggles ever seen. There was not a length between the four runners at the finish, and, in spite of his penalty, The Colonel won cleverly by a neck, making us wonder what sort of a horse Hochstapler is over a short course. Thunder, who was backed against the field, finished last; but he got off badly, and, moreover, was disappointed in the race.

Cricketers have been unusually busy during the last few days, and we can only touch very briefly on the various matches that have taken place. The M. C. C. v. Kent (twelve a side) was the second match of the Canterbury week, and resulted in a victory for the former by nine wickets. Mr. W. G. Grace (not out, 57) made the best individual score. As usual, the campaign was terminated by a contest between the I Zingari and Gentlemen of Kent (also twelve a side), which was drawn greatly in favour of the "Wanderers," for whom Mr. C. Marriott made 82. The match between Nottingham and Sussex promised to be an exciting one, as in their first innings the latter eleven nearly equalled the score of their formidable opponents; their second attempt, however, was very feeble, and Notts, thanks to a fine 84 by Oseroff and the bowling of Morley, which proved fatal to ten of the Sussex men, won by nine wickets. This week Yorkshire achieved a victory over Surrey by precisely the same number of wickets. For the losers Jupp contributed 23 and 54 in his usual finished style, and there were two or three other fair scores; but Hill's bowling was very deadly, and Thewlis (50) and Rowbotham (113) helped to run up a very large score for the "county of many acres."

If Prince Batthyany's green jacket is noted for its misfortunes on the turf, his ill-luck does not stick to him in another branch of sport, for last week his yacht, the Kriemhilda, won the Queen's Cup, the Town Cup, and another valuable prize at the Royal Yacht Squadron Regatta. She thus won all she started for, and accomplished a feat unparalleled in the history of the R. Y. S. At the Royal Victoria Yacht Club Regatta the Corisande won the chief prize, and the Vice-Commodore's Cup was secured by the Pantomime.

On Monday last the banks of the Tyne were thronged with spectators to witness the great open boat-race between Henry Kelley and Robert Bagnall. It will be remembered that about three weeks ago the former beat James Taylor very easily in similar boats, yet, notwithstanding this, the confidence of Bagnall's supporters was so great that they laid 7 to 4 and 2 to 1 on him very freely. The course was, as usual, from the High Level Bridge to Scotswood Suspension Bridge, and after a desperate race for two miles Bagnall, who is seventeen years younger than Kelley, and has never been defeated, won easily by four lengths. It is expected that he will shortly challenge J. H. Sadler for the championship.

The barracks occupied by the 21st Regiment at Ayr were, on Saturday, almost wholly destroyed by fire.

A new cattle market, the gift of the Earl of Carnarvon, was opened last week at Dilverton, West Somersetshire, close to the newly-constructed Devon and Somerset Railway.

According to the terms of the Act fixing an additional £10,000 a year on his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh and £6000 a year on his widow, the annuity is to commence on the date of the marriage, and is to be "free from all taxes."

The national conference of spiritualists, which was held at Liverpool last week, was brought to a close on Thursday, when the following subjects were discussed:—"The peculiar temperament of different mediums;" "The arrangements of different mediums in a given circle for the production of the desired results;" "The quality of mediums;" "Can any tests be applied to distinguish genuine mediums?" "The best method of developing mediums;" and "The utility of private circles." In the evening a conversazione was held.

LAW AND POLICE.

Mr. J. F. Collier, brother of Sir R. Collier, and Recorder of Poole, has been appointed Judge of the Liverpool County Court, in place of Mr. Serjeant Wheeler, who goes to the Marylebone court.

According to a return recently issued the fees received in the year ended March 31 in the three Common Law Courts were £80,344 4s., and the expenditure in salaries, &c., £93,293 8s. 5d., showing an excess of £12,949 4s. 5d. over the income.

Lord Chief Justice Bovill began, on Tuesday, the long vacation sittings at the Judges' Chambers, and will sit on Tuesday and Friday in each week until relieved by Mr. Justice Honyman, the "long vacation" Judge, on his return from circuit. Mr. Church, the chief clerk at the Rolls, will also sit twice in each week to take the Chancery "vacation business."

Mrs. Preston, the widow of a railway porter at the Camden station, who was killed while coupling some waggons of a goods-train, has sued the London and North-Western Railway Company for damages. A special jury sitting at the Croydon Assizes awarded her £350.—A Congregational minister, the Rev. George Onions, has obtained at the Leeds Assizes £200 damages against the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company for an accident caused to his wife through the sudden starting of a train before she could leave the carriage.—An action, brought by Mr. Williams, of Newport, against the Great Western Railway Company, for injuries received in a collision last November, resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, damages £220.

Two actions for breach of promise of marriage were tried at the Manchester Assizes on Monday. In the first case Lucy Ann Haworth, of Tottington, near Bury, was the plaintiff, and Mr. Henry Roberts, son of a millowner in Tottington, was the defendant. Defendant denied the promise to marry, in the breach of which the action was brought to recover damages, and also pleaded that the agreement to marry had been rescinded by mutual consent. The jury, after a short consultation, returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and awarded £300 damages. In the second case Elizabeth Ann Martindale, daughter of Mr. Henry Carter Martindale, salesman, Reece House, New Hey, near Rochdale, sued John Allin, master of the Raikes National School, near Tatley Bridge, Yorkshire. The defendant pleaded that he did not agree to marry plaintiff, as alleged; and that before the alleged breach plaintiff absolved him from his agreement. The jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff, damages £240.—In an action for breach of promise brought, at the Leeds Assizes, yesterday week, by Miss Grimshaw, the daughter of a builder and contractor residing near Oldham, against Mr. Samuel Johnson, cotton-spinner, Failsworth, a verdict for £150 was given by consent.—The case of "Davis v. Emmanuel" came on at Gloucester Assizes on Wednesday afternoon. Both parties live in Birmingham, plaintiff's father being a merchant. The defendant having refused to fulfil a previous promise of marriage, plaintiff's father, before the renewal of the engagement, required the defendant to enter into a bond to fulfil his promise. This, however, he violated, and hence this action was brought. The plaintiff is twenty-two years of age, and the defendant a widower aged thirty-five. A verdict was taken by consent for £1600, and all reflections on plaintiff's family were withdrawn.

Damages one farthing, with a refusal on the part of the Judge to certify for costs, were obtained by Miss Estelle Emrich, a vocalist, in an action brought by her against Mr. Pede, lessee and manager of the Alexandra Theatre, Camden Town, for alleged wrongful dismissal.

The captain of the Nestor, an Antwerp trader, has been sued, at the Lord Mayor's Court, for damage done to eighty-six casks of rolled zinc, through careless unloading. The plaintiff wished to check a pernicious system of rough handling of goods which had sprung up among ship captains. Judgment was given for the full amount claimed.

During the trial, yesterday week, of the Tichborne Claimant for perjury Dr. Kenealy was proceeding with his depreciation of the defendant's intellect, when the Lord Chief Justice alluded to his cross-examination as a proof of striking intellectual capacity, and intimated a belief that he had beaten Sir John Coleridge. After speculating for some time on the possibility of one forgetting his native tongue, Dr. Kenealy suddenly reverted to the tattoo marks, alleging that it was evident Sir John Coleridge had not been originally instructed with respect to them. Mr. Hawkins interposed with a sharp denial of this assertion, adding that he knew Sir John had been instructed. Dr. Kenealy retorted by telling the jury not to pay any attention to that disgraceful statement of Mr. Hawkins. The Court required him to let the matter drop, but he reiterated his assertion in the modified form of a "logical inference." On the mention of the Pittendreich letters, the Lord Chief Justice observed that two letters of the series were undoubtedly the defendant's, and two were doubtful. In the course of his speech Dr. Kenealy intimated that he was to produce one of the crew of the Osprey to corroborate the Claimant's story that he was picked up, along with other survivors, from the wreck of the Bella.—The ground traversed by Dr. Kenealy on Monday comprised instances of men forgetting languages they had learned in youth; the reluctance of the defendant to disclose the contents of the sealed packet; the possibility of Roger Tichborne having visited Melapilla; and the existence of a Wymering and a Hermitage property in the family. A slight repetition of Mr. Hawkins's protest as to the instructions given to counsel on the first trial was provoked by Dr. Kenealy's attempt to prove that the prosecution had no knowledge of the tattoo marks until June 5, 1871. This was soon obliterated by a sharp rencontre which ensued between Dr. Kenealy and two of the Judges. He spoke of M. Chatillon as a valet, whereupon the Lord Chief Justice called it an improper observation. The learned counsel defended it, and Mr. Justice Mellor threw in a remark which elicited from Dr. Kenealy the retort that he knew a gentleman's conduct as well as his Lordship. The scene did not terminate till the Lord Chief Justice had reiterated his censure of the term applied to Chatillon. Just before the adjournment a jurymen asked Dr. Kenealy when he was likely to finish, and the Doctor said he could not tell; whereupon another jurymen stated that he was very ill, and was sitting there at a great inconvenience and at a loss of £20 a week.—In course of a very quiet day's work on Tuesday, Dr. Kenealy reviewed the defendant's cross-examination as to the accident at Pornic, his mistaking Mr. Burdon for old Mr. Nangle, his "Catholic" refusal to mention the name of his confessors, and his account of his education at Stonyhurst. Reverting to the Attorney-General's instructions (which the Lord Chief Justice suggested should be spoken of as "incorrect" rather than as "untrue"), Dr. Kenealy contended that some allowance should be made for his client in being examined on such instructions. In criticising the Stonyhurst curriculum he questioned if Roger had ever got further than the Greek alphabet or the first problem in Euclid. As a proof of his meagre knowledge of Latin, it was affirmed that a Latin word did not occur in the whole of Roger's correspondence from beginning to end.—After premising that he hoped to conclude on Friday, or, at latest, on Monday next, Dr. Kenealy devoted the whole of Wednesday to an analysis of the evidence respecting the tattoo marks. He alleged that there were many discrepancies in the accounts of the various witnesses, that none of them would bind themselves to dates, and that other witnesses had not been called who ought to have known about the marks had they really existed. To save the bona fides of persons whom he would not accuse of giving false evidence, he suggested a theory that the marks had not been tattooed at all, but only pencilled or done with chalk. Roger's doing this and showing the sham tattoos to his friends was, Dr. Kenealy held, quite consistent with his taste for practical joking. The Lord Chief Justice and one or two of the jurors interposed difficulties in the way of such an explanation, but the learned counsel argued it out elaborately. He would not undertake, however, to account for Jeremiah Healey's statement that he had seen Roger wash his hands without washing out the marks.—On Thursday the learned counsel, commenting on the cross-examination, described some part of it as a storm in a teapot, others as miserable, contemptible stuff, which he should have been ashamed to puzzle the "poor wretch" about, or to submit to the jury. Dr. Kenealy urged that the defendant should not be treated as an ordinary class of man who can remember incidents and dates, and that great allowances ought to be made for him. Referring to the defendant's correspondence with Don Pedro Castro and others in Chili, on the question of identity and the lock of hair, he said it seemed to him to be downright insanity; and, being unable to offer any explanation, he left the matter entirely to the jury. It was one of these riddles which would probably never be solved, and the reason he said so was that he would demonstrate to them by evidence as clear almost as a problem in Euclid, that this man was not Arthur Orton. After some remarks respecting a cheque which the defendant said he gave to the captain of the Osprey, on landing at Melbourne, the Court adjourned.

The August Middlesex Sessions opened, on Monday, with a light calendar, comprising only fifty-five offences.

Alfred Edwards, formerly freight cashier to Messrs. Bravo and Co., of Great Winchester-street-buildings, has been committed for trial on a charge of misappropriating a number of cheques which he ought to have paid into the Bank.

The Treasury has declined to prosecute Ellen Denny for unlawful possession of the box containing Greek fire and phosphorus, which caused so much injury to various persons in Seneca Town. The prisoner was accordingly discharged.—A sweep, named Thomas, who was injured by the explosion of Greek fire in the possession of the woman Denny, applied to the magistrate at Clerkenwell for relief from the poor-box; and Mr. Cooke, having caused inquiries to be made, directed that the man should receive £2.

An attempt on the part of William Lyng to obtain a situation by means of a false character was frustrated by the shrewdness of the gentleman on whom the trick was tried. The defendant pleaded guilty, and was sentenced by Mr. Knox to pay a fine of £2, or go to prison for three months.

Burglaries appear to have become epidemic in the Worship-street police district. On Monday the magistrate had before him two very flagrant offenders, who had adopted rather violent means of ingress, cutting out windows and breaking down doors. Both were committed to Newgate.

The Rector of Bethnal-green and his friend the Bishop of Sierra Leone have had to complain at Worship-street of the conduct of a parishioner. The offender, Edward Crispin, was passing in a cart, when he stood up and harangued them in the most uncomplimentary terms. The magistrate would not accept his mitigating plea of drunkenness, but fined him 20s., or fourteen days imprisonment.

The juvenile offence of throwing stones at railway trains has broken out at Deptford. Two boys of fourteen, who were caught in the act of stoning an express on the London and Brighton line, have been fined 20s., with the alternative of a fortnight's imprisonment.

After the fête of the Police Orphanage in the Crystal Palace, a few days ago, a policeman was attacked and stabbed in five or six places by a man unknown.

Several coffee-dealers have been summoned by the officer of health of St. George's, Hanover-square, for selling adulterated coffee. The defence was that pure coffee could not be sold at the price they charged (1s. 4d. and 1s. 5d.), also that the fact of its being a mixture was marked on the packet.—Mr. Woolrych, in fining them, observed that the intimation of its being mixed was no legal excuse, as when pure coffee was asked for it should have been supplied.

The ex-Confederate officer styling himself Colonel Williamson has been committed without bail for endeavouring to extort money from Mr. Rosenbaum, whom he so annoyed by sending persons to him in search of situations.

A youth, who was brought before the Lambeth police magistrate for doing damage to the iron railings of the Albert Embankment, has got the benefit of their being as yet no by-laws in operation for the protection of that important piece of public property. The Metropolitan Board of Works was informed that it had only a civil remedy against the delinquent.

Shocking neglect of an infant seven months old, leading to the child's death, was charged, on Tuesday, against a man and his wife, the parents of the deceased, both of whom are employed by market gardeners, and earn between them something over five shillings a day. The magistrate, Mr. Ingham, of Hammersmith, committed the two defendants for trial.

The landlord of a beerhouse at Notting-hill has been fined ten shillings, at Hammersmith, for supplying a police-constable on duty with a bottle of ginger-beer.

A letter-carrier, named Benjamin Thomas, was committed for trial, at the Bow-street Police Court, on Wednesday, on three charges for stealing letters containing money.

Two milk-sellers were prosecuted on Tuesday, at the Thames Police Court, for selling milk containing a large quantity of water. In each case a penalty of 40s. and 23s. costs, or fourteen days' imprisonment, was imposed, and one of the defendants was locked up in default of payment.

Penalties to the extent of £900 have been inflicted by the Falmouth magistrates on seven Spanish and two Greek seamen belonging to the Spanish brig Panchila Rosa, of Barcelona, now lying in Falmouth harbour, for concealing 152 lb. of tobacco and 1½ lb. of cigars. The men have been sent to gaol for six months each, in default of paying the fines.

Four boys, having pleaded guilty, at the Leeds Assizes, to placing trolley-wheels on the Doncaster branch of the Great Northern Railway, have been sentenced each to a fortnight's hard labour, the Judge remarking that any future case of the kind would be more severely dealt with.

Six persons have been summoned at Clerkenwell, on the charge of Sunday trading, and fined five shillings each and costs.

Samuel Joseph Phillipson, a bankrupt money-scriver, has been convicted of the theft of upwards of £1000 from various building societies in Manchester, of which he was secretary, and sentenced to ten years' penal servitude.

The prisoners Coady and Edwards, who had been found guilty of destroying 40,000 bricks, the property of Mr. Forster, of Gorton, were each sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment, yesterday week, at the Leeds Assizes.

An exemplary sentence has been passed, at the Monmouth Assizes, upon five railway servants charged with stealing spirits in transit. Mr. Justice Denman declined to hear any testimonial of previous good character, and condemned them to nine months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

Mary Davis, the wife of a costermonger, residing in Cross-lane, St. Giles's, died in the infirmary of St. Pancras Work-house, on Monday, from injuries alleged to have been inflicted by her husband, who had beaten her with a poker.—At a farm near Reigate, a girl has been shot by a youth who was visiting her in the absence of her master and mistress. The prisoner's account of the sad affair is that the gun went off accidentally.—At the Somersetshire Assizes, on Tuesday, Ann Hawkins, aged sixty-four, was charged with the murder of David Dyer by striking him a blow with a mattock. She was found guilty of manslaughter, and was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment, without hard labour.—A young man living at Kingstown with his aunt has, in a fit of insanity, beaten her almost to death. He had recently entered upon possession of his property, having come of age; but this had scarcely occurred when his mind became unsettled, and, as it appears, he has gone raving mad.—A case of murder and incendiarism has occurred near Derry. A woman was found in her own cottage with her throat cut. The cottage had also been robbed, and one account says that an attempt had been made to burn it.—A verdict of wilful murder has been returned against James Wigley, of Surbiton, by the Coroner's jury, at the inquest on the death of Deborah Wigley, wife of the accused.—Uriah Baunton was on Tuesday tried for the wilful murder of his wife, at Stoke Trister, a village near Wincanton. The prisoner was a butcher, and had been married to the deceased only fifteen months. They frequently quarrelled. The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter, and the prisoner was sentenced to ten years' penal servitude.—At the Wells Assizes, on Wednesday, Edward Abbott, a contracting mason, was indicted for the wilful murder of his daughter Maria, aged three years, by cutting her throat at Knowle, and also for attempting self-destruction immediately afterwards. The deceased was his favourite child. The defence was that of insanity, and it was proved that the malady had existed in the family, and that the prisoner had once thrown himself into the Thames. Medical evidence was also given that the recent sudden and eccentric change in his conduct indicated insanity. He was, however, found guilty, and sentenced to death by Mr. Fitzjames Stephen, Q.C. The culprit protested his innocence, and alleged perjury on the part of the witnesses.—A jury at Liverpool, on Wednesday, returned a verdict of wilful murder against James Connor, for having caused the death of James Ganney by stabbing him in the neck.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

According to a list issued by the National Rifle Association, prizes of the value of between £200 and £300, won at the late Wimbledon meeting, remained unclaimed. Some of them—namely, one of £50 in the Alexandra, one of £30 in the Carlton contest, one of £15, and several of £10—are good round sums. In the Queen's prize contest the sum remaining unclaimed is £10 13s. 8d.; in the Alexandra, £61 13s. 6d.; in the Windmill, 200 yards, £9 7s. 6d.; Windmill, 500 yards, £19 2s.; Daily Telegraph, £4 7s. 3d.; the Eley, £10 5s.; Secretary of State for War, £12 6s.; Permanent Staff Sergeants, £1 15s.; Abingdon Works, £1 5s.; Curtis and Harvey, 17s. 4d.; Prince of Wales's, £1 8s. 6d.; Belgian Cup, volley, £15; Bass, £2 13s. 4d.; Snider Nursery, £1; Alfred, £1 17s.; Consolation, £2 19s.; Cartons, any rifle, £5; 600, central, £30; 600, greatest number, £10; 800, greatest number, £5; Snider, 200, greatest number, £25; 500, greatest number, £16 5s.; 600, greatest number, £6 13s. 4d.; and officers' prizes, £5.

In a report by the Commander-in-Chief to the Secretary of State for War, in reference to the field day of the volunteers at Wimbledon, on July 19, his Royal Highness speaks favourably of all that came under his notice, and says he was much struck by the great improvement in the drill of the men and in the intelligence of the officers.

A number of officers of the 2nd Tower Hamlets Volunteer Engineers, Italian volunteer officers, and other friends, met at Graard Lodge, Rochampton, on Saturday, for the purpose of presenting Mrs. Croll, wife of the hon. Colonel of the regiment, with a life-size portrait of her husband, in oils, and an address. The presentation was made by Lieutenant-Colonel Comyn, acting Colonel, and General Ricciotti Garibaldi.

The annual meeting of the Essex Rifle Association, of which Lord Braybrooke is president, has been held at Chelmsford; and on Tuesday his Lordship inaugurated a new range by firing the first shot and making a bull's-eye. On Thursday Lady Braybrooke distributed the prizes.

The Warwickshire volunteer prize-shooting meeting terminated on Tuesday night. Lord Leigh's challenge cup and £5 were won by Sergeant Bruce, Stratford-on-Avon. Sergeant Black, Nuneaton, took the second prize, £4. The volunteers defeated the yeomanry in a match for £20, at 200 yards, the scores being 87 and 76. The yeomanry regimental prize, £3, was won by Private King, Corporal Griffin taking the second, £5. The company challenge bugle and £20 were again gained by the 1st Coventry corps, Stratford taking the second prize, £5. Sir Robert Hamilton presented the prizes to the winners.

A model of the Elcho challenge shield was presented to the Lord Mayor of Dublin on Thursday week, in lieu of the original, which is at present on exhibition at Vienna.

The annual competitions of the Linlithgow and Dumbarton Rifle Associations were held last Saturday.

The Board of Trade returns show a slight falling off in the exports for last month compared with July, 1872, but an increase of £5,000,000 in imports.

York has been fixed upon as the city in which the banquet of the provincial Mayors to the Lord Mayor of London will take place.

Mr. Mundella addressed a large meeting of his constituents at Sheffield on Monday night. In the course of a long speech, he expressed his satisfaction that Mr. Bright had joined the Cabinet, as he thought that the right hon. gentleman would improve it. Household suffrage in counties and the redistribution of seats would, he thought, be the principal questions agitated at the next general election.

VIENNA EXHIBITION: LOOKING AT THE MODEL OF JERUSALEM.

THE REV. G. T. PERKS, PRESIDENT OF THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CONFERENCE.

The Rev. G. T. Perks, M.A., was recently elected President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference. He has been placed in the Presidential Chair by a larger majority of the votes of his ministerial brethren than had been accorded to any President for many years past. Few Wesleyan ministers stand higher in the esteem of their brethren than the Rev. George T. Perks, who was born at Madeley, Salop, on Aug. 29, 1819. He was educated at private schools at Madeley and Wolverhampton; and, after he became a candidate for admission into the ranks of the Wesleyan ministry, he was sent to the Wesleyan Theological Institution at Hoxton, where he studied theology, classics, and mathematics. His character and abilities soon made way for him into the best circuits of Methodism, where he has laboured successfully as a preacher and pastor for many years. Mr. Perks has gone through a long course of official experience. He has been secretary of the Committee of Privileges, Secretary of the Didsbury and Richmond Theological Institutions, and Assistant Secretary to the Chapel Fund. In the year 1867 he was appointed to the Wesleyan Foreign Mission House, where he is now engaged. Mr. Perks has so applied himself to the history and condition of the Wesleyan Missionary Society that he is acquainted with the work of every missionary and the state of every missionary station belonging to Methodism. "The preaching of President Perks," observes a Wesleyan Methodist correspondent, "is distinctly theological; and the Wesleyan Church contains scarcely any preacher more doctrinal in his sermons. People who go to hear him are sure to have some doctrinal subject well and practically discussed." In his new position of President of the Conference the demeanour of Mr. Perks is calm, self-possessed, and unostentatious. He keeps the business well in hand, and its progress never flags. In this he is well seconded by the Secretary of the Conference, the Rev. Gervase Smith. This has been remarked while the Conference was in session at Newcastle. The portrait is from a photograph by Mr. James Cooper, of Northallerton.

ELECTRICAL APPARATUS FOR THE CLOCK-TOWER LIGHT, HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

LIGHT ON THE CLOCK TOWER, HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT AT THE HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

Few recent inventions of science are more remarkable than M. Gramme's electric light. Frequently during the past Session of Parliament its wonderful beam has been seen in mid-air, cast from the noble clock-tower of the New Palace at Westminster. This beautiful light, which shone conspicuously from its eyrie 260 ft. above the streets, illuminating them far and wide, was supplied by the electric current from a small machine requiring only 2½-horse power to drive it, which was placed, a distance of 390 yards from the tower, in the basement of the House of Lords.

The machine consists of three ring-bobbins, or armatures, rotating between the poles of two sets of electro-magnets, each of six, placed in a vertical position on each side. The magnets are about 18 in. high, and each set is made up of two triplets, placed one above the other, with gun-metal poles at the junction. The whole machine is 4 ft. high, and weighs about a ton. The distinguishing portion of the apparatus is the armature, which is a flat ring, wound round, in segments, with insulated copper wire; the result being that, as each segment passes the magnetic poles, the electricity is given off in an absolutely unintermittent current, with maximum effect, as the consecutive portions of the helices regularly come, in the act of rotation, within the influence of the north and south poles. The ends of the separate lengths of wire on the armature are brought down, like the spokes of a wheel, to insulated sectors placed axially on the spindle of the machine, whence the useful currents are taken off by metallic brushes for transmission to the lamp. In previous magneto-electric machines the revolutions have been as high as from 1000 to 2400 per minute; in this (Gramme's) machine 300 revolutions are ample, and the light produced is equal to from 7000 to 10,000 sperm candles.

One of our Illustrations is a view taken on the upper platform of the clock-tower from behind the lantern in which the electric light has been placed. It shows the interior of the temporary housing which protects the optical apparatus, and the general arrangements by which the light is intensified and is rendered independent in its regularity of any defects in the quality or continuance of the carbon points. The optical apparatus consists of a circular holophote, or combination of lenses and annular prisms, 21 in. in diameter, placed in front of the lamps, and in the exact focus of which the brilliant star of electric light is fixed. This holophote was made by Messrs. Chance, of Birmingham, whose skill in optical engineering gains for England the first repute in the world for the construction of lighthouses. Its purpose is to parallelise the rays emanating from the carbon points, and so to intensify the light in the form of a beam. When the Gramme light takes its permanent station in the clock-tower the holophote will be supplanted by one of Messrs. Chance's optical "beehives," by which the wonderful light will be spread out and around through an arc of 180 deg., and the streets below will then be lit up in a far more uniform and effective manner. Such apparatus is exceedingly costly; and the present apparatus, as a simple, effective, and cheap affair for experimental purposes, reflects great credit on the ingenuity of Mr. Conrad W. Cooke, of the firm of Wheildon and Cooke, by whom the machine was made, to the order of Mr. Werdermann, a proprietor of the English patent.

As seen in the Engraving, the holophote is fixed vertically to an elevating table, hinged at its front edge to a lower revolving table: it is elevated or depressed by a wheel and screw at the back. In this way the beam of light can be raised or lowered through different angles of altitude. Upon this elevating table two lamps, or "regulators," are placed. The reason for the lamps being in duplicate is this. As the carbon points only burn five hours, whilst the House of Commons frequently sits eight or ten, and as the extinguishing of the light is intended to be the signal that the House of Commons has broken up, no cessation of the light, even by accidental circumstances, could be tolerated. Two lamps are therefore placed side by side, upon little "trolleys," on a reciprocating platform, and are so arranged that when one lamp is out of use the other is brought into the focus of the holophote, and the electric communication with the machine and the light will instantly be re-established. The electric currents are carried through the apparatus by means of the bearings of metallic portions upon each other.

Few scenes can be conceived more singular or more beautiful than that from the Westminster clock-tower at night, beside the electric light. Far below, in the depth we look down into, the Thames flows darkly on, its surface chequered with scintillations from the reflection of innumerable gas-lamps. The shrouded forms of the neighbouring houses stand out dimly against the deep transparency of the purple sky; and, as the beam is moved slowly along, the Abbey and Cathedral, the palaces, the churches, the railway stations and bridges, and all the familiar buildings of London, are lit up vividly to sight, just as those of Charing-cross, with the National Gallery and the Nelson Column, are brought out in the view shown by our Illustration. As an instance of the power of this marvellous light, it may be observed that newspapers have been read by its rays in Trafalgar-square, and letters at a greater distance. It is possible that all our streets a few years hence may be nightly bathed in the glorious light of electricity, and the thousands of gas-lights may then be replaced by two or three magneto-electric points set high above the housetops of London.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CONFERENCE.

The Rev. Luke Wiseman delivered a charge to the newly-ordained Wesleyan ministers at Newcastle-on-Tyne last week, which seems to be regarded as an answer to the Bishop of Lincoln's pastoral charging the Methodists with schism, and inviting them to return to the Church. Mr. Wiseman denounced the doctrine of the indelibility of orders, declared that ordination is not a sacrament, and denied that episcopacy is of Divine institution, although it may under some circumstances be a commendable form of Church government. He would not admit that the Methodists have departed from the spirit of Wesley's teaching.

The report of the Children's Home announcing the safe arrival of the first party of fifty children in Canada, and the donation of £5000 to the home by Alderman Barrow of Bolton, was read on Thursday week. Reports of the Wesley College, Sheffield, and of the college at Taunton were also read.

A resolution was passed, yesterday week, rescinding the articles of union hitherto subsisting between the Connexion in Great Britain and the Conferences in Canada and Eastern British America respectively, and granting to those conferences the right to conclude such arrangements for their own consolidation into one body, and for their entering into union with other Methodist bodies, as should be in accordance with the doctrines of Methodism set forth by John Wesley, and with a system of discipline which, while adapted to the altered circumstances of Canadian Methodism, should observe the fundamental principles of the Connexional form of government. This concession was the result of mutual arrangement, and it was explained by the Rev. A. M'Anlay that the independence to be granted was not hostility but freedom to do still greater good in developing new schemes and plans of evangelisation.

On Sunday many of the pulpits in the neighbourhood of Newcastle-on-Tyne were occupied by ministers attending the Conference, among the number the Rev. Signor Sciarrelli, the converted friar from Rome, who conducted an interesting service in the afternoon at the Fawcett-street Chapel, Sunderland. The Rev. W. Jones, of Naples, acted as interpreter. Large open-air meetings were held both in Newcastle and Sunderland, which were addressed by some of the prominent men of the Connexion.

At the sitting of the Conference on Monday the Rev. Luke Wiseman presented the report of the committee which had been appointed to consider the whole question of primary education. Having been printed, it was taken as read and received. The Rev. H. W. Holland then moved the resolution of which he had given notice, to the effect that no settlement of the education question would be satisfactory that did not include the repeal of clause 25 and the placing of school board schools within reach of every child. The resolution was passed unanimously.

The thanks of the Conference have been presented to the following gentlemen for gift of trust property:—Mr. Thomas Hazleworth, for school-room, worth £1000, in Runcorn Circuit; Mr. Savage, for property worth £1500, in Spalding Circuit; Mr. Overy, for property worth £700, in Stapleton Circuit; Mr. Stoff, for minister's house, with land worth £1900, in Haslingdean.

A scheme for the establishment of a high-class school at Cambridge under Methodist management was adopted on Wednesday. A proposal to erect an hotel in the same town for the accommodation of non-collegiate members of the University connected with the Methodist body was rejected.

The Wesleyan Methodist Society numbers at present 348,580 members.

A goods-train from Exeter to North Devon got off the line on Tuesday, while passing along the bridge over the river Exe, and the engine rolled over on its side into the river, taking with it the tender and two vans.

Circulars were issued on Tuesday calling a special meeting of the executive committee of the National Education League, for the purpose of considering the future electoral policy of the league, in view of the recent changes in the Ministry.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-
GUINIA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case, Five Octaves, and Two Foot-Boards.
The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured.
The instruments now offered to the public will be found distinct from all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This and has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and organ-like.
Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.
The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect and without extra cost.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

RECOMMENDED BY ALL THE PROFESSORS.
THE DIGITORIO (a small Dumb
Piano-Patent).—This remarkable invention materially assists any person to play and become perfect on the Pianoforte, Organ, or Harmonium, by strengthening and rendering the fingers independent in an incredibly short time; and, as now had (price 1s. 6d. for ivory keys, 1s. 1d. for the sole Mahogany).

DURING THE SIEGE of PARIS the difficulties experienced in England and elsewhere in procuring the celebrated CHARBON DE BELLOC (Belloc's Vegetable Charcoal Powder and Lozenges) have caused innumerable imitations of this old and valuable medicine, on account of its immense sale.
Having analysed most of these imitations, I hereby certify that all of them differ entirely from my own productions as much in quality as in the mode of preparation.
BELLOC'S CHARCOAL (Charbon de Belloc) was approved by the Academy of Medicine of Paris in 1869, and its use recommended for the cure of gastralgia, dyspepsia, difficult digestion, and of all nervous diseases of the stomach and bowels generally, diseases which, according to the official report, are but too often the despair of both patients and physicians.
I cannot guarantee the value of any other preparation except the CHARBON DE BELLOC, which is prepared under my own supervision.
To each Bottle of Powder and to each Box of Lozenges is added a Circular with full directions for use, and bearing the signature of "Dr. Belloc."

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE.
PULVERMACH'S PATENT
GALVANIC CHAIN BANDS, BELTS, BATTERIES, &c., &c., RECENTLY IMPROVED.
Approved by the Academy of Medicine at Paris and other Medical authorities in England and abroad.
This Self-Applicable Curative is of an efficacy vastly superior to all other external remedies.
Owing to the physiological, physical, and chemical effects of the Electricity they gently and permanently impart into the system, these appliances exercise an internal action, promoting the digestion, circulation, and nutrition, thereby assisting Nature in her efforts to restore the normal balance of health and vigour in a debilitated constitution.
Hence the remarkable cures they daily effect in cases of—
Rheumatism, Head & Tooth Ache, Epilepsy, General and Local Indigestion, Liver Complaint, Delirium, Paralysis, Functional Disorders, &c., &c., after all other remedies have failed, and thus popularizing Electricity in accordance with the arithmetic economy in the medical and scientific press.
Recent improvements in these appliances by the Inventor render their self-application extremely comfortable and effective, and thus remediate former inconveniences.
Medical and scientific extracts and a selection of the daily increasing number of Testimonials, together with Price-List, are embodied in pamphlet, "Nature's Chief Restorer of Impaired Vital Energy," sent post-free on application to the sole Inventor and Patentee, LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 125, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of MIDDLESEX, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 125, Strand, above-mentioned.—SATURDAY AUGUST 16, 1873.

THE RIGHT REV. E. HAROLD BROWNE, D.D., THE NEW BISHOP OF WINCHESTER.

The Right Rev. Edward Harold Browne, D.D., who is now translated from the Bishopric of Ely to that of Winchester, succeeding the late Bishop Wilberforce, is known to be a sound theological scholar. He is youngest son of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Robert Browne, of Morton House, Bucks, who was a magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant of the county. His mother was Sarah Dorothea, daughter of the late Mr. Gabriel Steward, M.P., of Nottingham, Dorset. He was born at Aylesbury, in 1811, and was educated at Eton, under Dr. Keate; from Eton he passed to Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he took his bachelor's degree in 1832, obtaining honours in both the classical and mathematical tripos. He proceeded Master of Arts in 1835, and about the same time was elected to a fellowship in his college. In 1836 he was ordained deacon by the then Bishop of Ely (Dr. Allen), and priest in the following year. Having held for some years a post as one of the tutors of his college, in 1842 we find him appointed Incumbent of St. Sidwell's Church, Exeter, from which he was promoted, in 1850, by the patronage of Bishop Phillpotts, to the rectory of Kenwyn, in Cornwall. In 1857 he returned to Exeter as one of the Canons of that cathedral, holding also the rectorship of the neighbouring parish of Heavitree. Having held for some years the office of Vice-Principal and Professor of Hebrew at St. David's College, Lampeter, in South Wales, he was appointed, in 1854, to the Norrisian Professorship of Divinity at Cambridge, which he held until his elevation, in 1864, at the instance of the then Premier, Lord Palmerston, to the Bishopric of Ely, his diocese, including Cambridgeshire, Bedfordshire, and Huntingdonshire, with parts of Suffolk. In 1840 the Bishop married Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Clement Carlyon, and grand-daughter of the late Mr. Thomas C. on, of Tregrehan, Cornwall. The diocese of Winchester includes parts of Surrey and the whole of Hampshire, with the Isle of Wight, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Sark. Its income is fixed, we believe, at £7700 a year: it ranks third among episcopal sees, only those of London and Durham standing before it. The spiritual peers now consist of the English and Welsh Bishops, with the exception of the junior Bishop for the time being; this exception, however, does not include the prelates of London, Durham, and Winchester, who are always members of the House of Peers from the day of their consecration. The Bishops of London and Durham, by virtue of a statute passed in the thirty-first year of Henry VIII., and the Bishop of Winchester, as prelate of the Order of the Garter, rank before all other Bishops.

BISHOP WALDEGRAVE.

A memorial, raised by public subscription, of the late Bishop Waldegrave, a rich and beautiful work, has been placed in the south aisle of Carlisle Cathedral. It is the work of Mr. John Adams-Aiton, one of our most rising sculptors. Local opinion is unanimous in describing it as a faithful likeness, though executed from a photograph, the sculptor never having seen the original; and it is certainly a very conscientious and able work, artistically considered. By a rather bold innovation, the sculptor has represented the lamented Bishop not as asleep or dead, but resting in the recumbent position, and quietly meditating upon some passage of the sacred volume, which he holds to his breast. The figure, which is larger than life, is executed in the finest Carrara marble, and rests on a chastely-carved sarcophagus of Bardillia marble. The latter bears, in Latin, the Bishop's episcopal motto, "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel." Beneath, cut in white marble, is the following inscription:—"Samuel Waldegrave, 57th Bishop of Carlisle. Born Sept. 13, 1817. Consecrated Nov. 12, 1860. Entered into rest Oct. 1, 1869. 'To me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.'—Phil. i. 21. A tribute of affection, admiration, and respect. Raised by public subscription A.D. 1872." On the sides of the inscription are shields, representing the Waldegrave arms impaled with those of the see of Carlisle. The design was selected by the memorial committee from a number of others sent in competition.

MUSIC.

The orchestral performances at the Royal Albert Hall and operas in English at the Crystal Palace fill up that interregnum which is usually unbroken between the close of the Italian Opera season and that resumption of musical activity which ushers in a London winter.

The programmes of the concerts first referred to have continued to sustain their interest and variety by selections of classical overtures and symphonies, interspersed with instrumental and vocal solos—Mr. Deichmann having occasionally relieved Mr. Barnby as conductor.

At the Crystal Palace, besides repetitions of foreign operas in an English version, Balfe's "Satanella" has been given for the first time there. The work—which was originally produced under the Pyne and Harrison management, at Covent-Garden Theatre, in 1858—contains some of Balfe's most careful writing, especially in the elaboration of the orchestral accessories; and its revival has given a special feature to the present series of Sydenham performances. The principal character found a thoroughly efficient representative in Miss Blanche Cole, who was well supported by Misses Thirlwall and Barth, Mrs. Sharp, and Messrs. G. Perren, H. Corri, E. Cotte, Tempest, Fox, and Friend. The co-operation of the fine band of the Crystal Palace and a competent chorus, under the direction of Mr. Manns, largely aided the general effect.

Additional activity will be given to metropolitan music by the series of promenade concerts, directed by M. Rivière, to commence at Covent Garden Theatre this (Saturday) evening. A full orchestra, comprising many eminent instrumentalists, is engaged, supplemented by the band of the Royal Artillery, together with an efficient chorus, reinforced by 300 voices from the choir of Mr. William Carter, who is to conduct the sacred music which will form a portion of every Friday's programme. Each other evening of the week will have its speciality—the first part of Monday's selection will be popular, of Tuesday's operatic, of Wednesday's classical, of Thursday's ballad music, and of Saturday's national. Among the solo vocalists announced are Mdlle. Carlotta Patti (sister of the renowned prima donna), Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington and Florence Lancia, Misses Edith Wynne, Blanche Cole, Rose Hersee, Enriquez, Mdlles. Corani and Victoria Bundsen, Mesdames Patey and Demeric Lablache, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. G. Perren, Signor Foli, and Mr. Patey, besides many others of acknowledged merit. M. Rivière, as conductor, will be occasionally replaced by Mr. Barnby, and on some special occasions by Sir J. Benedict. Various eminent solo instrumentalists are also engaged, including Madame Carreno Sauret, Mdlle. Secretain, the young sisters Agnes and Violet Molyneux, and the Chevalier de Kontaki (pianists), Mdlles. Liebe and Grubert, and MM. Sauret and Colyns (violinists); and Mr. J. Levy (cornet). Herr Gungl, the well-known composer of dance music, is to come from Germany specially to conduct some of his latest pieces. These elaborate arrangements promise well for this year's promenade concerts.

The festival season is now just opening—abroad, by the Schumann commemoration, which will commence at Bonn with the beginning of next week—the week after being appropriated to our own Birmingham festival; the second week in September to that at Hereford, these triennial events being supplemented by exceptional festivals—at Bristol, from Oct. 21 to 24, and at Glasgow, from Nov. 4 to 7. Of the arrangements for these we have previously spoken, and must now await the occasions themselves for specific notice.

THEATRES.

At the conclusion of a theatrical season it is profitable to take a retrospect of the leading events by which it was distinguished. One thing there has been remarkable about that which has just closed—the English has had to compete with the French stage. On the latter some scenes have been permitted which the Lord Chamberlain would not have tolerated on the former. Criticism, too, has passed them over; for the licenses to be condemned are so general in French pieces, the same censure would have to be repeated so frequently, that we should appear to be condemning French stage literature altogether, and contending for its complete prohibition—a point of view, of course, not reasonably to be maintained. We should have, also, to apply the same rule to the English boards; and then, we should have to repudiate the greatest success of the year. Mr. Wilkie Collins would have to succumb, and "The New Magdalen" to retire from public life. In these days, when a distinction obtains between the highest morals and temporary manners, it is the most difficult of all matters to settle what ought to be the kind and degree of morality to be preferred for dramatic illustration. To some the play of "The Stranger" is an evange; to others it is a corrupting influence, fatal to the well-being of society, and all the worse for being popular. Again, we have Mr. Wills, in "Charles I." and "Eugene Aram," sacrificing great subjects to party spirit and one-sided treatment, thus doing injury to truth and lessening the value of much fine work and true poetic dealing. Mr. Gilbert and Mr. Byron are not fairly amenable to this kind of censure, and Mr. Alberty steers clear of the offensive altogether. "The Wicked World," "The Happy Land," and "Orana" are shielded by allegory from profane criticism; but personal applications were nevertheless possible, and offence was taken in more than one quarter. The Opéra Comique, in introducing the Shah, unexpectedly discovered that it was treading on delicate ground, and had to put a fresh face on the matter. Mr. Leopold Lewis has been remarkably successful with the old theme of "The Wandering Jew." The great success which opéra bouffe has had with us is not the least remarkable of the signs of the theatrical times. The reign of nonsense is not only endured, but enjoyed, by the pit and gallery; and if good taste may be assumed as represented in the stalls and boxes, it avoids interfering with the verdict by the rest of the house. Yet the old drama finds its votaries. Sheridan runs for 300 nights at the Vaudeville and occupies a season at the Charing Cross; and, Shakespeare has put in an appearance at more than one theatre, including the Crystal Palace. Dr. Westland Marston also has been heard at the Olympic, and Pia de Tolomei found an effective representative in Miss Cavendish. A new season, moreover, opens to-night at the Princess's, with Byron's poetical play of "Manfred," the part of the hero being supported by Mr. Charles Dillon.

Mr. Craven has appeared at the Opéra Comique in the character of Milky White, and been received with much approbation. This quaint, and indeed unique, drama is of singular merit. It is an actor's play, written for an actor, full of stage business, and well relieved with stage effects. Miss Gainsborough, as Annie, acted well and sang pathetically; Mr. George Bickett made an excellent Dick Dugs; and Mrs. Manders, as the widow Sandrip, even transcended her former efforts in the part. The play is preceded by the ballet from "L'Œil Crevé," in which the sisters Elliott distinguish themselves. The extravaganza of "Kiss-Kiss" has become quite popular, and will keep the boards until October, when Madame Ristori will appear, and, it is said, in some new characters.

The Prince of Wales's company has migrated to the Standard, and there performed to admiring audiences the late Mr. Robertson's popular play of "Caste." The houses have been crowded to witness the representations of this refined and polished drama. Miss Wilton, as Polly Eccles, and Miss Lydia Foote, as Esther, are both of them powerful representations; while Mr. George Honey, as the drunken Eccles, is not to be surpassed, nor could Captain Hawtree have been in better hands than Mr. Bancroft's. Mr. Coghlan's George D'Alroy is perfect. We may conclude that the East-End has stood the test and emerged triumphant from the trial.

THE MAGAZINES.

The Cornhill offers a capital "make-up" of light papers for holiday readers. One of the most amusing—though the fun may be, perhaps, a little overdone—is the account of the Scotch theological (Episcopalian) college in the Western Isles, by one of the alumni, who certainly does not seem to have carried over much veneration away with him, however much he may have brought. "Sun-Fishing on the Western Coast of Ireland" does not denote fishing for suns, but for sunfish. The writer's extremely spirited account of this lively and lucrative pastime may possibly send some of "the aquatic dandies who adorn the windows of our yacht clubs," and of those misguided navigators "who waste their time pottering from one Channel port to another," to taste the delight of being drawn through the sea by harpooned marine monsters "at the rate of about five knots an hour," while "through the palms of our hands the blood is oozing, the skin being frayed by the flying rope." "The Casuistry of Journalism" is in a graver vein, and is a really valuable contribution to a subject of importance. The nearer journalism attains the status of a fixed profession, the more desirable it is that it should possess an unwritten code of ethics defining the rules of honourable practice in ambiguous cases. By degrees tradition will acquire the force of law, and a profession almost exempt from external control will be kept steady by the influence of its own public opinion. "Our Duties" is in a graver tone still: a good cause is here injured by exaggeration and the selection of extreme instances of social failings, hardly applying once in five hundred cases. Mr. Palgrave sketches the scenery and people of Turkish Georgia with his usual graphic power. There is much in the latter to remind us of the Scotch Highlanders, assuming their finer qualities to have been almost extinguished by ages of oppression. The writer regards the ultimate acquisition of the district by Russia as certain, and says that the people, although Mohammedans, are totally indifferent whether they are governed by Czar or Sultan. "News from the Moon" is the rather inappropriate title of one of Mr. Proctor's interesting essays in popular astronomy. The news would seem to be that there is no news, the various theories discussed being only mentioned to be rejected.

"A Princess of Thule," in Macmillan, deepens in interest and power. The situation at present is one of the most mournful of mental tragedies—the suffering inflicted on a gentle and sensitive spirit, the child of liberty and nature, by one comparatively narrow and shallow; wise, however, in its own conceit. Next in interest comes Mr. A. Schwartz's beautiful history of the author of the "Stabat Mater"—Jacopone di Todi, an ascetic, well-nigh deranged, but in whom, as in many Oriental mystics, the sweetness of the moral nature made amends for the warping of the intellectual faculties. Sir John Coleridge's discourse on Wordsworth will neither create an admiration for Wordsworth where it does not exist nor enhance it where it does. It is, however, an able and dignified address, exactly such as it befitted the descendant of an illustrious Lake poet to pronounce on a public occasion. Mr. George Grove does himself honour by his spirited and affectionate protest against an unfortunate expression in the Edinburgh Review with reference to the late Mr. Deutsch's labours on the Talmud. By the epithet "superficial," however, we should suppose the Reviewer to have intended "popular," which Mr. Deutsch strove to be, and actually was. "Superficial" would be a most inappropriate description of a scholar whose only fault was the degree in which his industry in accumulating materials surpassed his capacity for moulding them into shape.

The most entertaining and generally attractive article in an excellent number of Fraser is "A Visit to Ireland at Election Time," apparently descriptive of the last contest for the county of Kerry. It does not, however, impress us as entirely trustworthy; the conversations are too palpably manufactured, and some of the writer's assertions appear questionable, as when, for instance, he states that the successful Home Rule candidate was only accepted as a pis aller, and that a real Fenian would have carried the whole constituency with him. Why, then, did not one come forward? The influence ascribed to physical force makes it worth while to recollect that the election took place before the enactment of the ballot. M. de Bouteiller's account of the feeling of the Parisian workmen previous to the Communist insurrection appears to establish that one great cause of the revolt was the supineness of the Government in leaving the masses without advice or control, and their mismanagement in abruptly depriving the National Guards of their pay. These circumstances, however, are more damaging to the Commune than to the Government, as they tend to represent the insurrection rather as an outbreak of ill-humour than as a bona fide Socialist uprising. Mr. F. W. Newman's "Life and Teaching of Mohammed" is an interesting review of a recent apology for the Prophet by an Indian Mussulman. The moral as well as intellectual eminence of Mohammed with relation to his age and country must be conceded by all impartial persons; the endeavour to harmonise his precepts with the most recent acquisitions of philosophic tolerance is not more successful than similar endeavours nearer home. Professor Blackie's plea for metaphysics is racy and eccentric. "The Stone Steps" is a beautiful poem, founded on an incident in the life of Wordsworth. There are also a good article on Lucian, a vigorous denunciation of the game laws with reference to the national supply of food, and appreciative reviews of Mr. Hepworth Dixon's "Two Queens" and Mr. Alfred Graves's lays of Killarney.

Blackwood has its usual monthly vituperation of the Ministry, chiefly noticeable for some indications of the writer's opinion of the imminence of a general election, and of the kind of weapons to which his party are prepared to resort in such a contingency. An account of Saballs, the Carlist leader in Catalonia, insists strongly on the chivalrous and religious virtues of this Christian hero, which seem to have somehow undergone eclipse in the present miserable contest. "The Parisians," with its brilliancy and aphoristic point, but uniform and unconscious lowness of moral standard, promises to prove one of the most genuine, if not one of the most captivating, productions of its eminent author. The essay on Schiller is one of the best of the series to which it belongs; and a paper on a tour in Cornwall is radiant with the traveller's reminiscences of enjoyment. "A Visit to Albion" is a rather dull attempt to make fun of the Shah.

Mr. Morley contributes an eloquent paper to the Fortnightly on "The Struggle for National Education." With much that he says we heartily concur. It is obvious, however, that it will be in vain to raise the banner of "national" as opposed to "religious" education. Some method of providing for the former along with the latter must be found in any scheme intended to work. A second article is promised. We shall be interested to observe whether Mr. Morley is prepared with any practical suggestion on the point. The same able writer, in replying to Mr. Fitzjames Stephen's criticism on Mill's "Liberty" is at a great disadvantage as compared with Mr. F. Harrison, who treated the subject two months since in this review. Mr. Morley, like Mr. Stephen, is a utilitarian, and his only controversy with his opponent seems to relate to the practical advantage or disadvantage of the exercise of individual freedom. The idea that there may be a right or a wrong in the matter is only alluded to to be contemptuously discarded. There is something ludicrous and something painful in witnessing the discussion of so vast a question with such animation, by men of such consummate ability, on premises so narrow and inadequate. General Cluseret's continuation of his history of the Commune is as full as usual of capital facts. We hardly see why he should be anxious to screen himself against the charges of incendiarism and assassination while at the same time boasting of having wished to blow up Paris. Surely the greater includes the less? We are quite sure, however, that the explosion would not have taken place until the General had removed himself to a somewhat considerable distance. Dr. Symonds obliges us with an excellent account of Angelo Poliziano, one of the chief representatives of the Italian Renaissance, accompanied by admirable versions from his vernacular poetry. We also feel indebted to Mr. G. Barnett Smith for a seasonable notice of the late Thomas Love Peacock, a humourist of a very peculiar cast, whose works will never be widely appreciated, but will always be prized as an intellectual dainty by the select few to whose taste they appeal.

The question of the sacredness of individual liberty is raised in a curious form by a remarkable contribution of Mr. George Darwin's to the Contemporary Review. Mr. Darwin proposes to take an effectual step towards the constitutional improvement of the human race by forbidding marriage in the case of persons liable to hereditary taint, whether mental or physical. It would be easier to prevent marriages than births; but, apart from this view of the question, Mr. Darwin's principle, logically carried out, would justify infanticide, the abandonment of the sick, or any other atrocity that could be shown to promote the material advantage of society. Dr. Carpenter's essay on inland seas contains much curious information respecting evaporation and the deposit of fossil salt. Professor Tyndall's reply to Professor Forbes's biographers on the glacier controversy revives a painful dispute. We cannot blame him for vindicating himself, but neither can we see how the biographers could have avoided referring to the subject. Personal in quite another way is Mr. Davies's agreeable paper on the late Mr. Grote, graced by two unpublished letters between Grote and Sir G. Lewis, on a nice point of Homeric controversy, characteristic alike of the former's scrupulous research and the latter's caustic humour. "The farmers in Herefordshire," he remarks, "are in a desperate way about protection, and nobody gives them any comfort who does not tell them that they are irredeemably ruined."

The novels in the Gentleman's Magazine continue to be characterised by peculiar vivacity. There is also considerable humour in "Our Climbing Club," and the abstract of Coryat's travels is well done. Mr. O'Shaughnessy's poem, "Zuleika," is distinguished by the usual fancy, melody, and elegance of this very promising writer.

The most interesting item in the Argosy's cargo is, as usual, a story contributed by "Johnny Ludlow." Belgravia, besides other entertaining matter, has a capital account of the late Commissioner Phillips, a perfect type of the Irish criminal advocate.

In Temple Bar, besides the promising commencement of a new story, "My Beautiful Neighbour," we have to note a very good paper on Madame de Maintenon; a tale of American roguery, by Mr. Edwin James—founded on fact, we presume, and full of incident, but difficult to follow, from its connection with the intricacies of New York finance; and a very clever sketch of French provincial life, entitled, "Ruisseau-les-Bois," which we hope will prove as satisfactory to those foresters as amusing to ourselves.

The clever and sensational "Mr. Carington" continues to be the chief attraction in Saint Pauls, notwithstanding the commencement of a new story, "The Owl's Nest in the City." The rare descriptive power of Mr. Charles Camden is devoted to a sketch of "A Fog on the Thames," in a style that reminds us of Mr. Whistler's sombre but truthful etchings of the metropolitan river. "A Himalayan Courtship" records the domestication of a troublesome young lady by an intimate association with the wild animals of that region.

The most remarkable contribution to Tinsley is a fanciful tale, displaying copiousness and gracefulness of invention, under the unpromising title of "Ug." Good Words is as good as usual, but offers nothing calling for special remark; and the same may be said of the Saint James's Magazine and London Society.

An explosion of dynamite took place at the Solway Hematite Works, Maryport, last Saturday, by which Mr. Mitchell, the engineer of the works, was killed, and two men and a boy were injured.

With some difficulty the passengers and crew of the new clipper ship Dunmail, belonging to the White Star line, were saved from drowning last Saturday evening, the vessel having been totally wrecked on the Mersey bar.—A Whitby vessel, the Gratitude, has been wrecked near the Dutch port of Nieuw-diep, and only one of the crew has been saved. The captain, his wife, three children, and six of the crew were drowned.

BY THE WAY.

"All needless legislation is tyranny." This wise saying may not be borne in mind in a certain island as much as it should be; but, as we can have no legislation, needful or needless, for half a year, we may condone the past and ask what the ladies of Constantinople think of the new edict put forth by their Minister of Police. No ladies are to be allowed to enter shops. Whatever they may desire to look at is to be brought to their carriages. Christians and others are requested to co-operate in enforcing this decree. It reads like a stern and vexatious thing; but, of course, circumstances have to be considered. The Constantinople shop is utterly unlike the well-lighted and spacious saloon in which English ladies torment the pallid employé. It is small and dark, and there is no attempt to display the wares; indeed, the Turkish shopkeeper seems aggrieved at having a great deal of trouble given him. He does get it given him, however, and something more, if he tries to cheat too much or resent the imposition being remarked upon. We recollect passing a shop in a bazaar in Constantinople where two ladies, attended by a gigantic eunuch, were remonstrating with a trader. The intimation which one of them conveyed to him in regard to a penalty that she should like to inflict upon him would have almost staggered a London costermonger, if sober. The goods—silks, if we remember aright—he was exhibiting in front of his shop, the ladies having alighted. There is, perhaps, no particular hardship in the enforcement of the custom; but if, as is suggested, Turkish ladies visit shops for purposes of flirtation, the Police Minister may be a well-meaning man, but can hardly be a wise one, if he proposes to produce better manners by a prohibitory edict. The Minister of Instruction must do his duty in Constantinople, and then his colleague of the police will have nothing to say to a lady, touching whom we are told to Leave all her motions unconfined,

And clap the padlock on her mind.

A gentleman named Baird, in Scotland, has given half a million of money for the purpose of extending the influence of the Scottish Kirk. The lavish generosity of this Caledonian Peabody has naturally elicited great admiration. But everybody is not satisfied, and a correspondent of the Telegraph has determined to enact the part of the monitor who in the ancient triumph stood behind the glorified victor and ever and anon reminded him—ne sibi placeret—that he was but a man. It is recalled to recollection that Mr. Baird has once at least extended the Scotch Church in a way that is displeasing to the readers of Burns. He has built a place of worship which is stated to have shut out a good view of the ruin in which Tam O'Shanter saw the witches, and whence he was chased so hotly by the young lady who was only a little more draped than the ballet. Our remembrance of the place may be of earlier date than that of this dreadful offence, and we do not recall it; but no doubt the writer is accurate. But, if half a million of money will not purchase condonation for making sight-seers walk a few yards round to see a sight, prices have indeed gone up to an extent of which even the customers of London radesmen do not dream.

We see it stated that in the winter the game of Ombre is to be reintroduced into good society, and that an eminent foreign player is preparing a manual on the subject. "The Rape of the Lock" has immortalised the game, and a cardplayer with imagination could pretty well learn the method from the third canto. Three players sit down at Hampton Court, one of them being the radiant Belinda, who seems to have challenged the peer and another adventurous knight. Having looked over her hand, she proclaims that spades are trumps—we suppose this choice was the lady's privilege. The game proceeds, and the lovely nymph prospers—

Even mighty Pam, that Kings and Queens o'erthrew,
And moved down armies in the fights of Loo,
Sad chance of war! now destitute of aid
Falls, undistinguished, by the Victor Spade.

But the peer makes good play, and pours his diamonds apace; and then the knave of diamonds wins the queen of hearts. Belinda turns pale, but is equal to the situation. An ace of hearts comes forth, but she holds the king, who mourns his aptured queen.

He springs to vengeance with an eager face,
And falls like thunder on the prostrate ace.

Let us hope, for the dignity of ladyhood, that Belinda's exultation is figuratively described.

The nymph, exulting, fills with shouts the sky;
The walls, the woods, and long canals reply.

For a young lady who could make such a disturbance at Hampton Court rather resembles the damsels who go there on a bank holiday than the serene beauty who "never once offends," and certainly such a riotous person was hardly entitled to make so tremendous a business of the loss of a lock of hair. Doubtless, the ladies who will play Ombre in the winter will comport themselves with more propriety. Ombre, by-the-way, is from Hombre, and means—Man.

A policeman, thirsty as other men have been on one of the recent intensely hot days, stopped at a public-house at Hammersmith, and obtained a drink of "that weak composition" ginger-beer. Under the Licensing Act the publican was liable to punishment for refreshing a policeman while on his beat, and the magistrate, left without option, fined the offender ten shillings. Now this is just one of those instances of over-legislation which are so vexatious to those who, as a rule, support police laws. It is clear that there was a case in which discretion should have been left to the magistrate. The circumstances were all exceptional. The weather was of the kind which is held to justify a good deal of relaxation of the ordinary rules of life, and, indeed, unless men are allowed when the glass is at 80 deg. to dress as lightly as is consistent with propriety, and to take cooling drinks, it would be impossible to carry on hard work at all. But no indulgence is extended to the policeman, who, heavily clad, has to parade for hours under a scorching sun, and who is not permitted to make himself more fit for duty by taking the refreshment for which everybody else clamours. It is in the interest of society that an officer should be refreshed, and at least put on even terms with law-breakers. But no, says a hard Act, he shall not have a glass of iced ginger-beer. The rule that prevents a publican from treating a constable to intoxicating liquor, or even from selling him any, is, in the main, excellent; but the utter absurdity of compelling a magistrate to fine a tradesman for such an "offence" as has been described seems to need only to be pointed out by a statement of the case. No officials are better qualified to be trusted than the metropolitan magistrates, and we may hope that the new Home Secretary will show that he recognises this.

Last week we adverted to the trouble which pilgrimages are giving on the Continent. It now appears that some English Catholics are about to become pilgrims, and, under the lead of his Grace the Duke of Norfolk, to visit Paray-le-Monial, a place where perfectly untrustworthy testimony declares that the Second Person of the Trinity has been visible, and where miracles are said to have been worked. We desire to avoid writing a word that can give pain to a single sincere person, however weak-minded he may be; and, in fact, to state, as we have just stated, what reason these pilgrims give for making their journey is more than enough. No particular harm can come of the excursion. The pilgrims will have no peas in their shoes, but will travel by railway, and doubtless the trains will comprise smoking-carriages. About £5 is the price at which all the benefits of pilgrimage are to be procured. No person can question the right of the Duke and his followers to make the journey. But, as his Grace and some of his pilgrim-friends belong to the law-making order, it cannot be impertinent to submit to them that the confidence reposed in them by their fellow-citizens is not likely to be increased by the knowledge that educated men take part in a demonstration to which only courtesy prevents rational men from applying the proper designation.

THE NATIONAL ARTILLERY ASSOCIATION.

The artillery competition of this association at Shoeburyness was brought to a close on Saturday last with the distribution of prizes. An inspection by Sir John M. Adye, K.C.B., and a march past preceded the ceremony, and there was some speechmaking on the part of Colonel Harcourt, the President of the Association; of Colonel Fisher, Commandant of the School of Gunnery; and of Sir John Adye. Colonel Harcourt stated that, as regarded the quality of the shooting and the numbers present, the meeting of 1873 had been the most successful of the series; and Colonel Commandant Chermide, in a final camp order, expressed his unqualified satisfaction with the steady and soldier-like bearing of the ranks.

Sir J. Adye presented the prizes as follows:—

Messrs. Burroughes and Watts's billiard-table, first detachment, 2nd Sussex.
The National Artillery Association prize (ten silver cups), 4th Cheshire.
Lords and Commons' prize (ten silver cups), first detachment 3rd Durham.
National Artillery Association prize (£20, and £4 to No. 1), Midlothian Coast.
The Duke of Cambridge's prize (£10, with £2 added), 8th Cinque Ports.
Marquis of Exeter's prize (£10, with £2 added), second detachment 4th Lancashire; Scotland's cup, 3rd Durham.
Prince of Wales's prize, second detachment 1st Kent; Lord Londesborough's prize (£20, with £6 added), Midlothian.
Messrs. Elkington's (silversmiths to the National Artillery Association) prize (silver cup to No. 1, and a cup to each of the other members of the winning detachment), second detachment 2nd Northumberland.
2nd Middlesex Artillery prize (£10, and £2 added for No. 1), fourth detachment 15th Lancashire.
Mr. J. H. Stewart's prize, third detachment 8th Lancashire.
Cadiz Mortar, first detachment 2nd Lincoln.
The Queen's prize, second detachment 15th Lancashire.
Sir Richard Wallace's prize, first detachment 1st Cinque Ports.
Colonel Brooshoof's prize, second detachment 4th Lancashire.
Captain Barrow's prize, 4th East York.
Captain Rutley's prize for highest average score, second detachment 4th West York.
The Margate corps having won the Running Target Prize, received the badge of the National Artillery Association; No. 1 also receiving £10. The third detachment of the 8th Lancashire received the £5 given by Colonel Gascoigne for the second prize at the running target. The Repository competition prizes were badges. The first squad (third detachment 8th Lancashire, and 2nd Lincoln) received the £10 given by Colonel Gascoigne; the second squad (second detachment 15th Lancashire and first detachment 1st Cinque Ports) received £5, also presented by Colonel Gascoigne. The Royal Artillery prizes were won by the 21st Brigade (Portsmouth); and the second prize by the depot at Sheerness.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.

A meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution was held on Thursday week at its house, John-street, Adelphi—Mr. Thomas Chapman, F.R.S., in the chair. Mr. Richard Lewis, the secretary, having read the minutes of the previous meeting, various rewards and payments to the amount of £2424 were voted on some of the 233 life-boat establishments of the society.

The Dundalk life-boat had gone off in reply to signals of distress, and safely landed the crew of sixteen men of the barque Princess of Wales, of Glasgow, when that vessel stranded near Dundalk Lighthouse. The Aberdovey (Royal Berkshire) life-boat rendered valuable assistance on Monday week to the distressed fishing-smack Snowdrop, of Aberystwith, which had stranded on the North Bank, Aberdovey. Eventually the vessel was got off in safety. Other rewards were also granted to the crews of different shore boats for saving life from wrecks on our coasts.

The Ancient Order of Foresters have presented, through their secretary, Mr. Samuel Shawcross, £100 as their contribution for the past year in aid of the support of their life-boats, Forester and Foresters' Pride, which had been presented to the institution by that Order, and which are stationed respectively at Tynemouth and West Hartlepool. The society has also received, through the hands of Mr. Charles L. Campbell, of Birkenhead, £105, being the balance of a fund raised for the relief of the families of the poor men who perished on the occasion of the foundering of the S. S. Lelia on Jan. 14, 1865, a few hours after she had sailed from Liverpool for Bermuda. Other contributions and legacies were announced.

A new life-boat was ordered to be sent to Sunderland, to take the place of one of the boats on that station. The life-boats at St. Andrew's and Fraserburgh, N.B., were also ordered to be replaced by other boats. A life-boat and transporting carriage on the plan of the society had recently been supplied by Messrs. Forrest and Son to the Government of the United States, and others were being constructed for the Russian Life-Boat Society.

The committee expressed their deep regret at the decease of Captain Joachim, R.N., formerly of Lowestoft. He had received from the institution, in acknowledgement of his many noble services in the Lowestoft life-boat, a silver medal and three clasps.

Reports were read from Captain J. R. Ward, R.N., the inspector, and Captain D. Robertson, R.N., the assistant inspector of life-boats to the institution, on their recent visits to the coast.

A circular from the War Office promulgates a new series of regulations for the auxiliary forces. The special subjects to which attention is invited are the use of military gymnasia by militiamen and volunteers, the examination of officers, county rifle associations, and the retirement of men unfit for service. The circular concludes with the appointment of two assistant adjutants—Colonel Bulwer, C.B., and Colonel Biddulph.

A return ordered on the motion of Mr. Vernon-Harcourt, M.P., shows the number of regular forces maintained for service in the United Kingdom for each year since 1800. The century was commenced with 70,745 men of all arms, a number which, decreasing to 50,000 odd in 1803, rose from 101,000 in 1804 to 133,265 in 1808, the largest number of men we have had on the books during the period over which the return extends. In 1831 the number had sunk down to 42,915, but rose again to about 60,000 in 1844, and to 68,659 in 1854, the year of the outbreak of the Russian War. In 1857 we had 96,000 men; in the following year 64,000, below which number we have never since gone. The number set down for 1872 is 101,105; for this year, 98,719.

THE EAST AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

The effectual measures lately taken by the British Government to put down the negro slave trade carried on by the Arabs of Zanzibar, which was exposed in Dr. Livingstone's letters of last year, have been a theme of political congratulation. But much remains to be done with the same beneficent purpose at the Portuguese settlements in the Mozambique Channel, in the Comoro and Johanna Islands, and on the north coast of Madagascar. The recent mission of Sir Bartle Frere, in the Admiralty yacht Enchantress, touching at several of those places and opening a discussion with their ruling chiefs or governors, is well known to our readers. Three gentlemen of that expedition, Captain Fairfax, R.N., naval attaché; Lieut. A. M. R. Hamilton, R.N., of H.M.S. Briton; and Mr. Bartle Frere, son of the Special Envoy, contributed a number of sketches, part of which have appeared in this Journal. Five of them are engraved for the present Number; the views of Quiloa and Mayotte are by Captain Fairfax, those of Johanna and Majonga by Lieutenant Hamilton, and that of Dar-es-Salaam by Mr. Bartle Frere.

Dar-es-Salaam is on the African mainland, south-west of the isle of Zanzibar. It has long been looked upon by the Sultans of Zanzibar as a settlement to which they might retire should the encroachment of civilisation, the forced abolition of the slave trade, or other unforeseen circumstances, render a residence at Zanzibar no longer desirable; and certainly this possible retreat has been admirably chosen. The town, which contains a large palace and several houses of substantial masonry, is situated on high ground overlooking a spacious land-locked bay, with excellent anchorage, and to which easy access from without is afforded by a somewhat narrow passage, which would be perfectly safe when properly buoyed. From this bay a broad salt-water estuary, well stocked with hippopotami, runs to some distance inland; and in the rear of the town a magnificent park-like and well-timbered country stretches away for miles into the interior. The place has capabilities for becoming one of the principal trading emporiums on the east coast. The view of Dar-es-Salaam is taken from the mouth of the estuary looking into the bay.

Quiloa and Lindy Bay are two other ports visited by Sir Bartle Frere. These are now of no importance, though the former place was for some hundred years the residence of the Kings of an ancient Moorish family who ruled from Mombassa to Cape Delgado. In the beginning of the sixteenth century it was captured, after a desperate resistance, by the Portuguese, who held it some time, but abandoned it on account of its unhealthiness. It finally passed under the Muscat dominion towards the end of the eighteenth century, and now belongs to Zanzibar. It has a splendid harbour, and there is an estuary running inland, abounding with hippopotami. Lindy, situated at the mouth of a fine river, has also a magnificent bay with fine anchorage, but it has but few inhabitants. The Quiloa mentioned above must not be confounded with Kilwa Karinja, the great slave-trading port some miles to the north.

Of the group of islands which lie to the north and north-west of Madagascar, Johanna is the most beautiful. Its formation is that of two very lofty mountain ridges, intersected by valleys, of which the sides, dotted with lofty trees and covered with every shade and species of foliage, slope gently towards the ocean at their base. As seen from the westward, it has been likened to a schoolboy's "comparative view of the mountains of the world," being a succession of peaks rising one above the other, but all wooded to the top. On the slopes and at the foot of the hills sugar is grown in large quantities, and coffee has lately been cultivated with great success. One enterprising English gentleman, Mr. Sunley, who has resided more than twenty years on the island, has now under cultivation a sugar estate which produces 1000 tons per annum, and on which his labourers reside, to the number of 800 negroes of both sexes. Johanna is governed by an independent King, who is a great lover of the English, as are, indeed, the whole of the inhabitants. They are of Arabic race. His Highness was most cordial in his reception of Sir Bartle Frere's mission, and loud in his wishes for success, to which it is believed that he promised to contribute by guaranteeing freedom to all immigrants, of whatever race, that should hereafter settle in the island. He employs himself principally in sugar-planting, having been induced to set up a manufactory chiefly by the spectacle of Mr. Sunley's successful enterprise. Johanna is of volcanic origin, as are most of the islands in its immediate neighbourhood; Great Comoro especially, which has only once been explored by Dr. Kersten, being an active volcano, with constant eruptions. The island is well supplied with water, and is said to be the most healthy of this group. Beside Mr. Sunley, there is but one other European planter resident in the island.

Majonga, situated in Bambatooka Bay, to the north-west of Madagascar, is the only port in that island which was visited by Sir Bartle Frere. The bay on which it is situated is large enough to anchor the navy of England, and receives the waters of a large and swift river which runs many miles into the interior. The town is built on the left shore of the bay, and is commanded by the Governor's so-called palace and fort, which are picturesquely situated on the summit of a well-wooded hill. The huts of the natives are built with a neatness and an attention to cleanliness and regularity that are nowhere noticeable in the neighbouring islands; and the inhabitants themselves, well disposed towards the English, pay considerable attention to the dressing of their hair and their outward adornment generally. The natives of the island may be divided into two great classes. The Hovas, the dominant race, undoubtedly of Malay origin, are Christians; the Sakalavas, the partially-conquered race, are heathen, and their only delight is in fighting and idleness. A fixed form of government is established under a Hova Queen, who holds despotic sway at Tananarivo, and the religion of the majority of the Hovas generally follows that of the monarch for the time being. Christianity, however, more especially the soberest form of Protestantism, has taken good hold of them.

Nos Beh, situated in Passavanda Bay, to the north-west of Madagascar, and Mayotte, about forty miles to the south-east of Johanna, are two islands which were occupied by the French somewhere about the year 1841, and have since been held by them. These islands are of little commercial or political importance. The French settlers are principally occupied in the cultivation of sugar estates, for the produce of which, and especially for the rum, a ready market is found in Madagascar. Since the war the grant which was formerly made by the French home Government for their maintenance has been withdrawn. The quarters of the colonial government to which Nos Beh is subordinate are situated on a smaller islet a mile and a half from the large island of Mayotte, which is chiefly occupied by sugar-planters. A monthly mail from Seychelles connects these out-of-the-way places with the rest of the civilised world, and they are both occasionally visited by the British cruisers which come here to coal. Sir Bartle Frere's mission also visited both these islands, the Enchantress having run somewhat short of coals. It may be noticed that Mayotte is completely surrounded by coral reefs, but the channels of approach have been surveyed and marked out by buoys.

TESTIMONIAL TO AN ENGINEER.

Upon the retirement of Mr. Ramsbottom, the eminent mechanical engineer, from the management of the great works of the London and North-Western Railway Company, at Crewe, the sum of £500 was voted by the shareholders to provide a testimonial in acknowledgment of his services. The general design, of which we give an illustration, was suggested by and carried out under the supervision of Mr. Tipping, M.P., one of the directors of the company. Upon a pedestal, supported by four plinths bearing the company's arms, Science, holding Hercules in chains, points proudly to a plan of Crewe, as one of the great centres and sources of her victory over brute force and the material forces of nature. The pedestal is enriched with four medallion portraits of George Stephenson, Henry Booth, R. Trevithick, and Mr. Ramsbottom, under whose portrait is the following inscription:—"To J. Ramsbottom, in acknowledgment of great talents, rare qualities, and eminent services. The London and North-Western Railway Company. R. Moon, chairman." This work was manufactured by Messrs. Elkington in oxidized silver, relieved with gold. It has been forwarded to Vienna, where it worthily represents a branch of British art-manufacture.

SKETCHES IN NORWAY.

In our account last week of the Norwegian Coronation of King Oscar II., King of Sweden and Norway, there was some description of the ancient Cathedral at Trondhjem, or Drontheim, where the ceremony was performed. We engrave a view of that fine old church, built mostly in the thirteenth century, but sadly mutilated and deprived of some essential features, as an architectural whole, by the havoc of successive fires. It is contributed by Mr. W. B. Thelwall, an artist whose drawings of Norwegian scenery have been exhibited in the Haymarket. Mr. G. H. Weekes, engineer of H.M.S. Agincourt, furnishes a sketch of the picturesque Levifos waterfall, on the river Nid, four miles from Trondhjem. It is described in Mr. J. S. Shepard's "Over the Dovrefjelis," which was quoted in our last. "Unlike most of the Norwegian 'fosses,' which have great height with but a narrow stream of water, the Leerfoss," as Mr. Shepard writes its name, "has a breadth of 120 ft., with a height of, perhaps, 80 ft. The river at one bound abruptly throws itself over a perpendicular wall of rock, but it lacks that broken and picturesque outline which is the principal charm of a fall; so torn are the surrounding rocks and smoothly regular the downpour of the rushing waters." The buildings on each side are mills, which are worked by the current carried to and from this place by aqueducts. Those on the left hand are built upon a detached rock; and, although they would appear to the observer as extremely fragile in their construction, still their existence through many years proves that the foundations are stable, and they will doubtless only cease to exist when the timbers which support them become decayed. Mr. Weekes says—"The falls are very grand, and in the soft twilight of a Norwegian summer's day present a scene to which only the pencil of a Turner could do justice."

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The Hawaiian or Sandwich Islands have been lately brought before the notice of the public upon the occasion of the death of the late King and election of the new one; also because of the talk about American annexation or the alternative of fiscal reciprocity. We have received a couple of sketches of places in the neighbourhood of Honolulu, which will be of interest. The first is a view of Pearl River and Waiana Mountains, taken about six miles from Honolulu, looking north-west. A few people in Hawaii, exclusively Americans, are in favour of annexation; many more, and of other nationalities, approve of reciprocity with the United States. It has been proposed, as a sort of bribe to get the American Congress to interest itself in the latter, that the Hawaiian Government should offer to cede Pearl River for a term of years, for the use of the United States navy as a dock-yard and naval station. It is a magnificent piece of water, deep enough and large enough to hold many hundred ships, and in some places there is sufficient water close to shore to cause quays to be almost unnecessary. The one drawback is that on the bar at the entrance there is only eight feet of water, but without any great outlay this bar might be cut away. Farther to the left than could be shown in the sketch the various channels join into one, which leads to the sea. The country around is of very little value, as there are few streams and little or no rain. The sugar-mill in the centre of the picture, and various small patches on the banks of the streams, are the only places where there is any cultivation. Mr. G. W. Robertson, of Honolulu, sends this and another sketch. The other view is Diamond Head, an extinct volcano, which stands out into the sea, about four miles east of Honolulu. It forms a landmark, which, after having been once seen, could never be forgotten. Although there are now no active craters on the island of Oahu, the natives have traditions about the way this one, Diamond Head, became extinct; and ahi, part of its native name, Leahi, means fire. The coconut grove in the foreground covers the sea-bathing village of Waikiki, where the King and many of the foreign merchants have their houses.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will and two codicils of General Edward Pery Buckley, of New Hall, Nunton, Wiltshire, who died at South Audley-street, on May 23, were proved on the 31st ult., by Lady Catherine Buckley, the relict, the sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife £1000, his leasehold house in South Audley-street, and certain furniture and effects; to his sons Alfred and Felix John, and his daughter Frances Gertrude, £7500 each; to his son Victor £5000 and a house in Granville-place, Portman-square; to the Salisbury Infirmary £100 free of legacy duty, and legacies to his servants. The testator devises his New Hall and all other his real estate to his eldest son Alfred for life, with remainder to such one of his sons as he shall appoint, and he settles his leasehold property and the residue of his personal property upon similar trusts.

The will of Mr. Henry Furze, of St. George Brewery, Whitechapel, was proved, on the 5th inst., by Henry Orford, John Hewett Furze, and William Furze, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator devises and bequeaths all his real and personal estate upon trust for all his children living at his decease and the issue then living of such as shall be dead, such issue to take their parents' share.

The will of Mr. James Robert Hope-Scott, Q.C., of Abbotford, and of No. 7, Hyde Park-place, was proved, on the 7th inst., under a nominal sum, by Richard Garrett Bellasis, the executor. This will was made solely by the testator as the surviving executor of the will and codicil of the late Earl of Shrewsbury and Waterford, and the grant to Mr. Bellasis is accordingly limited to all such estate as vested in Mr. Hope-Scott as such surviving executor.

The will, with ten codicils, of the Hon. Dulcibella Maria Eden, of Hampton Court, was proved, on the 1st inst., by Admiral Henry Eden, the brother, and Augustus F. M. Spalding, the executors; the personalty being sworn under £14,000.

The will and codicil of the late Dr. William Tyler Smith, of 21, Upper Grosvenor-street, were proved, on the 21st ult., by Matthew Pilcher, Frederic William Steward, and Arthur Denman Smith, the sons, the executors, under £10,000.

The will, with two codicils, of William Fawkenner Chetwynd, of Brockton Hall, Staffordshire, was proved, on the 25th ult., under £4000.

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian understands that the Duchess of Inverness has bequeathed much of the property left by her husband, the Duke of Sussex, to members of the Royal family, and that the principal legatees will be the Princess of Wales, Princess Mary Adelaide, and the Duke of Cambridge.

EDUCATION OF WOMEN.

The class list for the Cambridge University Examinations for Women has been issued.

The examinations were held at nine centres—Cambridge, Cheltenham, Leeds, Liverpool, London, Manchester, Norwich, Plymouth, and Rugby. The number of candidates was 220, being an increase of forty-five per cent on last year. Of these forty-four had already passed the examination in a previous year, and entered in order to pass in additional subjects. Twenty-four of the candidates did not present themselves for examination.

The candidates at the Cambridge centre seem to have especially distinguished themselves, probably owing to the system of lectures for women which has been established by resident members of the University; but there are instances of distinguished success at most of the centres.

Of the compulsory subjects, arithmetic does not seem to have been so fatal as in some previous years; but only two of the whole number of candidates obtain the mark of distinction in this subject. In history and literature many candidates obtain the mark of distinction.

In the languages group—Greek, Latin, French, German, Italian—several candidates have obtained high distinction; none, however, have obtained special distinction in Greek, and only two in Latin. In Italian, which has usually been more or less a failure, there has been very considerable success.

In the mathematical group a first class has been obtained for the first time with special distinction in Euclid and algebra.

In the natural sciences group a first class has been obtained for the first time, with special distinction in geology and zoology.

In the moral sciences group the candidates are not very numerous, and only one obtains a first class, with special distinction in logic and political economy.

The general results seem to show that much advantage has been derived from the system of instruction by correspondence conducted by members of the University. Substantial prizes are given by the results of this examination.

The next examination will be held in June, 1874. Information may be obtained from the Rev. G. F. Browne, St. Catherine's College, Cambridge.

The Greenock Harbour Trustees have rejected by a majority a motion to purchase the Port Glasgow Harbours.

SCIENTIFIC RESULTS OF THE MONTH.

The Novgorod, a new circular ironclad, designed by Admiral Popoff, has recently been constructed in Russia, and has excited a good deal of attention in scientific circles. This vessel is circular in plan, and has a flat bottom. She has twelve parallel keels running across the bottom—the front portions of these keels forming the bow and the after portions the stern—and she is propelled by six screws, driven by six pairs of compound engines, the shafts of these engines being parallel with the keels. Concentrically with the vessel a turret is placed carrying two 11-inch breech-loading guns. The armour both of sides and turret is composed of two layers of iron, the outer 9 in. thick and the inner 7 in. thick. The deck is of iron, 2½ in. thick. The turret is capable of being rotated in either direction and the vessel is fitted with an apparatus for firing torpedoes. We do not believe that this species of vessel will come into extended use for any purpose. In no respect is such a vessel superior to a monitor, while in many respects, especially in speed and in manœuvring power, she is inferior. Credit must, nevertheless, be given to the Russians for their enterprise and freedom from professional prejudice. The best species of war-vessel that can now be constructed is a monitor with large engine power, high speed, very thick armour, with a single turret carrying two very heavy guns, and a submarine gun at the bow for firing off torpedoes. Such vessels should have only short, telescopic masts, on which sails may be hoisted should the engines be accidentally disabled; but they should habitually trust to their engines alone. This is the species of vessel which for years past we have been pressing upon the attention of the authorities, and we venture to say that no better type has yet been suggested. The Novgorod is only an armoured washing-tub, and her offensive powers would not have been diminished, but, on the contrary, increased, if she had been made of such a form as would pass readily through the water. Then we object to the great complication of six pairs of engines and six screws. For the sake of greater security, and to give greater power of evolution, we think that monitors should be constructed with two screws, each driven by a pair of independent engines. But it is unwise to multiply complication. The best monitors which have yet been designed are those which have been designed by Ericsson, except that the armour should be solid, instead of laminated.

The last part of the Quarterly Journal of Science contains an article on "The Limits of our Coal Supply." The writer reckons that the recent abnormal rise in the price of fuel has entailed on the nation an increase of expense of about one million sterling per week for this single article; and he points out that so wastefully is fuel used in our domestic economy that for every unit of heat beneficially expended in warming a room eight or nine units pass up the chimney. The economical cooking expedients devised by Count Rumford, eighty years ago, are again beginning to attract attention; and it is reckoned that the consumption of coal in London during the first four months of 1873 has been 49,707 tons less than during the corresponding period of 1872. The Royal Commissioners of 1870 consider that the limit which will stop our further progress in coal getting will be the depth of the seams, and the maximum beneficial depth they fix at 4000 ft. Within this depth they consider that we still have 146,480,000 tons unworked, which, at our present rate of consumption, would last 1200 years. The consumption, however, is increasing in a geometrical ratio. But this rate of increase will be checked by the increased cost. At a depth of 4000 ft. the temperature will be 116.3 deg. Fahr.; but the temperature could be reduced by efficient ventilation.

At a late meeting of the Academy of Sciences in Paris a paper was read by M. Chautran on the regeneration of the eyes of the crab. If the eyes of a crab one year old be extracted, after moulting, in August, they will be completely restored. But if the operation be performed in May, before moulting, that process interferes with the regular growth, and the regeneration is less perfect.

M. Bert has made some interesting researches upon the influence of changes in the pressure of the atmosphere upon the phenomena of life. When the pressure is diminished the germination of seeds is retarded—apparently from inability to obtain the oxygen necessary for growth. The seeds, however, do not die, but only remain inert. Germination appears to be aided by a pressure of two or three atmospheres. But with four or five atmospheres the pressure appears to act injuriously, and if the seeds are of the farinaceous kind they are killed. When the tension is great, the oxidation, instead of being greater, is less.

At a meeting of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Institution, Mr. W. H. Johnson called attention to the action of sulphuric and hydrochloric acids on iron and steel. If a piece of either metal be immersed in the acid for ten minutes its strength will be diminished. But the strength will be restored by exposing the metal to the air for a few days or by subjecting it to a gentle heat.

Mr. Twissleton, in a book just published by Murray, shows, by citing a number of well-authenticated cases, that the tongue is not essential to speech, as persons have been able to speak after the tongue had been extracted. The speech is more interfered with by cutting off the tip of the tongue than by the removal of the whole of it.

The remarks we ventured to offer last month in regard to the improbability of capital being raised in this country to carry into operation Baron Reuter's Persian projects under his remarkable concession have now been indorsed by the chief organs of public opinion. Without the guarantee of the English Government, or some other equivalent aid, there appears to be very little prospect of railways or other great works being at present carried out in Persia. But we think that one of the possible lines in Persia is of so much political importance to us that every effort should be made by our Government to assist its construction. This line would run from Tabreez through Teheran to Herat. It would follow the existing track of commerce, and would pass through a settled and peopled country. On the whole, it appears to be the most promising line in Persia; but there is no probability that it would return its expenses unless the English Government were to grant a heavy subsidy for the conveyance of the Indian mails.

Public attention is again being drawn to the important subject of improved steam-boat communication between England and France. At a late meeting of the South-Eastern Railway Company it was stated that the Government intends to resume the works at Dover harbour, and measures, we understand, are also about to be taken for amending the communication between Newhaven and Dieppe by the improvement of the harbours and the establishment of vessels like those on the Holyhead line. The Dieppe route is the shortest, in point of distance, between London and Paris, and when the contemplated measures of improvement have been carried out it is expected to be the shortest also in point of time.

Mr. Benjamin Leigh Smith, of whose Arctic exploring expedition we gave a few particulars last week, is a son of the late Mr. Benjamin Smith, M.P. for Norwich.

THE VIENNA EXHIBITION.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

VIENNA, Monday, Aug. 11.

Although the space reserved for the British colonies at the Vienna Exhibition is ridiculously small, one may venture to say that the collection of raw and manufactured products gathered within its narrow boundaries is such as no other country in the world can present.

Passing through the Indian department, which was recently described, one enters the section of the Cape of Good Hope, which has an exceedingly characteristic display that attracts much attention. There are numerous specimens of the wool of the Angora goat, which was introduced into the colony in 1856 by Messrs. Mosenthal Brothers, and which has become a source of great wealth, no less than 871,891 lb. of wool, valued at £58,457, being exported to Europe last year. Then there are the Cape diamonds, polished and in the rough, including a rare twin diamond and a very curious one grown in matrix; besides numerous plaster casts and glass models of Cape brilliants, exhibited by Ochs Brothers. Close at hand is an ingot of gold, as it comes from the retort, weighing rather more than 3 lb. 4 oz., and worth over £150, the exhibitor of which is Sir J. Swinburne. Next there are numerous samples of cotton, somewhat coarse in the staple; dressed hides and skins; ox-horns cut into strong combs; and stuffs of mohair; followed by specimens of ostrich-feathers plucked from both wild and tame birds, of which one notes, curiously enough, that the plumes deteriorate when the birds have been bred in confinement. The models of incubators for the artificial hatching of ostrich eggs are especially worthy of notice. It is necessary that the temperature should be maintained at from 100 deg. to 105 deg. Fahrenheit for forty-five days. The wine merchants of Capetown have good reason to congratulate themselves. Out of twenty-six samples of South African wines sent to Vienna, eight have been classed as A 1 by the international wine jury, and each of the four exhibitors has secured a medal. The wines to which the jury gave the preference are those made from the Constantia grape.

Close to the large stall upon which the various exhibits of the Cape are collected, and which is decorated with bouquets of artificial Cape flowers and dishes of artificial Cape fruits, stands the case of Messrs. Soutar and Co., of Kingston, Jamaica, who exhibit cigars, cigarettes, and tobacco. The production of tobacco is quite a new industry in our great West Indian island, where the weed is being raised from Havannah seed on imitation Havannah soil; and, judging from the samples sent to Vienna, it has already proved eminently successful. The jury on tobacco have classed Messrs. Soutar's cigars with those of Havannah itself, as being infinitely superior to anything produced in Europe, and have awarded them a medal of merit. Beyond these cigars, however, Jamaica sends nothing whatever to Vienna, and yet one would have thought that it would willingly have availed itself of such an excellent opportunity of making its general produce known to Europe, especially when the distracted state of Cuba, a prey to insurrections and civil war, is taken into account. Mauritius is more creditably represented, its sugars and raw silks being exceptionally fine. Its display is rendered extremely interesting by the exhibition of photographic views of the island and of portraits of some of its more characteristic Chinese, Indian, and Mozambique inhabitants. Ceylon, which is strong in coffee, cinnamon, and coconut-oil, also exhibits a very curious and unique collection of the jewellery made and worn by the natives of the island. There are earrings, finger-rings, nose ornaments, and waist chains. The colour of the gold with which these jewels, some of which are very elaborate, are made is not natural. It would appear that the Tamils, by whom they are worn, are dissatisfied with the natural colour of the precious metal, and that they give it an artificial hue by dipping it into solutions of salt and water, alum, saltpetre, gorga fruit, and tamarind acid. The silver jewels attain their brilliant appearance by being dipped into a solution of lime. The recent Ashantee war lends considerable interest to the curious collection of primitive weapons from the West Coast of Africa, although, unhappily, the natives are gradually abandoning them for rifles from European factories. The light Ashantee despatch-bags, of woven grass, are also not without interest, nor are the splendid woods from the Bahamas, which rival the choicest productions of either Honduras or Yucatan.

The New Zealand section counts at least two great curiosities, its Phormium tenax and its skeletons of moas—round which latter uninitiated visitors gather in astonishment, and mildly suggest that they must be ostriches. The Phormium tenax, or New Zealand flax, is for scientific men one of the great curiosities of the Exhibition. It serves, at the same time, to make the coarsest sail-cloth and rope and the finest damask table-cloths; while I have been assured by Sir Charles Clifford, the New Zealand Commissioner, that even cambric pocket-handkerchiefs can be manufactured from the fibre of this most important plant. The Maories, who had discovered its valuable properties previous to our occupation of the islands, only use a portion of the fibre on one side of the leaf, the leaves being selected with great care. They scrape the leaf with a mussel shell or a piece of hoop iron, the fibre being then soaked in cold water and dried. The Europeans dress it differently. The leaf is put into a machine called a "stripper," at the rate of 100 ft. to 120 ft. per minute, after passing through which the partially-cleaned fibre is hand-washed in bundles of about twenty leaves. These bundles are then suspended in water and allowed to soak for about two hours, the fibre being then spread out on the bleaching-ground for a time, which varies according to the weather. When it is dry it is either scutched or hackled, and both packed in bales and pressed for shipment.

The moas' skeletons exhibited by Dr. Haast, of the New Zealand Canterbury museum, are very remarkable, especially that of the variety known as the Dinornis giganteus, which is over twelve feet in height. A leg-bone of one of these birds was discovered some years ago by Colonel Michael (a photograph of which is exhibited), proving that they sometimes reached the height of even 17 ft. The structure of this bird, which had neither wings nor tail, and the long neck of which is very strangely formed, proves that it must have lived at a very remote period. When the moa eventually died out it is asserted that it was replaced by another race of birds, specimens of which are exhibited. It is noticeable that these latter, which are still plentiful in New Zealand, have neither wings nor tail.

Close to the moas stands a long and narrow glass case, in which several specimens of New Zealand minerals are exhibited. There are coal and gold, auriferous quartz, iron, chrome, lead, copper, and zinc ores, many being of very fine quality. The specimens of merino fleeces and of native timbers are also both excellent. Then there are samples of New Zealand cloths and leathers, showing that manufactures are not being neglected. There are also a large collection of photographs and some admirable water-colour drawings, by Messrs J. Gully and C. D. Barraud, which give us a capital idea of the mountain, wood, and river scenery of the New Zealand islands.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LORD ZOUCHE.

The Right Hon. Robert Curzon, fourteenth Lord Zouche, of Haryngworth, in the Peerage of England, Knight of the Turkish Order of the Nishan, and of the Persian Order of the Lion and Sun, died on the 2nd inst. His Lordship was born, March 16, 1810, the elder son of the Hon. Robert Curzon, M.P. (uncle of Richard William, late Earl Howe), and of Harriett Anne, his wife, Baroness Zouche in her own right.

That lady's father, Sir Cecil Bishopp, Bart., as senior coheir, the ancient barony of Zouche, and had the abeyance terminated in his favour. He was coheir also of the baronies of Lovell of Kary, St. Maur, and Grey of Codnor. The nobleman whose death we record was at one time Joint Commissioner at the Conference at Erzeroum, and was appointed in 1841 private secretary to Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, when Ambassador at Constantinople. He succeeded his mother in the peerage May 15, 1870, and married, Aug. 27, 1850, Emily Julia, daughter of the late Right Hon. Sir Robert Wilmot-Horton, Bart., by whom (who died March 11, 1866) he leaves a son, Robert Nathaniel Cecil George, present Lord Zouche, born July 12, 1851; and a daughter, Darea, born Nov. 13, 1860.

LADY TREVELYAN.

Hannah More, wife of Sir Charles Edward Trevelyan, K.C.B., died at Witley, Surrey, on the 5th inst., aged sixty-three. She was the only sister of Lord Macaulay, and under her editorship the last volume of the great historian's work on England was published. Her father was Zachary Macaulay, the zealous advocate of negro emancipation, and her mother Selina Mills, a Quaker lady of Bristol. She married, in 1834, Sir Charles Edward Trevelyan, and leaves issue, a son, George Otto Trevelyan, M.P. for Hawick district, and two daughters, Margaret Jean, wife of H. T. Holland, Esq., and Alice Frances, wife of William Stratford-Dugdale, Esq., of Merevale, Warwickshire.

SIR JOHN POWER, BART.

Sir John Power, second Baronet, of Kilfane, in the county of Kilkenny, J.P. and D.L., at one time High Sheriff of the county, died on the 8th inst. He was born in May, 1798, the eldest son of Sir John Power, first Baronet, by Harriett, his wife, daughter of Gervase Parker Bushe, Esq., of Kilfane, M.P., and niece of Henry Grattan. He succeeded to the baronetcy (created in 1836) at the decease of his father, in February, 1844. He married, March 30, 1835, Frances Elizabeth, only daughter of William Blayney Wade, Esq., of Clonabraney, and leaves five surviving sons and one daughter. The present and third Baronet, Sir Richard Crampton Power, was born in 1843, and is married to Florence Anna Maria, only surviving child of the late Robert Elliot, Esq., of Goldington Bury, Bedfordshire.

SIR FRANCIS RONALDS.

Sir Francis Ronalds, F.R.S., died on the 8th inst., at St. Mary's Villas, Battle, Sussex, in the eighty-sixth year of his age. He was the eldest son of a merchant, Mr. Francis Ronalds, of Highbury, by Jane, his wife, daughter of Mr. William Field, and received his education at Cheshunt Academy. Distinguished by his scientific attainments, and especially by his invention, in 1816, of a dial electric telegraph, and by his various contributions on electricity to periodical literature, he was appointed Honorary Director of Kew Observatory in 1843, and received the honour of knighthood in 1870.

MR. MARTIN OF HAM COURT.

Joseph John Martin, Esq., of Ham Court, in the county of Worcester, J.P. and D.L., Mayor, for many years of the Worcestershire Yeomanry, died, at Park-hill House, Torquay, on the 2nd inst., in his eighty-fourth year. Mr. Martin, who was the eldest son of the Rev. Joseph Martin, of Ham Court, lord of the manor of Cheshunt, and Canon Presbyterial of Exeter, by Isabella Margaret, his wife, sister of the Right Hon. William Sturges-Bourne, represented the family of the Martins, so long known as bankers of Lombard-street, and as M.P.s for Tewkesbury.

A meeting of the mine-owners of Scotland was held in Glasgow on Friday week, when the amendments on the special rules which had been proposed and agreed to by the sub-committees of the miners and mine-owners were approved. The dispute, which has lasted since the beginning of the year, may now be said to be settled.

A railway accident of a similar nature to that at Wigan occurred at Miles Platting, on the Bury line of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, near Manchester, last Saturday, by which eight persons were injured, one of whom has since died. At the inquest, held on Monday, touching the death of Mr. Newhouse, the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death," with a censure on the company for inattention made to a complaint of the oscillation of the carriages.

Earl Fitzwilliam, with a view of removing the differences which recently existed amongst his miners and upholding the good feeling which has existed for generations, invited the whole of his workpeople to Wentworth House on Saturday last. The miners employed by his Lordship at the various collieries and works, together with their wives, daughters, and parents, walked in procession to Wentworth, headed by the local brass band. There were two processions, numbering about 2500 persons. One started from Parkgate, near Rotherham, and the other from Elsecar. The workpeople were admitted by ticket at the front entrance, and, after passing through the hall, they assembled on the lawn at the back of the mansion. His Lordship, accompanied by the Countess, the rest of the family, and the guests, took his stand at the top of the steps leading into the hall and briefly addressed the company, which then dispersed to the various booths, where tea, ham and beef sandwiches, beer, ginger-beer, lemonade, &c., were to be procured free of charge. His Lordship, together with the Countess and the other members of the Fitzwilliam family, mixed amongst the people, and officiated as waiters at some of the booths. The West Yorkshire Cavalry and other bands played selections of music.

THE VIENNA EXHIBITION BUILDING.

A Plan of the Vienna International Exhibition Palace and its precincts is this week presented in a page of our Journal. It will not require much explanation, but will serve to aid the understanding of those descriptive letters which our Special Correspondent has furnished. The whole series of buildings is much larger than that of any of the London or Paris Exhibitions. It is situated in that part of the Prater, or public park of the Austrian metropolis, which was formerly called the Krie-Au, about one mile outside the city, to the east, beyond the Danube Canal, or old channel of that river, the main stream of which now flows more to the northward. The ground occupied by the Exhibition is bounded on the north side by the main Danube river; on the south side, by the Haupt-Allee, or principal avenue of the Prater; on the west side, by the Volks-Prater, a place like the Champs Elysées for popular entertainment, which lies between the Haupt-Allee and the Feuerwerks-Allee, in the angle formed by their junction at the Prater-Stern, near the Northern Railway station; and on the east side, by an artificial piece of water called the Heustadel-Wasser. There are five grand streets or roads leading to the Exhibition. The two most convenient from the city are the Haupt-Allee and the Exhibition-street, called Welt-Austellungs-Strasse, both commencing at the Prater-Stern, which is like the Barriere de l'Etoile in the Champs Elysées of Paris. But from the southern districts and suburbs of Vienna, the Landstrasse and Wieden, the shortest route to the Exhibition is over the Sophia Bridge and across the Unter or Lower Prater. Tramway-cars and omnibuses ply along each of these roads to the several doors of the Exhibition Palace. The branch lines of the Northern Railway and State Railway are laid to the Exhibition Stations, on the north side, which is at the back of the Palace, its front and principal entrance being in the Haupt-Allee.

Some particulars of the Exhibition building and of its internal arrangement will be found in the "Handy Guide to Vienna," by Bucher and Weiss (publishers, Faesy and Frick; and Longmans, in London). The building is 905 metres, or 990 yards, long, by 205 metres, or 224 yards, in breadth. Its main gallery, 25 metres wide, which extends the whole length, is intersected by fourteen cross galleries on each side; these are 15 metres wide and 75 metres long. In the centre is the Rotunda, 102 metres in diameter, with a dome roof 97 metres high to the topmost lantern. This is the Exhibition Palace, properly so called, which covers a space of 73,593 square metres, divided among different nations in the following proportions:—United States of North America, 1350 square metres; South America, 1090; England, 6370; France, 6380; Portugal, 519; Spain, 605; Switzerland, 1125; Italy, 2972; Belgium, 2613; Holland, 880; Greece, 867; Sweden and Norway, 865; Germany, 6741; these being named in the order of their places along the main gallery, from west to east, to the central Rotunda. At and beyond the centre we come to Austria, which has 14,767 square metres; Hungary, 2972; Russia, 3319; Egypt and Central Africa, 1003; Tunis, 259; Turkey, 2938; Persia and Central Asia, 346; Roumania, 657; Morocco, 86; Siam, Japan, and China, 1350, still in the order of their places, to the east end of the building. On the north side of the palace are the two agricultural produce halls, for Eastern and Western Europe. The first-named, belonging to Austria and Russia, is 150 metres long and 75 metres broad; the other, chiefly devoted to England, France, Belgium, and Italy, is 220 metres by 70. Between these halls are many small pavilions and detached houses for particular exhibitions of German manufacture—Krupp's steel guns, Dreher's beer, the wooden clocks of the Black Forest, the mining produce and metal works of Germany, the steam-boat and railway engines or models, and the designs for roads or bridges. Behind all these is the long Machinery Hall, divided for the several countries which send machinery. The Fine-Arts Hall, or Gallery, at the east end of the palace, beyond the Turkish fountains, has an area of 7394 square metres, and is well lighted from top and sides. In front of the palace, or on its south side, towards the Haupt-Allee, are the Imperial Pavilion, to the one hand; the Jury Pavilion, to the other, confronting the grand central entrance. The pavilion of the Emperor of Russia, that of the Sultan of Turkey, and that of the Viceroy of Egypt, with restaurants and music-rooms, are in the eastern part of this space. The halls of Austrian, Bohemian, and Hungarian beer, and the printing-office of the Exhibition Gazette, in connection with a well-known Vienna daily newspaper, will be found in the western part. Various apartments and offices not here mentioned are comprised in the series of Exhibition buildings; there is special accommodation for the German Princes, in the interior near the Rotunda; the German Committee, the British Royal Commission, and other parties in official authority, have their places of abode. A detachment of the military corps of Engineers, to protect the buildings from damage by fire or other accident, is lodged in the neighbouring barracks.

One illustration this week, from a sketch by our Special Correspondent at the Exhibition, shows the motley costumes of the spectators, belonging to different nations, Eastern and Western, who throng to look at a model of the city and temple of Jerusalem in the Turkish Empire Section. Jews, Greeks, and Mohammedans, with the people of Hungary, the Servians, the Bosnians, and the Croats, who dwell in the border provinces of the Turkish and Austrian dominions, seem to view this object with a common feeling of curiosity, derived from its religious associations. No other historic city in the world, ancient or modern, without even the exception of Rome, commands the traditional respect of so many different nations of mankind.

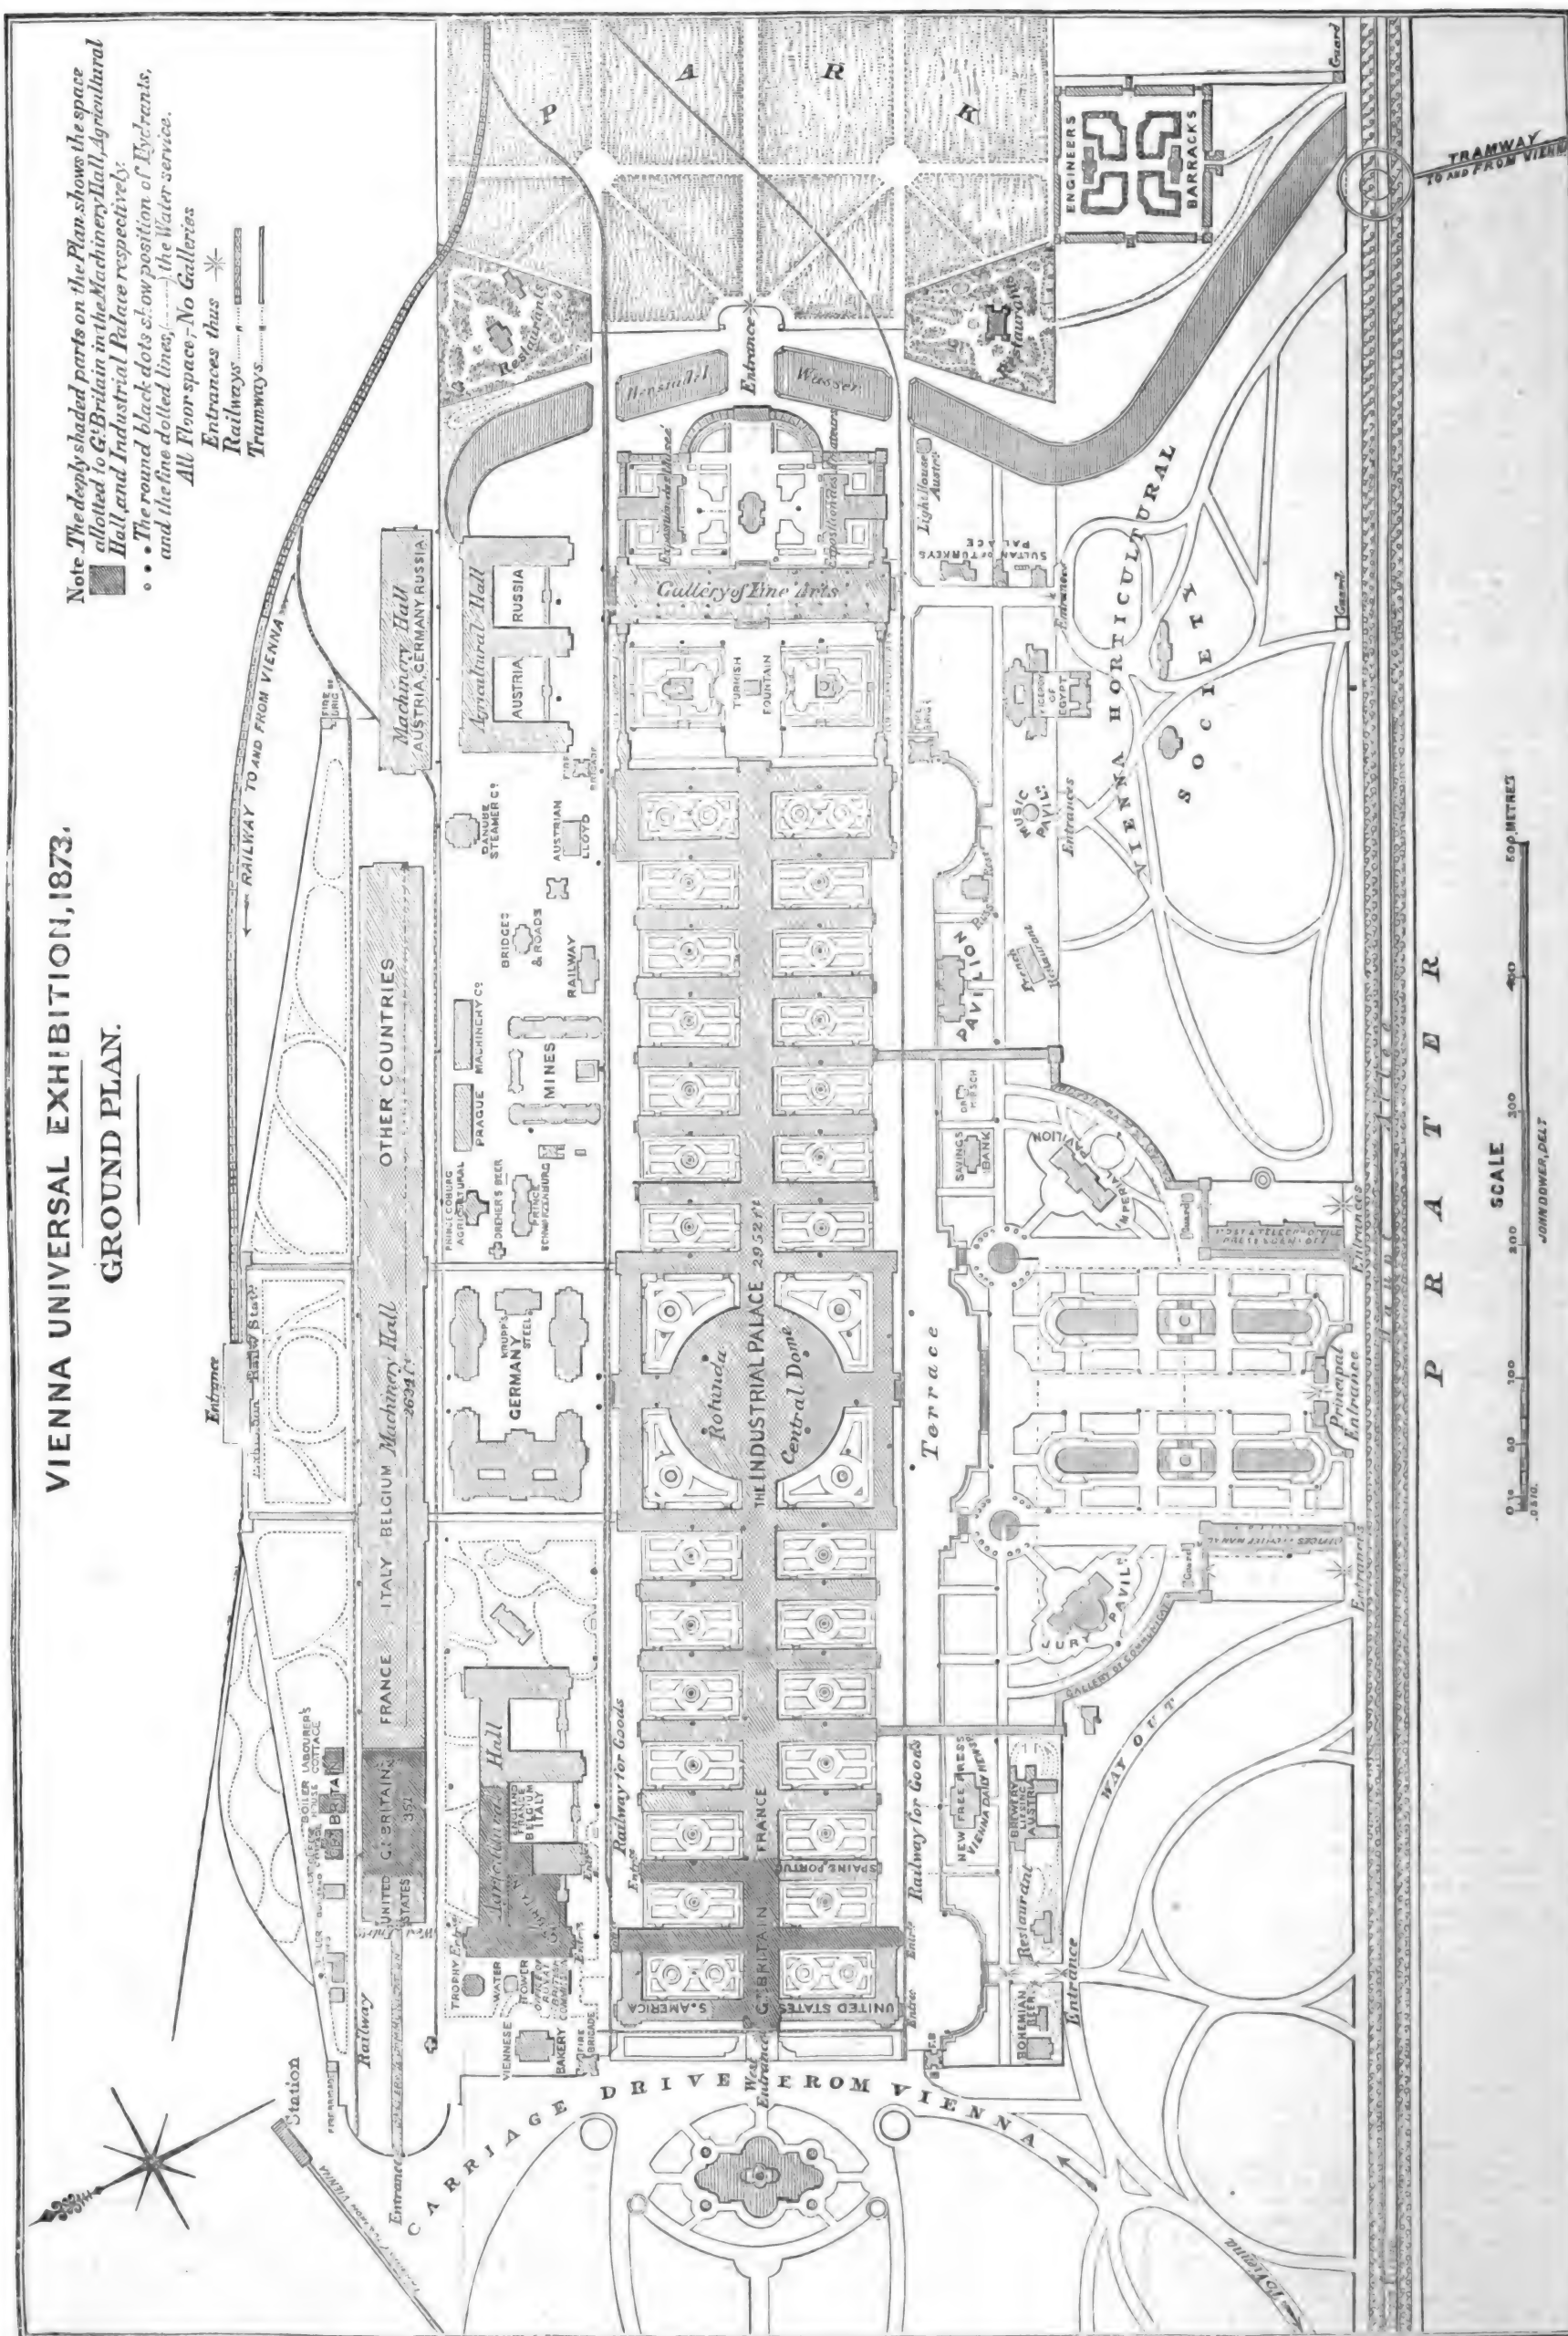

The first school erected by the Leeds School Board was opened yesterday week by Sir Andrew Fairbairn, the chairman, in the presence of a large number of persons. The cost of the school, which will accommodate 800 children, has been £10,000. The foundation-stones of six other schools were laid.

A numerous picnic party assembled last Saturday afternoon in that portion of Epping Forest which is known as Ambresbury Banks, situated near the town of Epping, for the double purpose of indulging in pleasant recreation and of testifying their interest in the preservation in perpetuity of the remains of the forest for the public. A meeting for the latter purpose was improvised in the midst of the trees, and brief addresses were delivered by Sir Antonio Brady, Sir Fowell Buxton, Mr. Andrew Johnston, M.P., and others.

Last Saturday the Mayor of Liverpool presided at the opening of a new convalescent hospital at Woolton, one of the pleasantest suburbs in the neighbourhood of that town, and commanding a fine view across the upper part of the Mersey, where it widens out into a broad estuary. An interesting circumstance in connection with this hospital is the fact that Mr. Gladstone has handed over to the committee the sum of £1400, which was presented to him by the working men of England in the year 1868. In commemoration of this gift it has been resolved to call the finest chamber in the building the "Gladstone Hall."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 23, 1873.

Sir Samuel Baker's letters to the late Sir Roderick Murchison, to Sir Henry Rawlinson, and to Colonel Baker, published during the last few days, open to us a new and very exciting chapter of romantic history. The letter to Sir Roderick was written so long back as Sept. 30, 1872; that to Colonel Baker, May 13, 1873. In substance they are the same; in manner and diction, as might have been expected, they slightly vary. All of them, however, exhibit the same spirit, deal with the same facts, and record the same impression of the writer in regard to the triumphant success of his perilous mission.

The British public have welcomed these letters, not merely on account of their intrinsic merit, but because they put beyond all doubt the safety of Sir Samuel Baker, his wife, and the small English party who embarked with him on his enterprise. A few months ago a telegram reached this country the brief statement of which suggested, if it did not justify, the most alarming apprehensions as to the fate of the whole band of which the intrepid explorer had assumed the conduct. We now learn that those gloomy tidings were not altogether without some basis of truth; but, reflecting as they did the expectations, and we may add the wishes, of the slavers in the interior of North Africa, they depicted rather what might have happened than what had actually occurred. The position which they stated Baker Pasha's Expedition to have occupied at a comparatively recent date seemed quite consistent with the probabilities of the case. From the fuller information conveyed to his friends in Sir Samuel's letters, it appears that the facts were not altogether misdescribed, but that the conclusion drawn from those facts was premature. Sir Samuel, his wife, his brother, and his small party of armed retainers were shut up in a fort which they had constructed for themselves, and were surrounded by several thousand savage assailants, who, at the instigation of the slave-dealers, fully intended and confidently anticipated the destruction of the isolated company. In this, however, they were disappointed. Sir Samuel Baker, well supported by those whom he had with him, and using with the most fatal effect the forty Snider rifles with which his body-guard was armed, attacked his foe and routed him, inflicting upon him severe and well-merited chastisement.

Sir Samuel, it will be remembered, entered into the service of the Khedive of Egypt. He had in view three objects in doing so. He had previously, as an explorer, traversed the whole basin of the White Nile, and made himself, and the European public as well, acquainted with the main features of that extensive region. He found almost everywhere the possible civilisation and happiness of its inhabitants blighted by the systematic operations of Arab slave-dealers. He conceived the project of putting an end to this devastating system, and of annexing the Nile basin to the Government of Egypt, and thus of opening up the entire district to the certain inflow of legitimate commerce. Probably, his expectations of success were far more sanguine than the subsequent facts confirmed. He was to have started with 1645 men, to be placed at his disposal by the Government of the Khedive. Of these only 1100 were forthcoming at the starting of his expedition. Very soon afterwards, owing to a conspiracy during his absence at Ismailia, this corps was reduced to 502 officers and men. Of these 300 were left at head-quarters; and, with only the 200 troops remaining, Baker subdued the Bari people, and then pushed on with 114 men to Lobore, eighty-seven miles from Ismailia, where he waited for his baggage and for a hundred additional soldiers left behind him in the latter place. With recruited strength he forced his way to the slaver's head station at Fatiko, and gave the dominant agent of the slavers and his people notice to quit. With 114 men he subsequently reached Unyoro, seventy-nine miles further distant, crossed the Victoria Nile, and reached the last station of the slavers near Karuma falls. It was here that the crisis occurred which it was presumed had terminated in the total destruction of the expeditionary force; and it was here that Baker achieved his "crowning victory," of which, in his letter to Lieutenant J. A. Baker, R.N., the Pasha states the ultimate result in these few emphatic words—"All enemies have been crushed, and the Government of the Khedive is now triumphantly established throughout the kingdom."

Sir Samuel's letters are crammed with details of startling interest—which, of course, it would be impossible for us to condense within the limits to which we are necessarily confined. Indeed, they are put by Sir Samuel himself in the most compact and abbreviated form. How he was pursued from the first by the treachery of those over whom he had been placed; how, undaunted by the diminution of his numbers, he resolutely pushed on from one slave station to another until he had reached the last; what marches he took through the jungle grass nine feet high, and swarming with ambuscades planted in it by his relentless and savage foes; with what patience he endured the delays and privations to which he was perpetually subjected; with what success he disciplined the few men who followed him, and obtained over them that moral mastery which secured their entire fidelity in the face of frightful dangers; with what coolness, and presence of mind, and ready resource he fronted all opposition; with what astute diplomacy he disconcerted the plans of his adversaries; with what humane wisdom he dealt with them when they were at his mercy; how in all his troubles, marches, and conflicts his devoted wife was ever near him to advise, to comfort, to inspire, and to sustain him; these are topics which none can read without a thrill of interest and admiration. Altogether, they constitute a story such as Englishmen have seldom read since the days of the early adventurers from Spain and England into the New World.

It is to be devoutly hoped that the results of this expedition will correspond with its main purposes, and will be worthy of the singular heroism with which it was conducted. We wish we could share the confidence of Baker Pasha. We have no unwavering faith, however, in the ability, or even in the inclination, of the Khedive's Government to take advantage of the splendid opportunity which the success of the expedition has placed at its feet. For the present we can only maintain an attitude of hope. No doubt Sir Samuel's success will pave the way for the earlier or later fulfilment of his beneficent designs. But many untoward things are likely enough to intervene for awhile and to put off to a later period than the friends of humanity could wish the desired consummation. Still, at any rate, Englishmen are not likely to forget that for an additional burst of sunshine upon the prospects of Africa she is indebted to the heroism of Sir Samuel Baker.

The new pier at Herne Bay is announced to be opened to the public on Wednesday next, and the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of London and the members for East Kent have consented to take part in the ceremony.

The picture of the "Fighting Lions," by Mr. H. Hardy, published by us on Aug. 2, was engraved by permission of Messrs. Thos. Agnew and Sons, of Manchester, who purchased the picture from the artist. Mr. Hardy himself made the drawing on the wood for our engraving.

The following score of the Vienna Chess Tournament has been received since our Chess article went to press:—Blackburne, 8 matches; Steinitz, 7; Anderssen, 6; Bird, 5½; Rosenthal, 4½; Paulsen, 4; Meitner, 2½; Schwarz, 2½; Heral, 2½; Fleissig, 2; Pitschel, 1.

The legal assessor of the Board of Trade, in delivering judgment as to the loss of the Dunmail, has refused to recognise the principle laid down by counsel, that the responsibility of the captain ceased as soon as the pilot came aboard. The sentence was that Captain Fisher's certificate be suspended for three months.

The northern and midland counties have been revisited by severe thunderstorms, and many casualties are reported. Isaac Pearson, a partial cripple from paralysis, took shelter under a beech-tree in Chester-road, Macclesfield. Some fierce flashes of lightning were noticed, and a few minutes afterwards Pearson was found lying dead at the foot of the tree.

Mr. James Sanderson, reporting on the state of the crops, estimates the yield of wheat, taking England generally, to be 20 per cent under the average. The grain is of good quality and in excellent condition. The yield of the barley crop he estimates at 15 per cent over the average, and the oat crop at 10 per cent under the average. The bean and pea crops are remarkably good, especially in the north and midland counties. The bean crop especially has escaped the attacks of the fly, and will probably prove to be 15 per cent over the average. A large area has been planted with potatoes, and the crop is singularly regular, and promises a large yield. Turnips and mangold are singularly promising; there is scarcely a failure to be seen, while the crop generally, irrespective of light or heavy manuring, good or bad farming, is everywhere luxuriant.

THE COURT.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, arrived at Balmoral Castle at three o'clock yesterday (Friday) week from Osborne House. The suite in attendance consisted of Lady Churchill, the Hon. Harriet Phipps, Miss Bauer, Major-General Ponsonby, the Hon. Mortimer Sackville West, Mr. Collins, and Dr. Fox. Her Majesty travelled direct from the Isle of Wight to Scotland. Having crossed from Osborne in the Royal yacht Alberta, Captain the Prince of Leiningen, to Gosport, the Queen proceeded by special train upon the London and South-Western line to Basingstoke, thence upon the Great Western Railway, via Banbury, to Rushbury junction, and thence over the London and North-Western system by the usual route to the North. The Royal travellers partook of breakfast in the station committee-rooms at Perth, where there was an assemblage of various people of note from the neighbourhood. After nearly an hour's stay the journey was continued, via the Bridge of Dun, where the Earl of Dalhousie presented the Queen with baskets of fruit, and thence, via Ferry-hill junction, to Ballater, whence her Majesty posted to Balmoral. Divine service was performed at the castle on Sunday. The Queen, with the members of the Royal family, has walked and driven out daily in the vicinity of the Royal demesne.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Duke of Edinburgh, sailed from Osborne on Sunday evening, in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, en route for Holyhead, where his Royal Highness arrived at two o'clock on Tuesday morning. A Royal salute was fired at eight o'clock from the Channel fleet lying off the breakwater, the yards being manned. At noon the Prince, with the Duke of Edinburgh, embarked in the Admiral's barge, and was rowed between lines of boats to the landing-place for the purpose of performing the ceremony of declaring the breakwater and the harbour complete. An engraving of the new Harbour of Refuge, with some particulars of the opening ceremony, will be found in the Supplement, and the auspicious event will be further illustrated and described next week. Their Royal Highnesses embarked the same evening for Plymouth, and were present on Thursday at the march past of the troops at Dartmoor.

The Princess of Wales, with her children, has remained at Osborne Cottage during the Prince's yachting expedition.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

It is announced in a despatch from St. Petersburg that the Duke of Edinburgh will be married there in January next. In the course of next month his Royal Highness will meet the Russian Imperial family in Livadia. He will return to England in October and arrive in St. Petersburg in December.

The Duke is expected to be present at the Birmingham Musical Festival on Tuesday and Wednesday next.

PRINCE ARTHUR.

Prince Arthur, while bathing at Trouville, on Wednesday, had a near escape of being drowned. His Royal Highness was saved by one of his aides-de-camp and the bathing master.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck, accompanied by Lord Carington, have arrived in Paris.

Princess Eugénie d'Aldenburg has left Claridge's Hotel for the Hague, en route for St. Petersburg.

Prince Murat and Prince Achille Murat have left Brown's Hotel.

The Imperial fête was celebrated at Chiselmhurst yesterday (Friday) week by a religious service at St. Mary's Church, which was attended by the Empress Eugénie and the Prince Imperial, and subsequently by a reception at Camden House of about one thousand Bonapartists. The Empress and the Prince shook hands and kindly conversed with all assembled. The Prince, who was received with cries of "Vive l'Empereur!" made a short speech, in which he said:—"I thank you, in the name of the Empress and myself, for having come here to associate your prayers with ours, and for not having forgotten the road which you have already followed for some months. I thank also my faithful friends who have sent hither from afar the numerous testimonials of their affection and their devotion. As for myself, being an exile and near the tomb of the Emperor, I represent the teachings which he has left me. I find in my paternal heritage the principle of national sovereignty and of the flag which consecrates it. This principle, the foundation of our dynasty, is summed up in this motto, to which I shall be always faithful, 'Govern for the people and by the people.'"

The Duke and Duchess de Mouchy have left Brown's Hotel.

The Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch and the Ladies Scott have arrived at Drumlanrig Castle from visiting Lord John Thynne, at Haynes Park, Bedford.

The Duke and Duchess of Grafton and the Duchess Dowager of Grafton have arrived at Euston Hall, Thetford.

The Duke and Duchess of Richmond and the Ladies Gordon Lennox have arrived at Gordon Castle, Banffshire.

The Duke of Montrose has left Belgrave-square for Buchanan House, Lanarkshire.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Ailesbury left their residence in Pall-mall, on Saturday last, for Jervaux Abbey, Yorkshire.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Lothian have left their residence in Grosvenor-square for Monteviot, Jedburgh.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Bath have left Berkeley-square for Longleat, Wilts.

The Marchioness of Ormonde and Lady Blanche Butler have left Kilkenny Castle for Kilsash.

The Marquis of Headfort and Ladies Adelaide and Florence Taylour have left Cowes for The Lodge, Virginia Island.

Marquis Conyngham has sailed from Cowes, in his yacht, for Ireland.

Earl and Countess Fitzwilliam and the Ladies Fitzwilliam have arrived at Coollattin Park, in the county of Wicklow, from Wentworth House, Yorkshire.

The Earl of Kintore and the Hon. John Keith-Falconer have returned to Keith Hall House.

Viscount and Viscountess Stratford de Redcliffe and the Hon. Misses Canning have left Grosvenor-square for Park House, Frant, Sussex.

Lord and Lady Penrhyn and the Hon. Misses Douglas Penrhyn have left Mortimer House for Penrhyn Castle, Bangor.

Lord and Lady Chelmsford and the Hon. Miss Thesiger have left Eaton-square for West Wickham, Beckenham, Kent.

The Lord Chancellor and Lady Selborne and the Hon. Misses Palmer have left Portland-place for Blackmoor.

The Right Hon. W. F. Cowper-Temple, M.P., and Mrs. Cowper-Temple have left town for Ireland.

Nuneham Park, Oxfordshire, the country seat of the Harcourt family, was, on Tuesday, the scene of much rejoicing in celebration of the coming of age of Mr. Aubrey Harcourt, eldest son of Mr. Edward W. Harcourt, the present holder of the estates.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

An efficient system of electric conductors has at length been provided for St. Paul's Cathedral.

A new charitable association, called the Hackney Carriage Proprietors' Benevolent Fund, had its first annual dinner at the Crystal Palace recently, and £600 was subscribed.

The opening of the new bridge which crosses the Thames from the Cadogan Pier to the western side of Battersea Park, which was to have taken place last Saturday, has been postponed till to-day (Saturday).

The directors of the Bank of England, on Thursday, after a more prolonged meeting than usual, have reduced the minimum rate of discount from 3½ per cent, at which it was fixed on the 31st ult., to 3 per cent.

New by-laws drawn up by the Metropolitan Board of Works have been issued to the tramway companies. They are intended to regulate the rate of speed, the stoppages, the intervals between the cars following each other, and the duties of drivers of other vehicles with respect to tramways.

The Twickenham local board of health has received a formal notice from the Thames Conservancy Board to discontinue, within twelve months, the discharge of sewage from their drains into the river. The notice is accompanied by an intimation that no extension of time for completing the necessary works will, on any account, be allowed.

Since the outbreak of typhoid fever in Marylebone Dr. Whitmore, the medical officer of health for the parish, has caused the whole of the street drains to be thoroughly cleansed and deodorised by disinfectants once, and in most instances twice, daily. He has also issued, posted, and distributed throughout the parish a "sanitary code."

Sir Sydney Waterlow has accepted the invitation of the provincial mayors to a banquet to be given in his honour at York, on Sept. 26. The banquet is to take place in the Guildhall, and will, it is expected, be a most brilliant affair.—The Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of London will visit Southampton in state on the 5th proximo, and will be entertained by the Corporation and inhabitants of the latter town.

At a meeting, on Monday, of the members and congregation of the Surrey Chapel, in the Blackfriars-road, the pastor, the Rev. Newnam Hall, who is about to take a tour in the United States for six months, gave some particulars relative to the church being erected in the Westminster-road, from which it appears that the total cost will be £45,000, of which there is already in hand about £30,000.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 97,984, of whom 33,195 were in workhouses and 64,789 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the years 1872, 1871, and 1870, these figures show a decrease of 13,646, 20,819, and 29,709 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 519, of whom 356 were men, 137 women, and 26 children under sixteen.

At a meeting of persons interested in Sunday schools, held on Tuesday, at the premises of the Sunday School Union, Old Bailey, Mr. Hartley gave an account of a visit he had just made to the Sunday schools in the United States and Canada. He visited about forty schools, and on the whole he thought the Sunday schools in America were better than those of England. There was a comfort, an elegance, and an ornament about them which were never found in England; the floors were carpeted, and the children of the best classes went to those schools.

The monthly report of Mr. Bolton, the water examiner to the Local Government Board, describes the water supplied during the month of July by the New River, the East London, and the West Middlesex Companies as being "clear, bright, and well-filtered;" that of the Southwark and Vauxhall and Grand Junction Companies as being "clear and bright;" that of the Lambeth Company as being "clear, but insufficiently filtered;" and that of the Chelsea company as being "clear, but too rapidly filtered." Mr. Bolton has indicated a prospect of constant supply coming into operation in the metropolis. The East London Company, he says, began it on March 25; the West Middlesex Company have made a partial beginning; and the others are providing additional storage to enable them to undertake constant service.

At the last monthly meeting of the council of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute, held at the rooms, 8, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, several new members were elected, including Professor Hodge, of Princetown University, Canons Woodroffe, M'Caul, and others. It was reported that seventy-nine new members had joined during the first seven months of the year, that the issue of a new "people's edition" of the "Transactions" had commenced, and that an Italian translation of the "Transactions" had been undertaken by the proprietor of an Italian periodical. The council ordered the translation of a well-known work by a distinguished professor of a German university, in reply to Strauss's last work. Finally, the council, considering the great importance to science of a perfect set of observations during the approaching transit of Venus, had gladly supported the application made to her Majesty's Government for a grant to pay the expenses of the expeditions.

The total number of births registered in London last week was 2236, and the deaths were 1698. Each was 8 below the average. The deaths from diarrhoea were 405, showing a decline of 65 from the number returned in the previous week, but exceeding by 141 the average number; 390 were of children under five years of age, including 324 of infants under one year. To simple cholera 17 deaths were referred, against 23 and 16 in the two previous weeks; 10 were of infants and 7 of children and adults. To different forms of fever 30 deaths were referred last week, against 37, 22, and 25 in the three preceding weeks; these deaths were 19 below the average number, and included 3 certified as typhus, 22 as enteric or typhoid, and 5 as simple continued fever. The Registrar-General says that "the recent small outbreak of enteric fever in Marylebone, which has been the subject of a special investigation, having attracted considerable public attention, the full details of each of the 22 fatal cases of enteric fever registered in London last week may be usefully published. From these it appears that 3 deaths occurred in the immediate vicinity of the outbreak, and 2 others in hospitals to which the cases had been admitted from the neighbourhood." Six deaths were caused by street accidents. The mean temperature was 63.5 deg., or 1.7 deg. above the average. The highest temperature in the shade was 85.6 deg. on Saturday last.

The Extra Supplement.

"THE GOOD SHEPHERD."

The picture, by Mr. Bottomley, which has been engraved for our Extra Supplement of this week, bears for its motto that touching sentence of Jewish prophetic poetry concerning the expected Saviour of mankind, "He shall bear the lambs in his bosom, and shall gently lead them that are with young." But it is a shepherd of some Western country, not of Palestine, that the artist has depicted in this scene of pastoral duty and labour, conducting his flock of simple and innocent creatures from the exposed moorland pasture to a place of shelter against the impending storm. There is, however, an expression here of the same tone of feeling that is usually awakened in our minds by the frequent references in Hebrew Scripture, and also in the New Testament, to the shepherd's care for the sheep in his charge. The merits of the painting, as a work of art, were duly commended in notices of the late exhibition at the Royal Academy.

THE TRIAL OF THE CLAIMANT.

The Court of Queen's Bench has been listening twenty days and more to the lengthened speech of Dr. Kenealy, as counsel for the person, indicted as Arthur Orton, who is charged with the crime of perjury in his claim to be regarded as Sir Roger Tichborne. That learned advocate, whose tone and manner of speaking are somewhat unusual at the Bar, frequently incurs the check of a remonstrance from the Judges, in which he is not always disposed to acquiesce. His figure and attitude are shown in the sketch that furnishes an illustration of the scene in court engraved for our front page. The jury, on Wednesday, again implored him to tell them how soon he was likely to finish his speech, which has been wholly occupied with comments on the case for the prosecution. Dr. Kenealy had promised to get done with it on the Friday before, then on Monday, and, next to that, on Tuesday; but he had not, till Thursday afternoon, found it opportune to bring the prolix discourse to an end. The witnesses for the defence are now to be examined.

THE AUTUMN CAMPAIGN ON DARTMOOR.

The series of military manoeuvres performed on Dartmoor by the troops under command of Major-General Sir Charles Staveley was brought to a close on Tuesday. Both the divisions, respectively commanded by General Smith and General Sir E. Greathead, came together on the same camping-ground of Roborough Down, ten miles from Plymouth towards Tavistock. On Wednesday they were employed in cleaning their uniforms, arms, and accoutrements; and on Thursday they were to be reviewed, marching past and saluting his Royal Highness, the Commander-in-Chief. The Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh were expected to be present. The sketches in a page of this Number refer to a variety of campaigning incidents: the halt of a volunteer corps on their march at the brink of a water-course, which has the appearance of a mill-leaf, where they slake their thirst and cool their hands and faces; the butchers cutting up loins or sides of beef for the daily issue of meat rations, under the supervision of an officer of the Control Department; and the tramway car, laden with passengers, that runs between the Rock and the late quarters of the First Division on Yarnadon Down. Anything unusual or unexpected, however trivial it may be, that breaks the routine life of soldiers in camp on a day of inactivity is sure to attract a crowd of spectators from the ranks, and from the commonality of the neighbourhood in general. Even such a thing as the sudden arrival of a hansom cab, bearing a strange gentleman who was hastening to save the post by using the letter-box on Ringmoor Down, has not passed without remark. The sentries on guard in the camp, both at night and by day, keep up a show of the same kind of vigilance that would be requisite with an army engaged in real warfare; and our Special Artist himself, when passing the head-quarters of the First Division at half-past nine on a dark evening, has been challenged with the cry, "Who goes there?" to which he had but to answer, "A friend!"

The troops assembled under General Lysons on Cannock Chase, Staffordshire, have begun operations in good order, the general head-quarters being fixed at Etching Hill, a mile from Rugeley, close to the racecourse. In Ireland, too, on the Curragh of Kildare, there is a muster and movement of soldiery. The Minister of War, Mr. Cardwell, has this week visited the Camp on Dartmoor.

THE SHAH AT LAXENBURG.

During the sojourn of the Shah of Persia at the Austrian capital he was entertained one day by the Emperor Francis Joseph at the Palace of Laxenburg, where nothing pleased him better than to be rowed up and down on the lake in a sumptuous barge, and to witness the sport of fishing. His Majesty, however, was too much beset in this aquatic pastime by the mob of ordinary tuft-hunters, who were so eager to catch sight of a personage invested with the attributes of a remote Asiatic royalty that they pushed as near as they could in a medley of small boats, wherries, and canoes, staring at the Shah with no more discretion than an English crowd. The palace of Laxenburg, which was partly built as it now stands by the Empress Maria Theresa, is of no great dimensions; but it adjoins the older palace or castle, founded in 1377, with additions constructed at different periods. The whole range of buildings was once surrounded by a moat, which has been converted into beautiful flower gardens. The park is about the size of Hyde Park, and has its Serpentine, as may be seen in our Illustration, with seventeen islands, on the largest of which is a Museum of National Art and Antiquities, in a pavilion named the Franzensburg. A railway station, very near the castle, makes Laxenburg very accessible to parties of pleasure from Vienna, who go there as Londoners do to Hampton Court.

The official inquiry into the recent railway accident at Wigan was resumed on Tuesday. A number of letters from passengers who were in the train were read, and several witnesses were examined, after which the court adjourned sine die. Another of the sufferers from this accident has died, bringing up the number of persons killed to thirteen.

The Avenir Nationale alludes to the recent death of a singular character at Batignolles. His name, it says, was Joseph Voiry, and he imagined that he had, in a prior state of existence, been a dog, and could not meet a dog in the street without talking to him. By degrees he persuaded himself that he was king of the canine race, and gave himself the title of Medor I. As he was very gentle and inoffensive, the police never interfered with him. He has left a fortune of 200,000 francs to one of the principal veterinary surgeons of Paris.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, Aug. 21.

It would have been strange indeed if the recent agitation apropos of the fusion had not called forth a declaration of some kind from Pius IX., who more than any other personage in Europe beyond the actual actors has reason to long for the speedy restoration of Henry V. In the nature of things a Legitimist Monarchy would be a crusading one, and the exile of Frohsdorf would be required to justify his right to be styled "Most Christian King" and "Eldest Son of the Church." One has the Comte de Chambord's own assurance that amid his troubles he frequently turns his eyes in the direction of Rome and is struck by the marvellous and godlike patience exhibited by the illustrious prisoner of the Vatican; and to-day we find his Holiness—whose patience, by-the-way, is evidently pretty nigh exhausted—congratulating the Count on the fusion of the Bourbons, and assuring him that God has listened to the prayers of the Catholic world, and that the hydra of revolution is on the eve of destruction. Meanwhile, however, it becomes every day more doubtful as to whether this boasted fusion has been or ever will be effected, although the clericals of Rome have illuminated their houses to celebrate its accomplishment. Mgr. Dupanloup, the well-known Bishop of Orleans, is just now at Frohsdorf, where he seems to have been sent to exert his eloquence on the Comte de Chambord in endeavouring to persuade him that he can, without dishonour, make some concessions to the Orleanist party, more especially in reference to the "question of the flag." The Comte is said to have drawn up a manifesto the terms of which have met with considerable opposition from the Orleanist negotiators, and it is to prevent his publishing it without certain modifications that the Bishop has been dispatched to Frohsdorf. According to the latest rumours, the Comte de Paris has declared that, although there no longer exists any Orleanist pretender to the throne, there still remains an Orleanist party decided as to the conditions of monarchical government in France.

We have had a meeting of the Committee of Permanence this week, at which M. de Mahy, Radical deputy of the Isle of Réunion, asked the Duc de Broglie if it was correct that he had said to M. Ducros, the bellicose Préfet of Lyons, a few days previously, that henceforth the Government would wage a war to the knife against Radicalism. The Duke replied, with studied impertinence, to the effect that Government had really nothing to do with his private actions, and was only responsible for what he did and said in public. A discussion upon the point immediately arose, terminating in the Duke's refusing to admit the right of any deputy to interpellate him for the sayings ascribed to him by gossiping newspapers. M. Beulé, in answer to a question of M. Journat's concerning the recent interdiction of the Industriel de l'Alsace in France, stated that that journal had been seized at the frontier for having used insulting language with reference to Marshal M'Mahon and the Assembly.

The Government has been disagreeably surprised this week by the enthusiastic reception given to M. Thiers at Belfort. The ex-President of the Republic had been expected only to remain an hour there, but the train in which he travelled from Paris having been delayed on the line he lost the one which was to have conveyed him to Geneva, and was induced to accept the pressing invitation of M. and Madame Kœchlin Schwartz to become their guest, and to remain in Belfort some eighteen hours. It was late in the evening when his arrival became known, but the inhabitants, determined to give the "great citizen" a suitable reception on the morrow, spent the entire night in covering their houses with garlands, flags, and inscriptions, and converting their streets into a succession of triumphal arches. The improvised fête commenced by a band of youths and maidens bearing flags, on which were inscribed "Pèlerinage de Reconnaissance," going, in their Sunday attire, to the house of M. Kœchlin to thank the "liberator of France," while a few minutes later the Orphéonists of all the adjacent villages arrived with colours flying and bands playing, and sang the "Marseillaise" and other patriotic songs under the windows. All day long deputations of ladies, tradespeople, working men, and the like came pouring in from Montbéliard, Mulhouse, Lure, Beaumont, and other adjacent localities, besides the thirty Municipal Councils, headed by their Mayors and adjoints, which waited upon the ex-President of the Republic in the course of the afternoon. General illuminations, fireworks, and a rétraite aux flambeaux brought the day's proceedings to its appropriate close. On Sunday morning M. Thiers arrived at Mulhouse, where the large crowd which had assembled to welcome him greeted him with enthusiastic shouts of "Long live Thiers, the Liberator of France!"

The Government has made known to the Radical members of the different Councils-General, by the voice of its semi-official organ, Le Français, that it is firmly resolved not to permit the session that has just opened to be the pretext for illegal demonstrations, and that it will know how to cause the laws and the National Assembly to be respected should any Council attempt to obey the suggestions of the organs of the Republican party. The Councils-General have just appointed their presidents, and the Republicans have learnt with great surprise that more than fifty, or upwards of one half, have elected partisans of the Monarchical cause, while the Royalist journals point to the fact as significant of the yearnings of France for the return of "her ancient monarchs."

The Court of Cassation has rejected in a very strongly-worded judgment the appeals of Baron Gaudré Boileau and M. Crampon against the sentence passed upon them in connection with the Transcontinental Memphis and Pacific Railway Company, of which they were the projectors, in conjunction with the notorious General Fremont, who was some time ago condemned, by default, to three years' imprisonment by the Paris Court for defrauding the shareholders of this bubble undertaking.

SPAIN.

Fluctuating accounts of the Republic and its fortunes continue to be telegraphed from Madrid, Barcelona, and elsewhere.

In the Cortes a bill has been approved for authorising the Government to call out 80,000 men of the reserve. In Wednesday's sitting of the Cortes Senor Castelar declared that, after all, the Republic must be saved, and that it is necessary to grant the Government the resources it requires in men and money. He also maintained that it was desirable to suspend the sittings of the Cortes and postpone the discussion of the Constitution. A bill authorising a loan to cover the accumulated deficit of the revolutionary period is before the Cortes. The first clause of it has been passed by a considerable majority. The Minister of Public Works is about to try a new system of fighting the International. He has submitted to the Cortes a proposal for the creation of juries of masters and workmen to settle labour questions.

The military tribunal at Seville has begun proceedings against the insurgents in that city by condemning two petroleurs to death. Generals Pavia and Turon, and other leading Government officers, have declared that they will resign if incendiaries are amnestied.

Fighting continues, and at some points it assumes grave dimensions. The Carlists besieging Bilbao have cannonaded two Spanish vessels, wounding an officer and several soldiers and sailors. They are also reported to have fired upon a French and an English vessel, killing one seaman on board the former. While the Carlist Committee is receiving news that Berga has been captured, together with 1500 prisoners, several pieces of artillery, and a large quantity of arms and ammunition, the very opposite assertion—that the Carlists have sustained a defeat at Balsaren, have abandoned their position before Berga, and are marching towards Suria—forms the substance of a Barcelona telegram. Advice received on Tuesday at Madrid state that the Carlists have entered Estella. In other parts they seem to be holding their ground and even extending their power and influence. But the accounts are too vague and conflicting to form a definite opinion from them. A Carlist Junta which contrived to establish itself at Alava has given the inhabitants a foretaste of the coming régime. By the same decree that it restored the fueros, or old municipal rights, it abolished civil marriages. A telegram from Barcelona, dated the 19th inst., announces that that city was then cut off from communication with the rest of Spain. A column of Government troops had had an engagement with the Carlists, taken the village of Gironella, and driven the enemy as far as Caserras, in Catalonia, to the north-west of Barcelona. The Carlists have seized the public funds at Chentada (Lugo), and carried off the Mayor and some landed proprietors.

The Government have caught an English yacht carrying arms for the Carlists, the Deerhound, the same steamer which successfully effected a landing of arms for them on the 23rd ult. The capture occurred off Fontarabia. A despatch from Paris states that a most careful investigation into the circumstances of the capture of the Deerhound by the Spanish navy shows that it was effected at a distance of eight miles from the French coast, and therefore entirely beyond French waters.

The Communist insurgents of Galicia, under a leader named Rios, are levying requisitions right and left, cutting off communication, and endeavouring to incite the Socialist peasantry of Portugal to join in their revolt against all constituted authority. A band of 1000 Communist insurgents have landed near Alicante and disappeared. A band of 400 or 500, having crossed at Carvalhos, encountered a Portuguese detachment, which drove them back, captured 123 of them, and frightened the rest into the mountains. The leaders have been sent to Lisbon, under a strong guard. It appears that, in the struggle between the Government and the insurgents, two parties of Galician Socialists have been disarmed, at a place near Pontevedra, by a column under Colonel Mendoza; 42,000 dols. of plundered specie were recovered from them. A band of fugitive insurgents from Valencia, after levying contributions upon Sax (Alicante), joined some other bands. The forces, thus united, then arrested the Mayor of Ibi and pillaged the place. At Carthagena, the Communist insurgents have contrived to float the frigates Numancia and Mendez Nunez, which were run aground in the attempt made by the insurgents to recover possession of the Almansa and Vittoria. It is announced from Madrid that the insurgents at Carthagena have thrown open the prisons and have armed 1800 convicts.

BELGIUM.

The Antwerp fêtes began on Monday. The King and Queen were entertained at a magnificent banquet given by the Chamber of Commerce. Their healths were drunk with great fervour, and in response his Majesty proposed "Prosperity to Antwerp." On Tuesday morning the King visited the maritime establishments and laid the foundation-stone of a hydraulic machine intended to facilitate lading and unlading of vessels. Afterwards twenty-seven of the co-operative societies marched past with their wagons laden with merchandise. Later in the day a Royal visit was paid to the salle in the Hotel de Ville, which had been decorated by Leys. This was the prelude to unveiling the statue of Leys. Next came a visit to the Zoological Gardens and the Gymnastic Society's hall, then with the Queen to the picture gallery. There M. de Keyser explained the mural paintings. The fête Venetienne on the Scheldt took place at night, forming a magnificent climax.

The members of the Iron and Steel Institute were cordially welcomed, on Monday, by the inhabitants of Liège, where the inaugural sitting was held in the afternoon. The congress combined business with pleasure on a large scale. Monday's festivities ended rather unfortunately, as the dampness of the weather caused the fireworks to be postponed. On Tuesday, after a morning meeting, the members were conducted over the principal public buildings of Liège. In the evening a series of receptions were held by private citizens, and at night there was a serenade on the Place du Théâtre. The King made a graceful recognition of the labours of the institute by inviting a hundred of the principal members to a banquet on Thursday. The dinner was followed by a conversation, at which all the members were invited.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

A new influx of autumn visitors into Vienna has commenced. The Prince and Princess of Saxony arrived on Wednesday, and were officially received at the railway station. They were conducted to the castle of Hetzendorf.

The prizes in connection with the Vienna Exhibition were distributed on Monday, and some particulars of the ceremony and a list of the diplomas of honour awarded to British exhibitors are given at page 182, in the letter from our Special Correspondent at Vienna. The firm of Messrs. Donald Nicoll and Co., who exhibited west of England cloths, was accidentally omitted from the list of prize awards. The medal of progress and the medal of merit have been awarded the Howe Machine Company. The Willcox and Gibbs Sewing Machine Company have also received the medal of merit. The British exhibitors at Vienna have subscribed £1500, in sums of from £1 to £20, as a testimonial to Mr. Philip Cunliffe Owen, Secretary of the British Commission, in recognition of his exertions and attention. The testimonial (consisting of candleabra and tazas by Elkington, and jewellery for Mrs. Owen, the remainder in a purse) will be presented in London on Oct. 1.

A general election of the Austrian Reichsrath will take place in October next, the Reichsrath to assemble on Nov. 5. This is the first election on the new system of direct votes.

The military re-organisation of the Austrian Empire has reached the frontier States, where the old feudal system survived almost in its integrity. An Imperial decree has been issued dissolving the last of the Croatian frontier regiments.

TURKEY.

The Shah arrived in the Straits of the Dardanelles on Sunday morning, and entered Constantinople the next day at noon. He was greeted with a Royal salute from the guns of the forts and a portion of the fleet. A large number of boats with Persian residents on board went to meet the Shah in the Sea of Marmora. The Sultan received his Majesty on board the yacht, and then conducted him to the Hezlerbey Palace, remaining with him there a quarter of an hour, and returning thence to Dolma Bagtche, where the Shah returned the visit shortly afterwards. The Persian Legation and the quarter in which it is situate were brilliantly illuminated in honour of the Shah's arrival. His Majesty appears to be living quietly at his quarters in the palace of the Dolma Bagtche. On Tuesday he gave a private dinner to the Diplomatic Corps.

RUSSIA.

The 30th of this month being both the Emperor's birthday and the "silver wedding-day" of the Grand Duke Constantine, it will be kept by the Russian Court with unusual splendour in Livadia. A telegram from St. Petersburg states that the Czar will shortly leave, to be present at certain military inspections in the south of Russia. He will then proceed to Livadia, where all the members of the Imperial family are to receive the Duke of Edinburgh. The marriage is to take place next January.

The inspectionary expedition among the Kirghese tribes has been entrusted to General Kryjanovsky, Governor-General of the Orenburg district.

Advices from Khiva give good report concerning the health of the Russian troops; and also state that the population of the Khanate is perfectly tranquil, displaying the greatest confidence in General Kaufmann's protection.

The military estimates for 1874 show an increase of 5,000,000 roubles as compared with those of 1873. The total amount is 174,290,000 roubles, and for the four following years the increase will be 10,000,000 roubles, the whole amount for each of those years being 179,290,000 roubles as compared with 169,290,000 roubles, which was the total of those of 1873.

DENMARK.

The Cesarewitch and Cesarevna, with the members of their family, arrived at Elsinore on Monday afternoon. They were received by the Royal family, and drove with them to Fredensborg. The Imperial Crown Prince of Germany arrived at Helsingfors on Sunday evening on a visit to the Court. He was received by the King and the President of the Council of Ministers, who conducted him to the castle of Fredensborg. A Court dinner was given on Tuesday. The King proposed the health of the Imperial Prince of Germany, warmly thanking him for his visit. The Prince, in reply to the toast, proposed the Royal family of Denmark, and the restoration of the old friendship between the houses of Denmark and Germany.

The King yesterday week rejected the petition for pardon forwarded by the Socialist leaders who were recently condemned to hard labour.

The Minister of Justice has issued a decree forbidding the formation of international working men's unions in Denmark.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

The King and Queen, who were enthusiastically received at Christiania on their return from Trondhjem, and were warmly welcomed at Carlstad, have returned to Stockholm, where a grand fête was again given, at which the Prince Imperial of Germany was present, and shared in the greetings of the populace for their newly-crowned Sovereign.

AMERICA.

Count Sclopis, the president of the Geneva Tribunal, has written a note accepting the testimonial presented to him by the United States Government. He says he rejoices at having been enabled to contribute to a work of great pacification.

The New York papers report a tremendous fire at Hunter's Point, Long Island, on the 3rd inst. Eight thousand barrels of oil, five barges, and four tanks were destroyed, and three lives are supposed to have been lost.

A passenger train on the Chicago and Alton Railway caught fire and broke down last Saturday. Six persons were killed and thirty-six were dangerously wounded, seven of whom have since died from the injuries they sustained.

The American mail brings word that a party of Indians had made an attack on a settlement at Old Camp Ground, Atlantic City, Wyoming, and killed two ladies. Troops went in pursuit.

The melancholy announcement that the steamer Abeona was sunk off Intrachall, on the night of the 4th inst., by the steamer Alabama, has been telegraphed from New York. Only three of the persons on board the Abeona were rescued. The steamer Abeona was, the Manchester Guardian says, a barque of 297 tons burden, and was built at Prince Edward Island in 1866. She was owned by Messrs. W. Killey and Co., of Liverpool, and when run down was on a voyage from Quebec to the Clyde with a cargo of wheat.

INDIA.

The Times' correspondent at Calcutta telegraphs that a proclamation has been issued in Bengal declaring the road cess rate in nineteen districts, and assuring the peasantry that no other cess is legal, and that men elected by the villagers themselves will spend the proceeds. The Government invites information regarding the cause of Hooghly fever and the condition of the peasantry.

The Viceroy notifies an inner line on the Eastern frontier which no British subject may cross without permission.

There have been heavy rains in Agra, destroying 3500 native houses.

CHINA.

A telegram from Vienna states that the Ameer of Kashgar has captured six large Chinese towns, and that the Emperor of China sued, in consequence, for peace, and sent to the Ameer large presents.

A great fire at Valparaiso has caused an estimated loss of half a million dollars.

The late earthquake in South America extended, it is stated, over 30,000 square miles.

The death is announced of M. Staelin, one of the most eminent of German historians and chief librarian at Stuttgart.

The equestrian statue of Mahommed Ali Pacha, erected in the grand square at Alexandria, was unveiled on Saturday last.

An international music festival has been held at Chambéry. No less than 110 choral societies announced their intention to take part in the competition.

The Brazilian Government has at last secured its treaty with Paraguay and the Argentine Republic, the signatures having been exchanged.

The Foreign Office have informed the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce that the Government objects to remove the British Legation from Tangiers to either Fez or Morocco.

Advices from Fiji report that a party of natives had attacked a neighbouring town, and massacred fifty-seven old men, women, and children. They were to be chastised by the King's troops.

Two Italian railway trains have come into collision on the Alta Italia line near Vergato. One person is reported to have been killed, while eleven were injured, eight of them seriously.

Four Colchester sailors—named respectively Turner Barnard, master of the smack New Unity, John Barnard, Harry Warren, and John Raynor—have been presented with silver medals by the Spanish Government for rescuing five Spanish seamen from the Spanish schooner Escanus, when on the Long Sand, in November, 1870.

According to a letter published in the Paris journal Figaro, the convicts on board the Virginie tried to lynch M. Rochefort when he was brought among them.

It appears from the Paris Budget which has recently been issued that the debt resting on the city is no less than 1600 million francs, or £64,000,000 sterling.

Advices received in Washington from Mexico represent the President as being anxious to renew diplomatic relations with England, France, and Belgium. The Ministers of Foreign Affairs and Finance have resigned.

The Jardin d'Acclimatation, says Galimani, has received a number of beavers from Canada, which have already begun to build their houses with wood given to them for the purpose. An inclosure has been made for them near the stables, but all the trees in the space have been surrounded with iron railings.

The romance of the Jersey Joint-Stock Bank has taken another startling development. Last Saturday night the chairman and two officers were arrested, but admitted to bail. Mr. Noel, the chairman, had also been Judge of the Royal Court, but his resignation was sent in soon after the failure of the bank.

A series of important conventions has been signed between Germany, Austria, Italy, and Switzerland. One, between Italy and Germany, abolishes passports and grants mutual rights in the two countries to commercial and financial associations. A second, between Austria and Italy, is intended to facilitate telegraphic intercourse. The others relate to extradition between Germany, Italy, and Switzerland.

Cholera has made its appearance in several districts of Bosnia. The Gazette contains a statement that competent authorities have officially notified that epidemic cholera exists in Stettin. It also contains notices that the Portuguese Government have declared the port of Venice and the cities of Memphis and Nashville, in the United States, to be "infected," the ports of Turkey, of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, and the ports of the Mississippi to be "suspected" of cholera morbus; and the ports of Sweden, Denmark, and Russia, in the Baltic, to be free from that disease.

The suit of Don Francisco d'Assis against Dona Isabella (ex-Queen of Spain) is to stand over till November. Meanwhile the plaintiff has applied to the Civil Tribunal of the Seine for an order obliging his consort to place in the hands of a receiver a sufficient sum to secure the regular payment of certain annuities which are chargeable on her estate to himself, the Prince of the Asturias, and each of the four Infantas. He accuses his wife of squandering her fortune in political enterprises and extravagant amusements. She was, he says, worth a million francs a year when she came to live in Paris, but since then her income has dwindled down to 500,000fr., and if she is allowed to go on as she seems inclined to do, she will in a few years be penniless.

The mail from the West Coast of Africa reports no change in the state of affairs at Cape Coast Castle. The Ashantees are still encamped close to Cape Coast Castle, and skirmishing continues between them and the Fantees. Private letters from the Gold Coast speak badly of its sanitary condition, but Admiralty advices are of a less alarming nature. The former allege that smallpox of a very virulent type was raging, and that the ordinary diseases of the coast were rampant. Commodore Commerell reports that the sick list of the Royal Marines is heavy with dysentery and fever, but that no smallpox has as yet been reported in the squadron. Colonel Sir Garnet Wolseley has been appointed to the government of the Gold Coast Settlement, together with the command of the troops on the coast. The appointment of Sir Garnet Wolseley may be taken as evidence that the Government has appreciated the importance of dealing vigorously with the Ashantee invasion and of providing against the recurrence of dangers which lately threatened Elmina and Cape Coast Castle. The appointment of Commander John Hawley Glover, R.N., to be special commissioner to the friendly native chiefs in the eastern district of the protected territories near or adjacent to Her Majesty's settlement on the Gold Coast is notified in the Gazette.

The eccentric Duke of Brunswick died at Geneva on Monday night, it is supposed from an attack of apoplexy. In his will he directs that his body shall be examined by five medical men, in order that they may ascertain whether he has been poisoned or not, and that it shall afterwards be embalmed or petrified. The executors are forbidden to make any compromise with his relatives, Prince William of Brunswick, the ex-King of Hanover, his son, the Duke of Cambridge, or any other member of the family. All his landed and personal property, including his jewels, are bequeathed to the city of Geneva. The value of the real property is estimated at £1,000,000 sterling. Mr. Smith, an Englishman, is nominated administrator-general, and receives a bequest of £40,000. The late Duke, born on Oct. 30, 1804, was the eldest son of Duke Frederick William; succeeded his father, under the guardianship of the Prince Regent, afterwards King George IV. of Great Britain, on June 16, 1815; and ascended the throne on Oct. 30, 1823. On the breaking out of a riot in the city of Brunswick, Sept. 8, 1830, he was obliged to flee from the duchy; and, by a resolution passed by the German Diet on Dec. 2 in the same year, he was declared "unfit to govern." His younger brother, William, the present Duke, succeeded him at the request of the Diet. The deceased Prince was well known in London, and was a frequent resident of Paris.

The Damascus correspondent of the Levant Herald gives an account of the work done by Lieutenant Conder, R.E., and his party, who are engaged in carrying out the objects of the Palestine Exploration Fund. They have not, he says, been "digging up Moabite stones or other sensational objects," but have done some good solid work. Of the 6600 square miles to be surveyed, 1800 are now completed, or 3-11ths of the whole area. The following are a few of their most recent discoveries:—1. Site of an unknown Jewish town. 2. Identification (probable) of Ecbatana. 3. Three groups of finely finished tombs, superior to the tomb of the Kings at Jerusalem; one of them has a kind of enamel and fresco inside. 4. Five fourth-century convents, hitherto unknown, with walls still standing. 5. Four other convents, in a less perfect state of preservation. The following places have also been recently visited and surveyed:—Athlit has been carefully surveyed and drawings made of its buildings for the first time. Caesarea has been carefully explored, plans made of all its buildings, and the aqueduct traced and examined for six miles. The temple has also been identified. Jimmath-Serah, the birthplace of Joshua, has been identified as Tibney. Plans have been made of Joshua's tomb, which was shown in the days of Jerome. Modin has been mapped and sketched, and plans made of the tombs of the Maccabees. Full details of all ruins are noted on the spot, such as the size of stone, character of mortar, and the architecture receives special attention, careful measurement being always made. Drawings are always made of the capitals and cornices. In this exhaustive manner every ruin in the country is treated, and already over 500 towns have been so noted.

On Tuesday the Duchess of Beaufort laid the foundation-stone of a new church at Wyesham, near Monmouth.

A superb tea and coffee service and a cruet-stand were presented to the Rev. J. T. Wilson, Vicar of Wroughtington, Lancashire, at a fête of the school in connection with that church.

The new church of St. Mary, Britannia-street, was consecrated for Divine service on Thursday by the Bishop of London. It is situated in a densely-populated neighbourhood, and contains about 500 free sittings. The architect is Mr. Christian.

The baldacchino case has assumed a serious aspect, the Church Association having joined issue on behalf of the dissenting parishioners. Dr. Stephens, Q.C., has been retained for them, and Mr. Moore, as their proctor, has filed objections, the gist of which is that a baldacchino would not be acceptable to them. The Vicar's proctor has received a fortnight to reply.

The biennial Welsh Choral Festival has been held this year at Llandaff Cathedral, the following being a list of the choirs which took part in it:—Cantoris—Gelligaer, 48; Tredegar, 26; St. Fagan's, Aberdare, 70; Cyfarthfa, 25; Dowlais, 86; Ystrad, 26; Ebbw Vale, 33; Maesteg, 16. Decani—Penydarren, 38; Merthyr Tydfil, 52; Rhyymney, 79; Pontlottyn, 28; Penmaen, 28; Aberdare (St. Mary's), 59; Cwmavon, 35; total, 686.

Two more Bishops have announced their views on the confessional. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, in a letter to the Dean of Gloucester, says:—"I am prepared to use, as, indeed, I have done already, my whole moral influence in preserving in full integrity the principles of the Reformation;" and the Bishop of Chichester, in reply to a memorial from Worthing, says:—"I shall certainly discourage such confession as the Church of Rome prescribes and practises, and such direction of conscience as she employs."

In September last, says the Guardian, we recorded the consecration of St. Giles's Church, Reading, after thorough restoration and enlargement; and we have now the pleasure of stating that the Vicar and the committee have been enabled to complete the whole scheme of restoration, and, by the addition to the tower of 23 ft. and the erection of a stone spire 110 ft. high (giving a total elevation of 176 ft.), to bring all portions of the church into harmony with each other, and to add a feature of great grace and beauty to the town and neighbourhood. Thursday week was the day appointed by the Lord Bishop of Oxford for the dedication of the tower and spire.

The parish church of All Saints, Frickley-cum-Clayton, near Doncaster, was reopened, on the 11th inst., by the Archbishop of York. This church has been almost entirely rebuilt and enlarged during the last twelve months by Mr. William Aldam, of Frickley Hall, in memory of his late wife. The arches of the north aisle, dating from the thirteenth century, and the Norman arch of the chancel, are, with the tower and a small part of the west wall, the only remains of the ancient fabric. The restoration has been carried out as far as possible in accordance with the original, the windows (except those in the chancel and south transept) being exact copies of those in the old church. The roof, which has been considerably raised, is entirely new, as are also the communion-table, pulpit, desk, lectern, and the larger part of the seats. Besides the restoration, a south transept has been added, to afford the requisite extra accommodation for about fifty persons. A vestry has also been erected on the south side of the chancel, and a baptistery (in which has been placed the ancient font) at the west end of the church. The building will now accommodate 220 persons. Mr. George Williams has been the architect, and the cost of the rebuilding will be about £2500.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

OXFORD.

The following gentlemen have been elected chaplains of New College:—The Rev. W. S. Leonard, M.A., Chaplain of Christ Church, Oxford; and the Rev. E. T. Stevens, B.A., Worcester.

The annual report of the Delegacy of Students of the University not attached to any college or hall, which was issued on Thursday week, shows the continued success of the system, which was begun in 1868. The delegates state that they are able to look back upon the past year with great satisfaction. The number of students whose names have been placed on their books in the year has been very large, amounting in all to 102. One of these was a Japanese, another an African from Sierra Leone. The conduct of the whole body throughout the period has been such as to make the disciplinary branch of the censor's duties exceedingly light. Hard work and careful living sums up the history of the great majority of these students. Consequently, they are, on the whole, successful in passing the ordinary examinations; and though the number that take honours is small, yet, if the honours taken by those students who have migrated to colleges be taken into account, the delegates feel that they have no ground for dissatisfaction on this important point. Since their statute was passed, in 1858, the delegates have entered 326 names on their books. Of these 247 matriculated as unattached students, and 79 (or just over 21 per cent of the whole) were received by migration. Of the 102 entries of this past year, 77 were by matriculation, 21 by migration, 4 replaced their names. The total number on the books of the delegacy at the end of the year is 171; of these 2 are Masters of Arts, 15 Bachelors of Arts, and 151 undergraduates. There were 142 undergraduate students in residence during the past term.

CAMBRIDGE.

Intelligence has reached Cambridge of the death of Professor Waymouth at Geneva, on Tuesday, from a sudden attack of fever. Mr. Samuel Waymouth was a Fellow of Queens', and graduated as Second Wrangler in 1869. In 1872 he was appointed to the Professorship of Mathematics in the University of Durham, which becomes vacant by his death.

The temporary county college has been organised, and students are in residence. The college is intended to offer facilities for completing education with a University course at an earlier age and at a less cost than at the existing colleges, the members of the county college becoming members of the University as unattached students. It is also intended to offer facilities for those intending to adopt teaching as a profession. Mr. S. S. Allnutt, of St. John's, is the tutor of the college, of whom all particulars may be obtained.

The Times announces that the office of Junior Esquire Bedell in the University is about to become vacant by the resignation of Mr. Robert Kalley Miller, M.A., Fellow of St. Peter's. Mr. Miller was First Smith's prizeman in 1867; but, in consequence of illness during the examination, was not classed in the Mathematical Tripos, where he was expected to be Senior Wrangler. His mathematical reputation, and the fact of his obtaining the Smith's Prize, was rewarded by a Fellowship, and he has resided since 1867, being engaged in tuition at his college, where he also filled the office of Junior Bursar and Assistant Tutor. Upon the resignation of Mr. Besant, of St. John's, in 1869, he became a candidate for the office of Esquire Bedell, being then only a Bachelor of Arts, and was elected, after a close contest with Mr. Leeson, of Downing. The duties of the Esquire Bedells, who are now only two in number—there were formerly three—consist of attending on the Vice-Chancellor, whom they precede with their silver maces, upon all public occasions and ceremonies, to receive the Graces in the Senate, and to act as masters of the ceremonies at the Congregations. The Senior Esquire Bedell has a salary of £280 per annum, and the Junior £200. The electors are the members of the Senate, the Council of the Senate nominating the candidates.

The Wardenship of Queen's College, Birmingham, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. T. E. Espin, B.D., Chancellor of Chester, has been conferred upon the Rev. Harman Chaloner Ogle, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford.

The Head Mastership of the Stafford Grammar School is vacant by the preferment of the Rev. C. A. Bower to the vicarage of Wolferton, near Tenbury.

The Rev. D. Edwards, M.A., late Mathematical Master of Hurstpierpoint, and Mr. A. Rowland Street, B.A., of Oriel, have been appointed assistant masters of St. Chad's, Denstone. Mr. Street was a First Class in Moderations and a Second in the Final School.

The Bishop of St. Asaph presided, on the 1st inst., at the distribution of prizes at the Ruthin Grammar School, and in the course of the proceedings it was announced that his Lordship had promised to give an annual divinity prize, in addition to the one which the Rev. G. Preston, Head Master, stated had just been established in honour of the founder. The speeches having been made, the Lord Lieutenant of the county said that there was every prospect of an additional endowment of £400 a year for the institution, which must be followed by a speedy increase to its buildings. There was a large attendance of visitors, and the proceedings were of a successful character.

THE MEDICAL COLLEGES.

St. Thomas's Hospital.—Summer Session, 1872.—First-year students: Peck, college prize, £15; Sandford, college prize, £10; Porter, college prize, £5. Second-year student: Rossiter, college prize, £15. Physical Society's Prizes: Palmer, third-year prize; Crossman, second-year prize; Poynders, first-year prize.

University College.—Winter Session.—Surgery: Gold medal, Houghton; first silver, Whittle; second silver, Gould. Anatomy and Physiology: Gold medal, Hobson; first silver, Trafford; second silver, Davies. Anatomy: Senior Class, gold medal, Pepper; first silver, Jameson; second silver, Edwards. Junior Class: Silver medal, Rees. Chemistry: Gold medal, Jones; first silver, Todd; second silver, Ryley. Medicine: Gold medal, Parakh; first silver (equal), Harvey and Appleyard. Comparative Anatomy: Gold medal, Pepper. Practical Physiology: Gold medals (equal), George and Rogers; silver medals (equal), Davies and Trafford. Clinical Medicine: Fellowes medals: Gold, Crocker; first silver, Davis; second silver, Eales. Junior Class: Fellowes silver medal, Elliott.

London Hospital.—Clinical Medicine: £20 scholarship, Kershaw. Clinical Surgery, £20 scholarship, Watson; honorarium, £15, Lang. Clinical Obstetrics: £20 scholarship, Watson. Dressers' Prizes for Zeal, Efficiency, and Knowledge of Minor Surgery: £15 prizes, Collenette, Chippingdale, and Brandum; £5 prizes, Price, Snell, and Needham. Baxter Scholarships: £30, Mears; £20, Fisher. Human Anatomy: £20 scholarship, Neylan. Anatomy, Physiology, and Chemistry, £25 scholarship, Fox.

At Guy's Hospital the treasurer's gold medal for medicine has been awarded to Mr. H. Ashby, and the gold medal for surgery to Mr. F. T. Paul. Mr. D. H. Forty has carried off the first third-year student's prize, Mr. H. F. Lancaster the first second-year student's prize, and Mr. J. B. Waterhouse the principal first-year student's prize.

At Charing-cross Hospital the Llewellyn Scholarship has been awarded to Mr. G. Brown, the Goldney Scholarship to Mr. H. A. Wickers, and the gold medal to Mr. G. Brown.

The Broderip Scholarship, at the Middlesex Hospital, for the best examination at the bedside and in the post-mortem room has been adjudged to Mr. J. J. Kirby (first) and Mr. Arthur Tomes (second).

The Dawlish railway station was burned to the ground yesterday week.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The account of sport on the various Scotch moors is even worse than we anticipated it would be last week. The long-talked-of "twelfth" was very wet, and sixty brace was the largest number that fell to any single gun. In Perthshire many sportsmen had to make the melancholy return of "no effects;" and in Inverness the birds that were shot were terribly out of condition. Very small bags were the order of the day in Caithness-shire, Forfarshire, Elginshire, Mid-Lothian, and Dumfriesshire; while in Selkirkshire and Ayrshire birds were so scarce that few gentlemen even attempted to shoot. In some parts of Aberdeenshire fair sport was enjoyed, but in others the disease has made sad ravages. The weather was very unfavourable in Argyleshire, and most of the grouse killed proved to be in poor condition. Things were far more cheerful on the York-shire moors, as the weather was beautiful, and bags of fifteen and twenty brace were quite common. Many of the birds, and particularly the old ones, had suffered from the prevailing disease, but not to a sufficient extent to affect the sport very much.

The great pointer and setter grouse trials which took place at Bala last week attracted a very large attendance of shooting men. They took place on the moors belonging to Mr. Lloyd Price, who most generously sacrificed his shooting for the season. The Penlyn Stakes, on the first day, fell to Mr. Macdonald, with his very clever pair, Ranger (setter) and Squire (pointer). On the Thursday the Puppy Stakes was divided between Mr. Statter's Dick and Mr. Lloyd Price's Ginx's Baby, both pointers; and the Rhiwlas Stakes, which brought the meeting to a close, went to Mr. Price's Belle, perhaps the most perfect pointer in England, who beat Mr. Macdonald's Ranger.

Some very fair racing took place last week at four or five different meetings. At Wolverhampton Sugarcane had great difficulty in beating the much-improved St. Patrick, and this close finish foreshadowed the run of ill-luck that was in store for "Mr. Fisher's" hitherto invincible team of two-year-olds. Chivalrous won two races very easily at Stockton, but he had nothing to beat; Napoleon III. cut up very badly in the Lambton Plate; and, though Lily Agnes had no trouble in conceding 12lb. to Padoroshna, Sugarcane was easily beaten in attempting to give her 6lb. more. The smart Speculum fillies—Memoria and Mirror—both won their engagements, the former securing the Hardwicke Stakes, though Organist, who had a 9lb. penalty, and got off rather badly, ran her pretty close. Egham may be passed over with the remark that Selsca Bill at length showed some of the form with which he has always been credited; and the Berkshire Cup was the most interesting event at Windsor. It furnished one more proof of the wretched quality of the Oaks field, for Oxford Mixture, who was clearly second best at Epsom, could make no fight with Trombone, though actually in receipt of 18lb.

A heavy rain fell steadily during the whole of our journey to York, but ceased when we got there, and the afternoon on Knavesmere was very bright and enjoyable. The great event of the day was the appearance of Marie Stuart in the York-shire Oaks. She was naturally submitted to very severe criticism, and the opinions expressed were by no means favourable, as she is deficient in muscle, and has grown rather "up in the air" since Ascot. Of course she could not help winning from the moderate trio opposed to her; but Osborne had to use his spurs, and her tail whisked about in a very suspicious manner from the distance. Altogether, we fancy she had not too much in hand, and if the St. Leger goes to Russley it will be by the aid of Doncaster. Pantomime completely dissipated any ideas of Doncaster honours for Mendip by beating him cleverly over two miles, though the wretched Queen's Scholar was so close up that even the winner must be very moderate. The defeat of Atlantic by Tipster in the Convivial Stakes was a sad blow to backers, who freely laid 2 to 1 on Lord Falmouth's colt. We are always loth to impute any blame to a jockey; but in this instance we cannot help thinking that Morris was unprepared for Chaloner's desperate rush on Tipster, and that, had he made more use of Atlantic in the last hundred yards, the result would have been different. In the Prince of Wales's Stakes, Lily Agnes, who is undoubtedly the best two-year-old filly in training, won her third race "off the reel" with consummate ease. Unfortunately, she has no further engagements, or Mr. Snarry (Sir Tatton Sykes's stud groom) might almost ask his own price for her. Though a field of thirteen contested the Ebor Handicap, the majority of them were exceedingly moderate, and the result, as was indicated by the betting, proved a mere match between Louisa Victoria (6st. 13lb.) and Shannon (8st. 5lb.), the former winning easily by a length, and thus at last losing her maidenhood. She is own sister to Albert Victor, who won this same race last year with 27lb. more on his back, and has previously run seven times without success, though on five of these occasions she finished second. Sir William Wallace had no trouble in securing a Biennial, as Sugarcane, who has had too much of it of late, is out of all form.

The Royal Albert Yacht Club Regatta was commenced at Southsea on Monday last, when unusually valuable prizes were competed for. Her Majesty presented a magnificent cup, of the value of 100gs., which was won by Prince Bathyan's Kriemhilda, which has lately carried all before her. The Pantomime won a £60 cup for schooners belonging to the R. A. Y. C., and a 50-guinea cup for cutters of forty tons or under fell to the Myosotis.

Cricketers seem to feel that they have not much more time this season, and are making the most of the few days that remain. Last week Gloucestershire defeated Yorkshire by five wickets. As might have been expected, the scoring was very heavy on both sides. Mr. E. M. Grace (64), Mr. T. G. Matthews (76), and Mr. G. F. Grace, not out (165), did most of the run-getting for the winners; while Smith (41 and 27), Emmett (104), and Lockwood (55 and 30) all batted well. It is noticeable that there was not a single professional in the Gloucestershire team nor one gentleman among their opponents. The return match between Yorks and Notts ended in a draw, the play being stopped by rain; the scoring was small on both sides. The Surrey team has wound up the county matches with a victory over Kent by 61 runs. Jupp batted as effectively as usual for 76 and 20, and Southerton's bowling and Mr. Game's fielding were remarkably good. G. Willis (60) was the top scorer for Kent, and his brother, W. Willis (39), also played well.

The swimming championship of England was contested in the Serpentine, on Monday morning, in the presence of an immense crowd. The competitors were the present champion (J. B. Johnson), Harry Parker, and Peter Johnson. The race (one mile) was won easily by J. B. Johnson, in 30 min. 8½ sec.

On Saturday last a bicycle match between Surrey and Middlesex took place. The course was from London to Brighton and back, and each county had six representatives. Mr. Wood, of Middlesex, came in first, accomplishing the distance in eleven hours eight minutes; but Surrey won the cup, as her representatives were second, third, fourth, and fifth.

The Foresters had their annual fête at the Crystal Palace, on Tuesday, which was attended by 68,000 persons.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

Dr. Kenealy, in finishing his analysis of the defendant's cross-examination yesterday week, expressed to the jury a hope that he had not been tedious and prolix. He could not, he said, close his eyes to the fact that a very strong case had been made out against his client, but he was equally convinced that the evidence he should bring forward would dispel every doubt as to the identity of the man. He then proceeded to comment on the Orton theory, which he believed had arisen chiefly from the maniacal act of the defendant in visiting Wapping. As an illustration how unsatisfactory Miss Loder's evidence had been, he averred that she had only said he was like Arthur Orton. Mr. Justice Lush interposed that she had sworn positively to him. The other Wapping witnesses were passed in review by the learned counsel, who thought it very remarkable that none of them had been in Arthur Orton's company more than half an hour.

The proceedings opened on Monday with a refreshing joke, one of the thousand-and-one correspondents of the Lord Chief Justice having suggested that the Claimant should allow himself to be interrogated under mesmerism. Dr. Kenealy "plodded his weary way" through the long calendar of Wapping witnesses, bestowing on each a passing compliment. Regarding most of them he assumed that it was hardly necessary to say much in disparagement of their evidence, its flimsy nature, if not its positive bias, was so palpable. When the Court adjourned he was dealing in a similar manner with the South American witnesses. The Times states that the Claimant's attorney has retired from the case, and on Monday the Claimant appeared in court without any attorney. It is stated, however, that another gentleman has been retained.

In summing up his observations on the Wapping witnesses, on Tuesday, Dr. Kenealy detected what he thought a striking coincidence in the evidence as to Arthur Orton's twitch of the eyes and Roger Tichborne's. He affirmed that this twitching had been a peculiarity of the Tichborne family, and also of the Doughtys. He himself had seen it half a dozen times in Lily Radcliffe while she was in the witness-box. On proceeding to M. Chabot's evidence, Dr. Kenealy was lamenting that his client had not money enough to employ a counter-expert, when the Lord Chief Justice said he understood that the Treasury were to pay the expenses of witnesses for the defence whom the Judges thought had been properly called. Mr. Gray, the solicitor to the Treasury, intimated his belief that there was such an intention.

Dr. Kenealy was occupied on Wednesday in endeavouring to prove that defendant's handwriting was a "revivification of the old French hand of Roger's boyhood." He produced a photograph, contending that it contained a "genuine Tichborne T," made with two strokes of the pen, while the "Orton T" was always made with one stroke. Mrs. M'Allister's book, "The Rivals," was put in to call the attention of the jury to a word in the inscription, which Dr. Kenealy said had been forged. This led to a close examination of the inscription by the Lord Chief Justice, who discovered distinct traces of "Arthur Orton" above the address. He inferred that Mrs. M'Allister, finding Orton's name there, had scratched it out.

On Thursday Dr. Kenealy concluded his speech, and called his first witness. The subject of handwriting was resumed; and, having dealt with the resemblances in the defendant's two written versions of the sealed packet to Roger's writing, Dr. Kenealy commented on the internal contradictions which the Lord Chief Justice had incidentally alluded to on a former occasion. With respect to the Castro pocket-book, he contended that the famous quotation from Miss Braddon's "Aurora Floyd," about a man with no money and plenty of brains, was a forgery. The address "Tichborne Hall" was undoubtedly written by the defendant, but "Surrey" was clearly another forgery. If the defendant were an impostor who studied the Illustrated London News at Wagga-Wagga about the family history it was not likely he would have made such a mistake. Having exhausted the question of handwriting, the learned counsel went to the internal evidence, and strove to show that there was a remarkable identity of thought, sentiment, grammar, phrase, and expression between the writings of Roger and the defendant. Dr. Kenealy, in concluding his speech, said that against all that had been proved and said he relied upon the maternal instinct, which was as eternal and all-subduing as the human heart and soul—the instinct which demonstrated to Lady Tichborne that this man was her son—a true and perfect instinct which they ought to respect, venerate, and act upon; and he called upon the jury, in the name of that divine instinct, to find, as he hoped they would, and by so doing delight the whole of England, and to say by their verdict that the defendant was Roger Charles Tichborne.—The first witness called was William Warrington, a sergeant in the Rifle Brigade, employed at Westminster in recruiting, who spoke as to the height (5 ft. 9 in.) of the defendant, whom he measured on July 15.

Mr. Baron Bramwell, the senior Judge on the Norfolk Circuit, has appointed Mr. C. G. Prowett to be a revising barrister on that circuit.

A power-loom weaver, named Bates, obtained a verdict for £300 against the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, on Monday, for injuries received by him in a collision at Lowmoor. At the Liverpool Assizes on Wednesday, the widow of a Chorley collier who was killed by an accident on the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway was awarded £1000 damages, and a publican named Banks, of Preston, got £200 for injuries sustained in a collision on the same line. At the Leeds Assizes, George Naylor recovered £210 damages against the same company for loss sustained by the death of his son, a teamster in a colliery, who was killed on a level crossing at Heckmondwike. At the Bristol Assizes, Miss Julia Evangelina Vyse, draper's assistant, recovered £500 damages for injuries sustained through having been knocked down by a train which was being shunted over a level crossing at the Bristol station of the Great Western.

The August session of the Central Criminal Court began on Monday. A youth of nineteen, named Harding, a clerk, was sentenced to five years' penal servitude by Mr. Commissioner Kerr, on Tuesday, for stealing cheques from his employer to the amount of about £300. On hearing the sentence, the wife, who was in court, fainted, and had to be carried out. The Goldsmiths' Company have failed to obtain a conviction against Edward Hill, the young man who was charged with the possession of a base ring having a forged imitation of the hall mark. The defence was that Hill had believed the ring to be genuine. The jury returned a verdict of "Not guilty." The trial of Austin Biron Bidwell, George Macdonnell, George Bidwell, and Henry Noyes, charged with forgeries on the Bank of England, whereby they defrauded that establishment of upwards of £100,000, is proceeding.

Arthur Baynes was fined 40s. at the Guildhall, yesterday week, for attempting to enter a train of the Metropolitan District Railway while in motion, £5 for assaulting the guard, £3 for damages done to the guard's coat, and £2 for costs.

Mr. George Billingsley, of Greenwich, was fined £20 at the Guildhall, yesterday week, for sending four cases of ship's rockets by the London and North-Western Railway without giving notice in writing to the company, and without marking them on the outside.

Mr. Younghusband Christian, who has for some time carried on business as a stockbroker at the Royal Exchange, London, was brought before Alderman Sir R. Carden, yesterday week, on a warrant which charged him with unlawfully misappropriating a cheque for £336 that had been intrusted to him by Mrs. M. A. Spooner, the widow of the late Professor Spooner, of the Royal Veterinary College, for the purchase of three Japanese bonds. Sir R. Carden remanded the prisoner, and refused an application made to admit him to bail.

M. Eugene Delessert (who was secretary to the late Emperor Napoleon III.) was robbed of his watch in the Strand on Friday se'nnight. He seized hold of the thief, who, before a constable came up, placed the watch in M. Delessert's coat pocket. The thief was brought up at Marlborough-street Police Court, on Saturday, and sentenced to six months' hard labour.

A butcher residing in Cable-street, Whitechapel, was fined 50s. and costs on Tuesday, at the Thames Police Court, for using his cellar as a slaughter-house without a license.

William Bailey, late secretary to the Court Masons' Pride and Court Rose of Illey, of the Ancient Order of Foresters, has been committed for trial at the Westminster Police Court on the charge of embezzling moneys belonging to the society.

For violently assaulting his wife, a man named Pollard has been sentenced to four months' hard labour, and at the expiration of this term he is to find sureties for good behaviour.

Amos Francis, who described himself as the house steward of the Paddington Infirmary, was fined £5 at Marlborough-street, on Wednesday, and committed for a month for an assault on a police constable.

Mrs. Fletcher, alias Mrs. Cox, is being prosecuted at Worship-street for making a false declaration on a marriage certificate. Her own account of the transaction is that Cox, her first husband, had proved "a bad lot," and after he had disappeared for seventeen years she married Fletcher under the name of Mary Lane. Cox brought an action against his successor for detaining his wife, and, the marriage certificate having been produced in court, the woman acknowledged the signature. She was charged with bigamy before the Westminster police magistrate, who had no jurisdiction, as the marriage had been celebrated at Hackney. A new charge was then laid against her at Worship-street of making a false entry in the certificate. She was remanded on bail.

At the Greenwich Police Court, on Wednesday, Miss Hannah Bruster was fined £10 and costs for neglecting to furnish a supply of water to the closets of a block of twenty-five houses in Hatcliffe-street, of which she is the owner.

Robert Hodson, lately cashier and salesman to Messrs. Thornely and Pownall, cotton-brokers, was sentenced, at the Liverpool Assizes, on Saturday, to ten years' penal servitude for forging the name of his employers to a cheque for £1000.

The last of the alleged personation cases at Gloucester, that of M'Coy, has broken down. When it was called upon at the assizes, on Thursday week, the counsel for the prosecution stated that, after a careful examination of the evidence, he could not ask the jury to say that M'Coy had acted with any guilty intention. By direction of the Judge, the jury at once found a verdict of "Not guilty."

Patrik Brannan was charged at the Dewsbury (West Riding) Police Court, on Monday, under the thirty-fourth rule of the Mines Regulation Act, with neglecting and refusing to extinguish his lamp, which was damaged, whilst in the Morley Main Colliery. He was sentenced to two months' imprisonment, with hard labour. An explosion of firedamp occurred in this mine in October, 1872, by which thirty lives were lost.

A doctor and a farm servant from Udney were fined, the former £3 and the latter 30s., in the Aberdeen Sheriff's Court, on Monday, for the parts taken by them in a scene in their parish church on a recent Sunday. During service the ploughman attempted to enter the doctor's pew, and, meeting with resistance, clambered into it from the back. Here he was grappled with, and the congregation were for some time edified by the spectacle of a wrestling bout between the pair.

James Nicholas, one of the Dublin Court officials, pleaded guilty at Dublin, on Saturday, to two indictments of embezzlement from the Inland Revenue Office, and was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment.

Three boys, charged with causing the death of a lamb, under peculiarly barbarous circumstances, were sentenced, on Monday, to several degrees of punishment, by Mr. Nicholson, at Highgate. The worst offender, a young savage named Woodcote, was sent to hard labour for three months; another had one month, and a third fourteen days.—The young woman who was found dead in a field at Ham, near Richmond, on Thursday week, has been identified as Hannah Browning, a housemaid at Burlington House School, Richmond. An inquest was held on Saturday evening, and the jury returned a verdict "that the deceased died from self-strangulation, inflicted while in a state of unsound mind."—Deciding that there was not sufficient evidence to convict, in the case of the Frenchwoman who has several times been examined on the charge of poisoning her baby at Rouen, Sir Thomas Henry on Saturday discharged the prisoner.—"Homicide by misadventure" was the verdict found by the Coroner's jury, after inquiry into the circumstances of the melancholy accident at Tolworth Farm, by which Annie Sanders, a servant girl, lost her life through the inept handling of a loaded gun, by a lad named Albert Evans.—A young farmer named Butt, at Arlingham, near Gloucester, whose attentions to Miss Phipps, the daughter of a neighbouring farmer, were not favourably received, shot her in the face, causing instantaneous death. It is believed that Butt has drowned himself.—James Connor, a boiler-maker, was on Monday found guilty of murder at Liverpool, he having stabbed one James Gaffney, who interfered to prevent the ill-treatment of a woman with whom Connor was quarrelling. Sentence of death was passed on the prisoner by Mr. Justice Brett.—Lawrence Smith, a blind man, was hanged at Cavan on Saturday morning for the murder of a man named Lynch, on July 3.—Edward Walsh, who murdered his wife on April 27 last, was hanged at Castlebar on Tuesday morning.

There are fifty-eight notices of motion on the order book of the House of Commons for next Session.

Commander John O'Reilly, Governor of the Naval Knights of Windsor, died, yesterday week, at his residence, Travers College, at the advanced age of eighty.

The first of Captain Hans Busk's life-ships is completed, and will be launched to-day (Saturday) at the Oak Bank building-yard, Southampton. Its name is to be the Peronelle.

MUSICAL PITCH.

Mr. Sims Reeves has written a long letter to Mr. R. Peyton, the orchestral steward of the Birmingham Musical Festival, to protest against the recent raising of the pitch of the Birmingham grand organ. "I have," he says, "waged war for years against our present most unreasonable musical pitch. No one can be more disposed than I to vindicate the claims to musical taste and feeling of this country, but I cannot arrogate to it the monopoly of wisdom. It is a simple matter of fact that the normal diapason accepted at Vienna, Paris, Berlin, Brussels, Naples, Florence, &c., is one and the same, and considerably lower than the British. Mlle. Patti—or, should I rather say, Madame la Marquise de Caux?—declined a re-engagement at Covent Garden, last season, save on the express condition that the general musical standard of the world, with one or two exceptions, should be adopted. Her wish was complied with, and all the instruments were modified accordingly. The argument put forward to prevent the adoption of the normal pitch has always been that such a course would involve the manufacture of new instruments, &c. This seems to be quite forgotten when the change is to be made in the wrong direction. Again, it has been alleged that, with a lower pitch than the present, military bands could not be employed. It would be a pity to impair the brilliancy of the famous Austrian bands or of our own, for which a certain martial character is highly desirable, by restricting them to the pitch of the Viennese Conservatoire; but it would be surely a still greater mistake to make the grand orchestras of the world, or the organs, the humble followers of the military bands, in order to obtain a very occasional advantage. I know that almost all artists of note think with me in this matter, and see too plainly that, unless a stand is made, the present evil state of things will be perpetuated or even heightened for many years to come."

The first horticultural show of the People's Garden Company took place last Saturday afternoon, at Old Oak-common, near Willesden Junction, and proved a complete success. The company was formed a year or two ago for the purpose of securing gardens and recreation grounds affording its shareholders and members, irrespective of class or country, healthy and rational open-air amusement. In furtherance of this object fifty acres of land were acquired about half a mile from the junction of the London and North-Western with the North London line at Willesden, and for some time a large portion of the ground has been in actual use by the members. Well-stocked flower-beds, croquet-lawns, a bowling-green, a gymnasium, an immense circular platform for dancing, with an orchestra in the centre, a spacious room for balls and concerts, and a good refreshment department, form, with other appliances of a kindred character, an attractive whole of which the members have this summer shown practical appreciation by frequent visits.

The Gardener's Magazine states that the fruit crop of 1873 will be less in amount than was anticipated at the time the trees were in bloom; nevertheless, it is somewhat in excess of the estimate many experienced cultivators arrived at when May 20 dawned, and it was found that the crop had been for some hours exposed to from 10 deg. to 20 deg. of frost. The loss consequent on that sudden and extreme lowering of temperature has proved less general than was feared, and hence we find in districts where late frosts usually do much mischief heavy crops of fruit in gardens that enjoy some peculiarities of shelter, while around them, perhaps, the walls are bare, and standard trees show very few fruits. In the western counties, where the frost of May 19-20 was less severe, and the incipient fruits were sheltered with a thick screen of foliage, there is plenty of fruit, but, taking the country through, we find that the tender kinds of fruits are plentiful in many places and scarce in others close adjoining.

The revolution which is going on in other railways with regard to the passenger traffic is strikingly shown in the report of the North Eastern. The Railway News states that the number of first-class passengers carried last half-year was 559,673, while in the corresponding half of last year the number was 588,666, being a decrease of 28,993; while the fares from this class of passengers were slightly higher, being £89,733 against £86,255, the explanation being that the first-class passengers of last half year travelled longer distances than in the previous year. Second-class passengers have fallen off in number from 1,544,024 to 878,843, and the receipts from £115,476 to £71,821, being a reduction in numbers of 665,181, or nearly fifty per cent, and in receipts of £43,655. Passengers of the third class have availed themselves to an extraordinary extent of the facilities afforded by running third class with every train. Not only have the occupants of second-class carriages transferred themselves to the third, but the working or usual third-class passengers have increased to an extent which can only be explained by the great increase in the prosperity of the country. The number of third-class passengers carried last half-year was 9,758,425, as compared with 7,361,209, and the receipts from them have advanced from £297,631 to £408,452.

The Welsh National Eisteddfod was opened on Tuesday at Mold, in a large pavilion erected near the county hall. The building was capable of holding 5000 persons, but, owing to the weather, there were not more than 2000 present. Mr. Gladstone, as president, delivered the inaugural address. He reviewed the conduct of the English Government in respect to Wales, showing that since the revolution, until a few years ago, it had been the Imperial policy to fill ecclesiastical appointments in that county with Englishmen; that the English Government endeavoured to hector the Welsh people into the abandonment of their language, but they had clung to it with a fidelity absolutely unexampled, because it had been for them a feeling not of language merely, but of patriotism, and this, he said, was a great lesson, which Governments might apply to all subjects. While, however, respecting the ancient traditions and language of Wales, which it is the object of the Eisteddfod to preserve from decay, the Premier urged the study, at the school and in the home, by every Welshman, "of the tongue which is and must ever be the prevailing tongue of the country—that noble, glorious English tongue, which is going forth over the face of the earth, from land to land, and which is at this moment spoken by a greater number of human beings than any other tongue of the civilised nations of the world." Mr. Gladstone proceeded to Liverpool on Tuesday and spent some time with his brother, Mr. Robertson Gladstone. He subsequently left by the north mail train from Lime-street for Balmoral.

The Gardener's Chronicle says:—"We have had sent to us by Mr. Alfred Smee during the last week a huge fungus, found growing parasitically upon the pitch pine joists of the Bank of England, in Threadneedle-street. The entire growth was so large that when packed in a box for transit it was as much as two strong men could carry. The largest piece was no less than 6 ft. 3 in. in circumference, 7 in. thick, and weighed 32 lb., growing upon a piece of joist weighing 6 lb. The fungus will be shown at the forthcoming fungus exhibition of the Royal Horticultural Society on Oct. 1."

BASIL WERESCHAGIN.

Basil Wereschagin, the Russian artist whose pictures of scenery and costumes in Central Asia have lately been exhibited at the Crystal Palace, was born in 1812, in the province of Novgorod. Having completed the ordinary studies at the Naval School of St. Petersburg, which he quitted as first scholar, he became a cadet of the Marines. In 1839, while on active service, he visited Copenhagen, Bordeaux, Portsmouth, and other ports of Western Europe. From Portsmouth he came to London, and so gained his first acquaintance with the English people. In 1860 he was promoted to the rank of an officer, but thereupon left the service, being desirous to gratify his taste for drawing. For this he had shown a disposition from early childhood, when he used to fill whole sheets of paper with his first artistic efforts. He had already for two years attended the Academy of Fine Arts at St. Petersburg, where, after leaving the service, he remained three years more. Having won the silver medal there and established his reputation as an artist, he quitted the routine course of academical work and started, in 1863, on his travels through the Caucasus. During his travels in the region of the Caucasus and Trans-Caucasia he frequently took an active part in the busy, stirring scenes around him. He returned with his albums filled with vivid and faithful sketches. M. Wereschagin spent the winters of 1864, 1865, and 1866 in Paris, where he studied under Gérôme; but he passed the summer months in travel, partly in Trans-Caucasia, on the borders of Persia and Turkey, but partly on the Danube, or in different countries of Europe, and partly in Russia. Working from the studies or sketches he had made in his Russian travels, he began a large picture at Paris in 1867. It was "The Burlak (raftsman) on the Volga." This picture, however, he did not finish, as the energy of his nature required a more active field of exercise. He gladly accepted the kind offer of the Governor of Turkistan, General Kaufmann (the General who commanded the late Russian expedition to Khiva), to visit Central Asia. During the first visit of Wereschagin to Central Asia, in 1868, he was with the garrison besieged in Samarkand, which had already been captured by the Russians. They were attacked in that city by a horde of Shakhri Sebsians, Kipchaks, and others. The emergency of this siege converted the artist into a soldier for the time. Lying aside the paint-brush, he shouldered a gun, and repeatedly led the soldiers in repelling the attacks of the enemy. For his brave and skilful conduct on this occasion he received the highest Russian military order. Afterwards, in his residence at Paris, he worked up into pictures several of his studies, among which was that of "The Opium-Eaters," exhibited at the South Kensington International Exhibition of last year, with one or two others. These pictures were also exhibited in St. Petersburg, where they excited keen interest and general approval. In 1869 the artist undertook another journey to Central Asia through Siberia to China and Kokand. While on the borders of Chinese territory he again wielded the bayonet in contests with the wild Taranchis. On one occasion he was surrounded by a number of Taranchis, and barely escaped with his life, having made a fortunate use of his pocket revolver. He passed part of the spring of 1870 in Kokand, the summer in Samarkand, and the autumn in the Thian Shan Mountains. Since the year 1871, M. Wereschagin has worked at Munich, where he has arranged a studio in which he can work en plein soleil. In this way he has introduced some novel artistic effects. By placing the models for his pictures in the full rays of the sun, he is able to give the effect of outdoor sunlight with a result impossible to be produced in the subdued light of an ordinary artist's studio.

The portrait of M. Wereschagin is given this week; and two of his pictures at the Crystal Palace are represented by our Engravings—namely, "The Celebration of Victory" and the "Kirghese Camp." Of these subjects, and others dedicated by the Russian artist-traveller, it has been lately written:—"It is only after examining M. Wereschagin's studies that we can appreciate the value of his pictures as records of a little-known region, of unfamiliar and strangely-blended races of uncouth nomenclature—Kirghiz, Solone, Dungan, Uzbek, Kipchak, Sart, Tadjik, and Sibo—and of a life divided between the peaceful occupations of the cattle-breeding nomad and the savagery of the irremediable freebooter. We are introduced to the humble originals of two widespread Eastern architectural types in the domed and felt-covered steppe habitation of the Kirghese and the long tent of the Kalmuck, whose ridge, with one end of the covering propped up, at once for air and shade, foreshadows and fixes the familiar outline of the Chinese roof. We assist at the migrations of the Tartar herdsmen, with their long-haired, two-humped camels and their laden cattle, from the steppes to the snow-line with the changing seasons. We listen to the gossip of the ragged Tashkend street politicians, and the howlings of unkempt begging dervishes, with their conical caps, patched robes, and contribution calabashes. We behold the forts constructed by Russia at once as curbs on conquered but still warlike populations, and as stepping-stones to wider conquest. M. Wereschagin was present at all the incidents he has painted. He was one of the assailed in the 'Unexpected Attack,' in which we see the Russians, with their white blouses, in rallying squares, forming or formed against the swarms of Tartar horse which hem them in on the mountain-girt plain. He was in the march of the detachment which left behind it many such ghastly derelicts as the poor dead soldier over whom the kites and ravens are busy. He passed by many of the pyramids of skulls raised by Timour as trophies of conquest, and the like of which are still built up by his successors out of the hideous tributes of heads which we see, bruised and blackened by sun and wind, paid down before the Emir in his palace of Samarkand, or set on poles as a text for the Moolahs to preach from before the great mosque of the Tartar capital. If M. Wereschagin did not actually take part in such pious exercises as the thanksgiving for victory over the Russians at the green-stone tomb of Timour, in the great mosque where the famous Tartar conqueror lies buried at the feet of his tutor, he studied on the spot both the worshippers and the finely-carved marbles and tile decorations of mosques and tombs. And he entered with the Russian soldiers into Samarkand, as they felt their way, with all precautions against surprise, into the fortress which they had won at such a cost to both conquerors and conquered."

Mr. Jenkins, one of the defeated candidates at the recent Dundee election, was on Tuesday presented with a piece of plate and a cheque for £1000. Mr. Jenkins, in acknowledging the gift, stated that he would very probably solicit their sacrifices at the general election.

The Scotsman states that the Festival of the Assumption was commemorated in Glasgow by a grand procession of Irish Catholics, which marched from the Green to Eastmuir, and there the persons composing it passed resolutions engaging not to vote for any candidate who was not pledged to support Home Rule. A Home Rule demonstration was also held at Coatbridge on Saturday. The Mossend contingent, on its return home, was assailed and put to flight in the streets of Motherwell by an Orange mob.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The annual prize meeting of the London Irish was held on Saturday last at Milton next Gravesend, on the Government ranges. The first competition was for a series of prizes given by Prince Arthur, the Marquis and Marchioness of Duncannon, Earl Spencer, the Earl of Belmore, Colonel Ward, Majors Furnival and Percell, Lieutenant Inglis, Messrs. O'Connell and Grant, and the shooting committee and dramatic club of the regiment. The first prize of £12, together with the honorary possession of the challenge cup, was won by Captain Evans, Private Hockaday taking £8. The other winners in this class were Messrs. Despard, Wilkinson, Davis, Bastock, McKenzie, P. Osborn, Burrows, Jones, Egan, Roberts, Sheppard, Clifford, White, Mewett, Harrison, Twigg, Dobinson, Butler, Brown, Hepionth, Adkins, Tidman, Westwood, Walsh, and Scott. The C series (consolation prizes) were won by Messrs. Smith, Wilson, Lawler, Brown, Lewes, Inglis, and Brown. The donors to this class were Lord F. Conyngham, Colonel McKenzie, and Captains Tully and Despard. The silver challenge cup, presented by the corps for volley-firing, ten men to compete per company, the winning team to receive 10s. per man given by the Prince, resulted in a tie between A and E companies; but, according to the Wimbledon regulations, E company's score was the better, and A company received the second prize of ten tankards, presented by Captain Roberts. The musketry instructors' prizes were won by Sergeants Crowle and Cox. The rest of the day was devoted to the company competitions.

Last Saturday evening the 1st Surrey Artillery Brigade was inspected, at its Brixton head-quarters, by Colonel Wolesley, R.A., the Artillery Inspector of the Home District. The muster of the brigade, which comprises both field and garrison artillery, was very good. Colonel Durnford commanded, assisted by Major Hastie and Captain Sparks, the Adjutant. The men underwent a trying drill; having, in addition to the ordinary drill of an artillery corps, to dismount and mount the Armstrongs supplied to the corps, as well as to perform the same operation to the smooth-bore cumbersome old 32-pounder. The usual parade as an infantry regiment was made, and the corps was drilled with small-arms. The inspection appeared to have been in every way satisfactory.

Mr. Bulwer, Q.C., senior Major in the Inns of Court, has been appointed Lieutenant-Colonel.

At the meeting of the Essex Rifle Association, last week, the challenge shield, the county trophy, was won by the administrative battalion. Lieutenant Holmes, of the 12th Essex, won the Ladies' Cup and the National Rifle Association Medal for the highest aggregate score throughout the meeting.

The 10th Kent (Royal Arsenal) Artillery assembled, last Saturday, to compete for prizes in repository drill in the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich. The competition was carried out on the lawn fronting the Mechanics' Institute. Time was taken for dismounting 64-pounders by parbuckle, mounting by gyn, dismounting and mounting 40-pounder Armstrong guns by the trail. The winning detachments, some of whom were very sharp at their work, were highly complimented by the officers present. Sergeant Folkes, Sergeant Savin, and Sergeant-Major Innes took the other prizes. They were presented at the close of the contest by the Colonel commanding.

The Gazzetta d'Italia of Aug. 10 states that at Donaz, a village situated on the road leading from Ivrea to Aosta, a child ten years old went to gather plants in the mountains. The servant who had charge of him having left him alone for a few minutes, an eagle swooped down and carried off the child. Some soldiers from the neighbouring fort of Bardone went in search, and found the body of the child fearfully mutilated. The servant was so affected by the misfortune that she was afraid to return to her master's house, and remained for two days concealed in a crevice of the rocks. When discovered she was nearly dead with hunger.

Several fatal accidents have occurred during the squally weather which has lately visited the British Isles. Last Saturday Mr. and Mrs. Cooper, of Windermere, Miss Baidon, a page, and a boatman, were drowned on Lake Windermere. They were all on board a small yacht, watching the regatta, when the yacht upset, and none were saved. On the same day two ladies named Fell, of London, lost their lives at Ilfracombe. They had got out of their depth in stormy water, and both of them drifted away before they could be reached. Two young men, named Kay and Bowling, were drowned in Southampton Water, on Saturday evening, by the capsizing of a boat. A companion, Mr. Jebbs, who managed to keep on the bottom of the boat, was saved. A racing-gig was being rowed across the loch from Holywood to Green Isle, to take part in a regatta in the latter place on Saturday evening. The sea was rough, and in one of the squalls the gig was upset. Three of the crew managed to get on to the craft, which was floating bottom upwards, and from this perilous position they were rescued, but the other two were drowned. One of them was son of the Rev. Henry Henderson, Presbyterian minister of Holywood, and the other's name was Withers.

THE TABARD INN, SOUTHWARK.

This ancient hostelry, though not the veritable tavern in which Chaucer's Canterbury Pilgrims were assembled 500 years ago, stands doubtless on the site of that tavern, which had been devoted to the entertainment of pilgrims from a very early date. The first foundation of this inn appears to be due to the Abbot of Hyde, who, at a time when the Bishops of Winchester had their palace near St. Saviour's Church, naturally fixed their town residence close by. Stowe, the historian of ancient London, tells us that in the Middle Ages the High-street of Southwark had "many fair inns for the receipt of travellers," and he enumerates "The Tabard" among their signs. The land on which the old "Tabard" stood was purchased by the Abbot of Hyde in A.D. 1307, and he built on it not only an hotel for himself and his brethren, but also an inn for the accommodation of the numerous pilgrims resorting to the shrine of "St. Thomas of Canterbury" from the south and west of England, just at the point where the roads from Sussex, Surrey, and Hampshire met that which was known as the "Pilgrim's Way." There can be no doubt that by the end of the fourteenth century the Tabard was already one of the inns most frequented by "Canterbury pilgrims," or else Chaucer would scarcely have introduced it to us in that character. Stowe mentions the old "Tabard" as still standing in A.D. 1598, and four years later we are told by one of Chaucer's editors that the inn and the abbot's house adjoining had been newly repaired and enlarged "for the receipt of many guests." Unfortunately, however, in 1676 the borough was the scene of a terrible conflagration, second only in its extent to that which had desolated the City proper ten years before. Some 600 houses had to be destroyed in order to arrest the progress of the flames, and as the Tabard stood nearly in the centre of this area, and was mostly built of wood, there can be little doubt that the inn actually visited by Chaucer's pilgrims perished. It was, however, almost immediately rebuilt, and as nearly as possible on the same spot; and although, through the ignorance of the landlord or tenant, or both, it was for a time called, not the "Tabarde," but the "Talbot," there can be no doubt that the present inn, whose quaint old timber galleries and not less quaint old chambers are now destined to come to the hammer, is substantially the same inn and hostelry as that commemorated by our great early poet. In Urry's edition of Chaucer, published in 1721, there is a view of the "Tabarde," or "Talbot," as it then stood, the yard apparently opening upon the street; and it is constantly mentioned in books of anecdote and biography in the last century as a place where carriers' waggons from the south of England put up, and to which visitors to London from the then busy southern counties resorted in great numbers. It may be added, in explanation of the sign itself, that, in the language of Stowe, a "tabard" is "a sort of jacket or sleeveless coat, whole before, but open on both sides, with a square collar, winged at the shoulders; a stately garment of old time, commonly worn of noblemen and others, both at home and abroad in the wars, with their arms embroidered or otherwise depict. . . . But now (he adds) these 'tabards' are worn only by the heralds, and be called their coats of arms in service." Our Oxford readers will remember that the name of this dress is, or was till very recently, kept in remembrance by the "Taberdars," as certain scholars or exhibitioners are termed at Queen's College in that University.

THE OLD TABARD INN, SOUTHWARK.

MR. WINTERHALTER.

This distinguished portrait-painter, whose death was lately recorded, had long been esteemed by an aristocratic class of patrons of his profession in our own country; but he was a native of Germany. Franz Xavier Winterhalter was born at Baden in 1805, and came to England about thirty years ago. He had already, as a Court portrait-painter, won some reputation. His first and most profitable success here was in delineating a Royal Family group of Queen Victoria, the Prince Consort, and their children, which was, by the Queen's special command, exhibited to the public in the state apartments at Buckingham Palace; an engraving of it was afterwards produced for sale, and became extremely popular. Many other portraits of Royal and Imperial personages, and of the nobility, English or foreign, have been painted by Winterhalter; they were characterised by an agreeable elegance and refinement which commended his work to fashionable sitters. The only picture of an ideal subject by him that gained much applause was one of "Florida and her Companions Bathing in the Tagus," which was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1852, and is now in the Queen's collection. The portrait of Mr. Winterhalter is from a photograph by Mr. Caldesi.

ASSYRIAN EXPLORATIONS.

The Telegraph announces that the important objects discovered by Mr. George Smith in Assyria have arrived in London. The £250 worth of purchased monuments will be presented to the British Museum.

Mr. Smith has furnished some further particulars respecting his excavations, and now describes a curious mythological tablet relating to the goddess Ishtar, daughter of Anu, who bears a very doubtful character, according to the sixth tablet of the Izdubar series. Originally married to a deity called the Son of Life, she quarrels with her husband, strikes him, and drives him away, after which she engages in a series of discreditable amours. She brings misfortune on everyone who has to do with her. A ruler who is at one time the object of her passion she changes into an animal, and he is hunted and torn in pieces by his own dogs. She afterwards loves Isallun, the husbandman of her father, and later on transforms him in the same manner. She then fixes on Izdubar, the man of strong mind and iron hand, who was then welding together the Babylonian empire. Perhaps her charms were now a little faded, or perhaps Izdubar took example by the misfortunes of his predecessors; anyway, he declines to have anything to do with the goddess. Ishtar or Venus, enraged at this slight to her powers or charms, flies up to heaven to tell her father and mother. Ishtar, daughter of Sin, to whom the mythological tablet relates, resembles the daughter of Anu in the violence of her temper, and the husband of the latter, the Son of Life, is mentioned in connection with the daughter of Sin, so that it is possible that the same goddess is intended, in spite of the different paternity.

STREETS RE-NAMED.

The Metropolitan Board of Works has decided upon the following alterations in the names of streets and the re-numbering of houses within the area of the metropolis:—Coburg-street to be incorporated with Neptune-street, Rotherhithe; York-street, Albion-street, Rotherhithe, to be called Ainstey-street, and the houses to be re-numbered; Wilton-street, Westminster, to be incorporated with Vincent-street, under the latter name; the name Rilton-mews to be applied to a new street to lead out of Chapel-place, Kensington; New-street, Neptune-street, Rotherhithe, to be re-named Ridsdon-street; the name of Kennington Park-gardens to be applied to a new street to lead out of Royal-road, Kennington Park; Lower York-street, Rotherhithe, to be re-named Elgar-street; Old Fish-street-hill and Lambeth-hill will be incorporated under the latter name; William-street, Stoke Newington, will be re-named Gillett-street; the house now known as 17, Upper Berkeley-street, will not at present be altered to 42, Great Cumberland-place; Russell-street, Rotherhithe, to be re-named Derrick-street; Maggie-alley, Shoreditch, to be incorporated with Fleur-de-Lis-street, under the latter name; Orchard-street, Stoke Newington, to be re-named Bradbury-street; Barton-street, Westminster, will not be incorporated with Cowley-street; the premises of Messrs. Bentley and Bradley, now improperly numbered and described as 59A, Great Tower-street, will be re-numbered and known as 1, Red-cross-square; Surrey-place, Rotherhithe, to be called Fauston-place, and the houses re-numbered; Montague House, situated between Nos. 21 and 23, Portman-square, will be re-numbered 22, Portman-square; Elland-street, Peckham-rye, to be called Elland-road. The board has decided, in reply to a proposal to commemorate the visit of the Queen to Victoria Park by calling Agnes-terrace Victoria-gate, that so soon as the proposed gate is erected at the entrance of the park the board will be prepared to consider the point. The houses in Albion-street, Clarence-street, Church-street, Cow-lane, and Swan-lane, Rotherhithe, are to be re-numbered. The houses in Belgrave-road, Upper Holloway, will not at present be re-numbered. Three new houses in Earl's-court, Kensington, known as Cuthbert-terrace, are to be incorporated with Earl's-court-road, and numbered in continuation of existing numbers. The subsidiary names in the western portion of King's-road, Chelsea, to be abolished, and the houses numbered in continuation of the regular numbers in the road.

ARCHERY GATHERINGS IN THE WEST.

The four leading toxophilite societies of Dorset recently held their opening meetings of the season.

The Blackmore Vale Club met on Tuesday last, on the ground of King's School, Sherborne, kindly lent for the occasion by the Head Master of the school, the Rev. H. D. Harper. The weather was unsettled, and the attendance unusually small. After the competition the prizes were awarded in the grand marquee by the Lady Paramount of the meeting, Mrs. Carr Glyn. Mrs. H. Medycott made the gross score at 60 yards, and Miss Fox the gross score at 50 yards; Miss Dendy won the wooden spoon, and the Lady Paramount's prize for the greatest number of golds during the day went to Miss Fox, who made six golds. In the gentlemen's department Mr. J. B. Woodman won the prize for the gross score at 60 yards. The Rev. H. H. Wood made the greatest number of hits at that distance. The Rev. H. Medycott took the prize for the gross score at eighty yards, the greatest number of hits at that distance being made by the Rev. C. Phelps. The gross score for the day was made by Mr. Woodman, who took the club badge. He was also awarded the vice-president's prize for the highest scores of reds and blues during the day. In the evening a dance was held at the Digby Hotel. The Rev. W. Roxby, who had held the office of honorary secretary since 1869, resigned, and Mr. Jocelyn Ffooks was appointed his successor.

The Stour vale archers met at Blandford, amongst those present being Lord and Lady Eldon, Sir William and Lady Marriott, Mr. Nepean, Mrs. Ker Seymour, and Major-General and the Misses Maclean. The prizes were gained thus:—Ladies: Highest score, Mrs. Coventry, 287; greatest number of hits, Mrs. H. Medycott, 60; best gold, Miss Fox; visitors' prize, Miss Phelps, 238. Gentlemen: Highest score, Mr. C. Grant-Dalton, 157; greatest number of hits, Mr. H. Medycott, 37; best gold, Mr. Grant-Dalton. For the visitors' prize there was no competition.

At the meeting of the Weymouth and Wyke Regis Club there were only twenty competitors, the prizes being distributed by the secretary, the Rev. J. B. Eddison, who himself made 233, with which he won the prize for the gross score, Dr. Kilroy taking that for gross hits with 18. Miss Day, with 210, took the gross score prize in the ladies' department; Miss Eddison, with 55, having the greatest number of hits.

The Anglesea Archers held their first bow meeting at Stalbridge Park, the prizes being awarded thus:—Ladies—Gross score, Mrs. Coventry, 174; greatest number of hits, Mrs. H. Medycott, 37; best gold, Miss Carré; wooden spoon, Miss E. Parke. Gentlemen—Gross score, Mr. Wood, 179; hits, Mr. Phelps, who at first tied with Mr. H. Medycott; best gold, Mr. E. W. Fox; wooden spoon; Mr. H. Dodington, who tied with Mr. Grant-Dalton; visitors' prize, Mr. Nantes, 125.

C A C A O I N E.

Cacaoine is a preparation of Cacao without sugar or any admixture whatever.
Cacaoine is very acceptable as a light refreshing drink for use in the later hours of the day. With homoeopathic it takes the place of tea, having very little consistence—not more than that of coffee. Cacaoine, to those who have been in the habit of using Cacao Nibs, has proved a great boon, as it does away with all the trouble attending the preparation of nibs—Cacaoine itself being nothing more than very choice nibs that have been submitted to a very ingenious patented process, by which the principal part of the oil has been removed. This scientific removal of the oil renders the beverage preparable from Cacaoine incomparably more delicate and attractive than any that the crude nibs afford, besides that Cacaoine requires but to be boiled for a few minutes to be ready for the table. Sample packets, 6d., and 1 lb., 2 lb., and 5 lb. tins, labelled JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMOEOPATHIC CHEMISTS, 48, Threadneedle-street, and 170, Piccadilly. Works for Dietetic Preparations, Euston-road, London.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case, Five Octaves, and Two Foot-Boards. The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured.

The instruments now offered to the public will be found devoid of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker reed, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and organ-like. Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows. The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect than to the small.

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

PULVERMACHER'S PATENT GALVANIC CHAIR, BATTERY, &c.

RECENTLY IMPROVED. Approved by the Academy of Sciences at Paris and other Medical authorities in England and abroad. This Self-Applicable Physical Curative is of an efficacy vastly superior to all other external remedies. Owing to the physiological, physical, and chemical effects of the Electricity they gently and permanently impart into the system, these appliances exercise an internal action, promoting the digestion, circulation, and nutrition, thereby assisting Nature in her efforts to restore the normal balance of health and vigour in a debilitated constitution. Hence the remarkable cures they daily effect in cases of—Rheumatism, Head & Tooth Ache, Epilepsy, General and Local Indigestion, Liver Complaint, D. bilis, Paralysis, Functional Disorders, Nervous Debility, &c. &c. after all other remedies have failed, and thus popularizing Electricity in accordance with the authentic economies in the medical and scientific press. Recent improvements in these appliances by the Inventor render their application as efficacious, as formerly comfortable and effective, and thus renounce former misconceptions. Medical and scientific extracts and a selection of the daily increasing number of Testimonials together with Price-List are enclosed in pamphlet, "Nature's Chief Restorer of Impaired Vital Energy," sent post-free on application to the sole Inventor and Licensor.

Illustrated prospectus free by post.—Hopkins, Manufacturer of Water Cushions and Water Cushions to the Queen, 7, 11, 13, 15, 17, 19, 21, 23, 25, 27, 29, 31, 33, 35, 37, 39, 41, 43, 45, 47, 49, 51, 53, 55, 57, 59, 61, 63, 65, 67, 69, 71, 73, 75, 77, 79, 81, 83, 85, 87, 89, 91, 93, 95, 97, 99, 101, 103, 105, 107, 109, 111, 113, 115, 117, 119, 121, 123, 125, 127, 129, 131, 133, 135, 137, 139, 141, 143, 145, 147, 149, 151, 153, 155, 157, 159, 161, 163, 165, 167, 169, 171, 173, 175, 177, 179, 181, 183, 185, 187, 189, 191, 193, 195, 197, 199, 201, 203, 205, 207, 209, 211, 213, 215, 217, 219, 221, 223, 225, 227, 229, 231, 233, 235, 237, 239, 241, 243, 245, 247, 249, 251, 253, 255, 257, 259, 261, 263, 265, 267, 269, 271, 273, 275, 277, 279, 281, 283, 285, 287, 289, 291, 293, 295, 297, 299, 301, 303, 305, 307, 309, 311, 313, 315, 317, 319, 321, 323, 325, 327, 329, 331, 333, 335, 337, 339, 341, 343, 345, 347, 349, 351, 353, 355, 357, 359, 361, 363, 365, 367, 369, 371, 373, 375, 377, 379, 381, 383, 385, 387, 389, 391, 393, 395, 397, 399, 401, 403, 405, 407, 409, 411, 413, 415, 417, 419, 421, 423, 425, 427, 429, 431, 433, 435, 437, 439, 441, 443, 445, 447, 449, 451, 453, 455, 457, 459, 461, 463, 465, 467, 469, 471, 473, 475, 477, 479, 481, 483, 485, 487, 489, 491, 493, 495, 497, 499, 501, 503, 505, 507, 509, 511, 513, 515, 517, 519, 521, 523, 525, 527, 529, 531, 533, 535, 537, 539, 541, 543, 545, 547, 549, 551, 553, 555, 557, 559, 561, 563, 565, 567, 569, 571, 573, 575, 577, 579, 581, 583, 585, 587, 589, 591, 593, 595, 597, 599, 601, 603, 605, 607, 609, 611, 613, 615, 617, 619, 621, 623, 625, 627, 629, 631, 633, 635, 637, 639, 641, 643, 645, 647, 649, 651, 653, 655, 657, 659, 661, 663, 665, 667, 669, 671, 673, 675, 677, 679, 681, 683, 685, 687, 689, 691, 693, 695, 697, 699, 701, 703, 705, 707, 709, 711, 713, 715, 717, 719, 721, 723, 725, 727, 729, 731, 733, 735, 737, 739, 741, 743, 745, 747, 749, 751, 753, 755, 757, 759, 761, 763, 765, 767, 769, 771, 773, 775, 777, 779, 781, 783, 785, 787, 789, 791, 793, 795, 797, 799, 801, 803, 805, 807, 809, 811, 813, 815, 817, 819, 821, 823, 825, 827, 829, 831, 833, 835, 837, 839, 841, 843, 845, 847, 849, 851, 853, 855, 857, 859, 861, 863, 865, 867, 869, 871, 873, 875, 877, 879, 881, 883, 885, 887, 889, 891, 893, 895, 897, 899, 901, 903, 905, 907, 909, 911, 913, 915, 917, 919, 921, 923, 925, 927, 929, 931, 933, 935, 937, 939, 941, 943, 945, 947, 949, 951, 953, 955, 957, 959, 961, 963, 965, 967, 969, 971, 973, 975, 977, 979, 981, 983, 985, 987, 989, 991, 993, 995, 997, 999, 1001, 1003, 1005, 1007, 1009, 1011, 1013, 1015, 1017, 1019, 1021, 1023, 1025, 1027, 1029, 1031, 1033, 1035, 1037, 1039, 1041, 1043, 1045, 1047, 1049, 1051, 1053, 1055, 1057, 1059, 1061, 1063, 1065, 1067, 1069, 1071, 1073, 1075, 1077, 1079, 1081, 1

BY THE WAY.

The name of the Shah is almost forgotten in England, but notices of his movements in the Continent occasionally excite a languid interest in the minds of English readers, and remind us of the almost ludicrous curiosity we were all displaying a few weeks ago. Our French friends were good enough to see only the comic aspect of his reception here, but it now turns out that it was rather largely sought in France to turn his visit to Paris to good account. We read in the Daily News that the Persian Ambassador in the French capital found, on his return to his post, upwards of seven hundred letters from French persons asking for places in the Persian administration in the public works. Many of them wished to be tax-collectors, and flattered themselves that they should make good hands at screwing payments out of the Shah's unwilling subjects. Among the applicants were many ladies, and one, a doctor's wife, was especially desirous to be engaged to attend in the harem on interesting occasions. One strong-minded woman followed the Shah from place to place until her indomitable pertinacity obtained her an interview, when she explained that she had three sons of extraordinary merit, and that she wished the Shah to take them to Persia and open careers for them. Nor do the French stop at solicitation while the Shah is in Europe. So many people are going out to Persia, in order to claim his Majesty's patronage there, that the Ambassador has written to the journals warning everybody that such attempts will be quite useless, and that no aid will be given to enable travellers to return. Finally, he apprises all applicants that their letters have been destroyed. We may just as well note all this, not in any non-cosmopolitan spirit, but because the French laughed at us a good deal for showing so much hospitality to a visitor who, at all events, had a larger interest for us than a possible giver away of good things to mendicants.

The abandonment of the defence by "the defendant's" solicitor was the Tichborne incident of Monday. But we shall notice only a lighter matter, which has nothing to do with the trial, and which may therefore legitimately be referred to. Among the scores of pleasing and instructive discussions which have arisen between Bench and Bar during the case, and which may hereafter advantageously be detached from it and published under the title of Obiter, has been a dialogue upon memory in woman. Dr. Kenealy alleged that the features of a man, and such like things, do not fix themselves so much on the minds of men as on those of women. The Lord Chief Justice could not say that such was the result of his experience. Dr. Kenealy insisted that women were best at recollecting mere externals. If a lady went to a ball she would describe every dress there. "Yes," said the Lord Chief Justice, "but there she is on her own ground." "If she goes to a dinner party," continued the advocate, "she will describe the china, the silver, and such like things." "Because," replied the Lord Chief Justice, ever ready with a good word for the gentler sex, "those are matters connected with domestic economy," and therefore, by inference, things most proper for woman's attention. Dr. Kenealy was silenced, but it was not his business to be convinced. We cannot understand how anybody but the jury and the defendant can consider this trial a bore. Never a week, seldom a day, passes without what Artemus Ward calls an "eppy sode" of social interest. Here, for instance, is thrown out a subject which will afford very agreeable seaside debate, perhaps pleasant incrimination. Families will find harmless yet animated diversion in bringing Sir Alexander Cockburn's theory and Dr. Kenealy's into comparison, with anecdotes and illustrations flavoured by mild malice. And anybody who gives us anything to talk about during the season of silliness deserves the thanks of wisdom.

It is difficult to arrive at the exact facts of an Irish grievance, but Scotch grievances are usually stated with accuracy as well as acerbity. It appears, however, that a paragraph in regard to what the generous Scottish millionaire, Mr. Baird, has done in the blocking out way was incorrect. It is not "Old Alloway Kirk" that has been built out from the Ayr approach, but the Burns Monument itself, that on the Banks of Doon. We are glad to hear that the offence is much slighter than we had supposed. To spoil the view of a fine old kirk is a crime, but to hide a modern monument is, generally speaking, the reverse of a crime, and in this case the merits of the monument are not so great as to throw into the shade the munificence of the church-exterminator. Whether consideration for the singular reverence in which a moral and religious nation holds a bard whose name is not exactly associated with morality and religion might not have reasonably induced Mr. Baird to choose another site for his church is a question to which we have small doubt that he can, if so minded, give an answer satisfactory to himself.

A lawsuit by a husband against his wife—the one an ex-King and the other an ex-Queen—is a new thing. We do not know that, since Theodore, King of Corsica, put his island into his bankruptcy schedule, Themis has had to deal with such august personages in regard to mere money questions. Don Francisco d'Assiz, husband of the ex-Queen of Spain, calls on a French law court to regulate Queen Isabella's expenditure. He complains, quite in the tone of an ordinary husband, that his wife is dreadfully extravagant and has thrown away half her income in follies and political freaks, and that unless she is restrained there will be nothing to pay the annuities to himself and the five children. His case is doubtless hard, and possibly all the harder that he can get no hearing until November, which interval would afford her Majesty (were she not so devout a Catholic as to be incapable of a bad action) an opportunity of avenging herself on conjugal impertinence by flinging away another million of francs or so on fireworks and priests, or in promoting the faction fights in Spain.

"Inauguration." The word is confessedly lumbering, but where is the substitute, in the case of the Holyhead breakwater? "Opening" the ceremony certainly is not, for the works are an extension of what has been open for years. There is no clerical ceremony, like "consecration." A Roman, performing the rite, might have said "ungo," but nothing of the sort was done by the Prince of Wales, and even if there had been any such process, we could hardly have called it "unction." We fail to see an equivalent for the long word. By-the-way, exactly one hundred years ago a Welsh mountain, not so very far from that which has been removed, not by faith, but by gunpowder, and cast into the sea, excited a good deal of interest in the Principality. This was Moelfamma (near Holywell, in Flintshire), which in 1773 cast out much combustible matter, and this occurred after a fall of snow so heavy as to bury cottages and cattle, and to cause many lives to be lost. There were earthquakes in that year in Jersey and Guernsey, and at Poole, in Dorsetshire; the River Pevor, in Gloucestershire, changed its course; a hurricane did great damage in Oxford; and—the Jesuits were expelled from the Pope's dominions for meddling with political matters, and the order was totally suppressed by bull. It was a sort of annus mirabilis.

Is it possible that, after all, our just indignation with the savage Modocs, and our satisfaction that the Americans are likely to extirpate them, there is a second side to the story, and that what the Modocs have done has been brought about by both provocation and necessity? So says an American writer, Joaquim Miller; and though he is a poet, and not bound "to swear to the truth of a song," he makes his statement in prose, and with apparent truthfulness. If his history be correct, the Modocs have been brutally treated, not, of course, by the American nation, but by roughs and bullies, who began by murdering the Indians wholesale, and thereby establishing a vendetta the issues of which we have lately heard of. The white savages spared neither men, women, nor children, and the brown savages could not be expected to be more humane. Then, as regards their alleged departure from the district within which they had agreed to keep, we are informed that the limit was scanty, and it was physically impossible for them to derive food and pasturage from the locality. They strayed rather than starve. Of course we have no means of verifying this statement; but we ought to add that a well-known English traveller, who is a patient and an impartial observer, appears to be able to confirm it, and it is not impossible that, when the account is finally made up, the unfortunate Modoc Indians may be seen to have undergone the kind of justice which is so exceedingly "rough" as to have a strong family likeness to cruelty.

ARCHÆOLOGISTS AT SHEFFIELD.

The British Archæological Association has this week held its thirtieth annual congress at Sheffield, under the presidency of the Duke of Norfolk, who is lord of the manor there, the ancient Saxon Manor of Hallam, sometimes called Hallamshire. The busy and thriving town of steel-blade manufacturers, now approaching the number of 200,000 inhabitants, has some claims to historic renown. It had once the aspect of a pleasantly-seated borough, amidst boldly striking scenery, where the small river Sheaf, coming down from the high moors or mountains of Derbyshire, joins the Don in company with three other streams, the Porter, the Loxley, and the Rivelin. This abundance of water-power, easily managed by dams, leaps, and tanks, was the means of setting in motion a number of wheels, grindstones, and forge-hammers, to shape the iron of the district into all sorts of edge-tools. But steam has come in aid of streams, and the quantity of coal now used in the Sheffield iron and steel works is more than half a million tons in each year. The air is defiled with blacker and thicker smoke than hangs over any other town; but the Worshipful Company of Cutlers, who got their charter from King James I., care little for the picturesque. This element of local interest, however, is not deficient in the neighbourhood, which has also many features of antiquarian value to show; and there is something worth seeing even in the town, besides the endless production of knives, and saws, and scissors.
